AN APPRECIATION

Shaikh ul-Ḥadīth, Allāmah Sayyid Muḥammad
Yūsuf Bīnori رحمه الله عليه.

بِسْمِ اللَّهِ الرَّحْمَنِ الرَّحِيمِ

الْحَمْدُ لِلَّهِ رَبِّ الْعَالَمِينَ وَالصَّلَاةُ وَالسَّلَامُ عَلَى سَيِّدِنَا مُحَمَّدٍ خَاتَمِ
النَّبِيِّينَ وَعَلَى آلِهِ وَأَصْحَابِهِ أَجْمَعِينَ

In the name of Allah, the Beneficent, the Merciful.
All praise belongs to Allah, Lord of the worlds.
And may blessings and peace be on Sayyidina Muḥammad, the last of the Prophets, and his family and companions- all of them.

Many reliable and worthy books in Arabic on the sciences of the Quran are available. They are composed by our worthy predecessors and later day scholars. However, only the Ulama can benefit from them. Most of these books were written for the earlier people and indeed, satisfied their thirst of knowledge.

When Sir Sayyid Aḥmad Khan published his exegesis of the Quran and other writings in Delhi, he played havoc with Islamic beliefs and presented the new generation with unfounded ideologies, belittling Prophethood and rejecting Miracles, Paradise, Hell, angels, and the devils. He suggested innovative ideas and principles for interpreting the Qur'anic facts. At that time, Allah caused Mawlana Abdul Haq Haqqani Dahlavi, Deobandi to rise. He wrote an excellent exegesis of the Qur'ān entitled fath al-Mannān and a superb Muqaddamah (introduction) al-Bayan fī Ulloom al-Qur'ān. In the first volume of the exegesis, he included a summory of the muqaddamah. In this way, he fulfilled the need of his times.

However, keeping the present day trends in mind, a fresh approach was needed to present to our new generation the concepts and facts of the Qur'ān. The mischief of the orientalists had to be offset by telling our new generation about wahy, descent of the Qur'ān the various recitals and its uniqueness. If readers get an insight of these subjects they would be able to ward off doubts and misgivings created in their minds by the orientalists and western minded Muslims.

Al-Hamdulillah, this lacuna has been very ably filled by my respected brother, Mawlana Muḥammad Taqī Usmāni, the worthy son of Mawlana Muḥammad Shafī رحمه الله عليه. he wrote it down as an exhaustive Muqaddamah to the Ma'arif-ul-Qur'ān and did a great religious service, and a favour to the Ummah. May Allah enhance him in knowledge, give him more writing power and ability and enable him to be of further service to religion.

I have seen some parts of this work thoroughly and, some others, at random. Praise be to Allah, I am very happy at it and my heart gives out a prayer.

وَقَفَّنا لِلّٰهِ وَاِيَّاهُ لِخِدْمَةِ دِيْنِهِ اِيْتِغَاءً لِّوَجْهِهِ الْكَرِيْمِ، وَصَلَّى اللّٰهُ عَلٰى
سَيِّدِنَا مُحَمَّدٍ سَيِّدِ الْعَلَمِيْنَ وَخَاتَمِ النَّبِيِّنَ وَعَلٰى اٰلِهِ وَاصْحَابِهِ
وَعَلَمَآءِ اُمَّتِهِ اَجْمَعِيْنَ

My Allah choose us and him for service to His religion purely to earn His pleasure. And may blessings of Allah be on Sayyidina Muḥammad, the Chief to the worlds, seal of Prophet, and on his family, his companions and the scholars of the ummah—all of them!

Publisher's Submission

The English translation of Justice Mufti Moḥammad Taqi Usmani's well known work Uloom al-Quran is in your hands. Maulana Mufti Muḥammad Shafi رَحْمَةُ اللَّهِ عَلَيْهِ and Maulana Muḥammad Yousuf Binnori رَحْمَةُ اللَّهِ عَلَيْهِ have spoken about the book and its author in their introducing remarks.

I had commissioned the English translation of the book in 1992 and finally the book is published having gone through various steps in the nine years. We bow down our heads in prostration before Allah in gratitude for having enabled us to achieve this task. It is a work, first of all, on the science of a great Book that the Qur'an is, and secondly, a scholar of the standing of Justice Mufti Muḥammad Taqi Usmani, my respected uncle, has written it. May Allah grant him health, peace and security.

We have tried to reflect the high standard of the book in its translation too. We hope that we have been successful in our effort and we are to blame for any short coming in the result. I request the readers to point out whatever mistake they detect in the translation so that amendments can be made in the next edition. I also request readers to remember me, my father and my family members in their prayers. May Allah reward them. And may He reward every one associated with this work Aameen!

FOREWORD

(رحمة الله عليه Mufti Muḥammad Shafī)

Through his grace and mercy, Allah favoured and enabled me to be of service to the Qur'an by writing the Ma'arif ul- Qur'an. And, it gives me pleasure to learn that Muslims do derive benefit from it. When the first volume was reviewed and revised, I wished that a thesis should be included as an introduction to the sciences of Qur'ān but illness coupled with weakness prevented me from undertaking the task and I entrusted the task to my dear son, Muḥammad Taqī. He wrote down a brief introduction of the subject for the Ma'arif ul Qur'an. Simultaneously, however, he took up writing on the subject exhaustively which is now before us as Uloom ul-Qur'ān (An approach to the Quranic Sciences)

This is a vast knowledge. Many voluminous books are written on the subject in Arabic, and quite a number have been published in Urdu, too. There was, nevertheless, scope for a book that would deal with related discourses in detail and ward off the misgivings created by the orientalist and atheists. It was also necessary to bring to light the principles of Tafseer (exegesis) especially because, recently, many people have begun to compose commentaries on the Qur'an even though they are ill-equipped for the task and do not possess the requisite knowledge. These people should be warned of the dangers of their rash undertakings which might mislead other people.

We thank Allah that this book has tackled the problem better than I had expected. And, I am confident that if it is read with a quest for truth and a fair outlook, Insha Allah it will provide insight into the science of exegesis and remove doubts that are created in the mind by misleading suggestions of the orientalist and false fables common among the laymen.

The truth is that I had entrusted this task to my son because of my illness and weakness on the understanding that what a father leaves incomplete, the son completes it. But, when the book was before me and, although I could not read it myself because of poor eyesight, my happiness knew no bounds when passages were read to me and I thank Allah deeply for this. If I had chosen to write on the subject when I was healthy, I could not have written as well as my son has done. There are two reasons for that. The first is that I could never have gone through the large number of books that son has consulted for the writing of the present book. Only a cursory glance at the numerous references to sources in the footnotes with their chapters and page numbers will disclose the amount of research he has undertaken.

The second reason is that my lack of knowledge of English kept me unaware of the poison spread by the orientalisists against the teachings of Qur'an. My son who is a graduate with distinction in M.A.(English) and LLB could detect their mischief and give a befitting answer.

I pray to Allah from the core of my heart that He keep this light of my eyes safe, give him a long life and protect him from all mischief and trial! May He enable him to serve religion with greater enthusiasm and grant him truthfulness, sincerity and Your pleasure! May He grant approval to this work and make it a means of salvation for him and for me and let Muslims benefit from it to a great extent!

وَعَلَى اللَّهِ الْمُسْتَعَانُ وَعَلَيْهِ التُّكْلَانُ

And Allah is the one who helps and on Him is reliance placed.

FOREWORD

by

Justice Maulanā Muḥammad Taqī Usmānī

Ma'āriful-Qur'ān is the name of a detailed Urdu commentary of the Holy Qur'ān written by my father Maulanā Mufti Muḥammad Shafī' (رحمة الله عليه). He was one of the eminent scholars who served as a professor and as a grand Mufti of Darul-Uloom Deoband, the well-known university of the Islamic Sciences in the sub-continent of India. In 1943, he resigned from Darul-Uloom, due to his active involvement in the Pakistan movement, and when Pakistan came into existence, he migrated to Karachi where he devoted his life for this new homeland of the Muslims and served the country in different capacities. He also established Darul-Uloom Karachi, an outstanding institute of Islamic Sciences on the pattern of Darul-Uloom Deoband, which is regarded today as the biggest private institute of higher Islamic education in Pakistan.

He was a prolific writer who left behind him about one hundred books on different Islamic and literary subjects. Ma'āriful-Qur'ān was the last great work he accomplished four years before his demise.

The origin of Ma'āriful-Qur'ān refers back to the third of Shawwal 1373 A.H. (corresponding to the 2nd of July 1954) when the author was invited to give weekly lectures on the Radio Pakistan to explain selected verses of the Holy Qur'ān to the general audience. This invitation was accepted by the author on the condition that he would not accept any remuneration for this service and that his lectures would be broadcast without any interference by the editing authorities. The permanent title of this weekly programme was "Ma'āriful-Qur'ān" (The Wisdom of the Holy Qur'ān) and it was broadcast every Friday morning on the network of Radio Pakistan.

This series of lectures continued for ten years upto the month of June 1964 whereby the new authorities stopped the programme for reasons best known to them. This series of lectures contained a detailed commentary on selected verses from the beginning of the Holy Qur'ān upto the Sūrah Ibrāhīm (Sūrah no. 14).

This weekly programme of Radio Pakistan was warmly welcomed by the Muslims throughout the globe and used to be listened to by thousands of Muslims, not only in Pakistan and India but also in Western and African countries.

After the programme was discontinued, there was a flood of requests from all over the world to transfer this series in a book-form and to complete the remaining part of the Holy Qur'ān in the shape of a regular commentary.

These requests persuaded the esteemed author to revise these lectures and to add those verses which were not included in the original lectures. He started this project in 1383 A.H. (1964) and completed the commentary of Surah al-Fatihah in its revised form and started the revision of Surah al-Baqarah. However, due to his numerous involvements he had to discontinue this task, and it remained unattended during the next five years.

In Shawwal 1388 (1969) the esteemed author suffered from a number of diseases which made him restricted to his bed. It was during this ailment that he restarted this work while on bed and completed Sūrah al-Baqarah in the same condition. Since then he devoted himself to the "Ma'āriful-Qur'ān". Despite a large number of obstacles in his way, not only from the political atmosphere of the country and the difficult responsibilities he had on his shoulders in different capacities, but also from his health and physical condition, he never surrendered to any of them and continued his work with a miraculous speed until he accomplished the work in eight volumes (comprising of about seven thousand pages) within five years only.

After appearing in a regular book-form, Ma'āriful-Qur'ān was highly appreciated and widely admired by the Urdu-knowing Muslims throughout the world. Thousands of copies of the book are still circulated every year, and the demand for the book is so increasing that it has always been a problem for its publisher to satisfy the demand to its optimum.

A Few Words about the present English

Translation of Ma'āriful-Qur'ān

Let me say a few words about the present English translation of the Ma'āriful-Qur'ān.

Although a large number of English translations of the Holy Qur'ān is available in the market, yet no comprehensive commentary of the Holy Qur'ān has still appeared in the English language. Some brief footnotes found with some English translations cannot fulfil the need of a detailed commentary. Besides, they are generally written by the people who did not specialize themselves in the Qur'ānic sciences, and their explanatory notes do not often reflect the authentic interpretation of the Holy Qur'ān. Some such notes are based on an arbitrary interpretation having no foundation in the recognized principles of the exegesis of the Holy Qur'ān, and are thus misleading for a common reader.

On the other hand, during the last few decades, the Muslim population has increased among the English speaking countries in enormous numbers. These people and their new generations need a detailed commentary of the Holy Qur'ān which may explain to them the correct message of the last divine book with all the relevant material in an authentic manner which conforms to the recognized principles of tafsīr (the exegesis of the Holy Qur'ān).

Since Ma'āriful-Qur'ān was the latest book written on these lines and was proved to be beneficial for a layman as well as for a scholar, it was advised by different circles that its English translation may fulfill the need.

It made me look for a person who might undertake the task, not only with his professional competence, but also with his commitment to serve the Holy Qur'ān.

Fortunately, I succeeded in persuading Prof. Muḥammad Ḥasan Askarī, the well-known scholar of English literature and criticism, to undertake the translation. In the beginning he was reluctant due to his strong sense of responsibility in the religious matters, but when I assured him of my humble assistance throughout his endeavor, he not only agreed to the proposal, but started the work with remarkable devotion. Despite my repeated requests, he did never accept any honorarium or a remuneration for his service. He was a chain-smoker. But he never smoked during his work on Ma'arif-ul-Qur'an, which sometimes lasted for hours.

In this manner he completed the translation of about 400 pages of the original Urdu book and 156 verses of the Sūrah al-Baqarah, but unfortunately, his sudden demise discontinued this noble effort. Strangely enough, the last portion he translated was the commentary of the famous verse:

وبشر الصابرين ٥ الذين اذا اصابهم مصيبة قالوا انا لله وانا اليه راجعون ٥

And surely, We will test you with a bit of fear and hunger and loss in wealth and lives and fruits. And give good tidings to the patient who, when they suffer a calamity, say, 'We certainly belong to Allah and to Him we are bound to return'.

Prof. Askari passed away in 1977, and due to my overwhelming occupations during the next 12 years, I could not find out a suitable person to substitute him. It was in 1989, that Prof. Muhammad Shamim offered his services to resume the translation from where Prof. Askari had left it. I found in him the same sincerity, commitment and devotion I had experienced in the late Professor. Moreover, he had decided to devote the rest of his life to the service of the Holy Qur'an without any financial benefit. Here again I tried my best to persuade him to accept some kind of honorarium, but it was in vain. He started his work from the Verse 158 of Surah al-Baqarah and has now completed the translation of the first two volumes of the original Ma'arif-ul-Qur'an and is working on the third volume.

Both Prof. Muhammad Hasan Askari and Prof. Muhammad Shamim have insisted that their translations must be revised by me from the religious point of view. For this purpose, I have gone through the typescript of the translations of both of them and suggested some amendments where it was necessary.

The translation of Prof. Askari had been started at a time when the esteemed author of Ma'arif-ul-Qur'an was still alive. We were fortunate to receive some guide-lines from the author himself. He had advised the translators not to be too literal in translation to sacrifice the natural flow of the text. Moreover, he had emphasized that while rendering his book into English, the requirements of English readership must be kept in mind. Some discussions may be dispensed with. Similarly, many paragraphs may be condensed in the English version in order to avoid repetition.

The esteemed author had authorised me for suitable decisions in these matters. Both the learned translators, despite their earnest effort to reflect the original text as accurately as possible, have followed, in consultation with me, the said advices of the author himself. However they have never tried to sacrifice the original concept of the text for the beauty of language alone. Particularly, in the juristic discussions of the book, they have been very strict in the translation, lest some change in the style should creep in and distort the accurate connotation of the Islamic injunctions. In such places, the reader may feel some difficulty. However, a more concentrate reading can easily remove it.

Translation of the Holy Qur'ān

The original Urdu Ma'āriful-Qur'ān had not given a new translation of the Holy Qur'ān itself. Rather, the esteemed author had adopted the Urdu translations of Maulanā Maḥmūdūl-Ḥasan (Shaikhul-Hind) and Maulanā Ashraf Ali Thānavī on which he based his commentary. While rendering the book into English, we had three options about the translation of the Holy Qur'ān:

- (a) To adopt any one of the already available English translations of the Holy Qur'ān, like those of Arberry, Pickthall or Abdullah Yousuf Ali.
- (b) To translate the Urdu translations used in the Ma'āriful-Qur'ān into English.
- (c) To provide a new translation of our own.

After a great deal of consideration and consultation, we elected to work on the third option, i.e. to prepare a new translation of the Holy Qur'ān. The reasons behind this decision were manifold which need not be detailed here. In short, we wanted to prepare a translation which may be closer to the Qur'ānic text and easier to understand. For this purpose, we formed a committee with the following members:

1. Prof. Muḥammad Shameem.
2. Mr. Muḥammad Wali Raazi.
3. This humble writer.

This committee has accomplished the translation of the Holy Qur'ān upto the Sūrah Yūsuf and is still going on with this project.

The committee has all the famous available translations of the Holy text before it, and after a deep study of the relevant material found in the classical Arabic commentaries, lays down the new translation in as simple expressions as possible. While doing so, we have tried our best that the different possible interpretations of the Qur'anic text remain undisturbed, and the new translation accommodates as many of them as practicable. We have tried not to impose on our reader a particular interpretation where several interpretations were equally possible. However, where the translation could not accommodate more than one connotation, we have followed the one adopted by the majority of the classic commentators including Maulanā Ashraf Ali Thānavī on whose translation the Ma'āriful-Qur'ān is based.

Despite all these sincere efforts, one cannot avoid the admission that the exact translation of the Holy Qur'ān is impossible. One cannot convey the glory and the beauty of the divine expression in any other language, let alone the English language which, despite its vast vocabulary, seems to be miserable when it comes to the expression of spiritual concepts. Therefore, even after observing all the precautions at our command, we feel that we were trying to translate a text which is - as Arberry has rightly put it - totally untranslatable.

However, this is another humble effort to convey the basic message of the Holy Qur'ān to a common reader in a simple manner. How far we have succeeded in this effort? Allah knows best.

The Scheme of the Translation

Now, here are some points to be kept in mind while consulting the translation.

1. Although the translators have tried their best to preserve not only the literal sense of the Holy text, but also the order of words and sentences, yet, while translating the idiomatic expressions, it is sometimes felt that the literal translation may distort the actual sense or reduce the emphasis embodied in the Arabic text. At such places effort has been made to render the Quranic sense into a closer English expression.

2. Both in the translation of the Holy Qur'ān and in the commentary, a uniform scheme of transliteration has been adopted. The scheme is summarized in the beginning pages of the book.

3. The names of the prophets have been transliterated according to their Arabic pronunciation, and not according to their biblical form. For example, the biblical Moses has been transliterated as Mūsā عليه السلام, which is the correct Arabic pronunciation. Similarly, instead of biblical Abraham, the Qur'ānic Ibrāhīm عليه السلام and instead of Joseph, the Qur'ānic Yūsuf عليه السلام has been preferred.

However, in the names other than those of prophets, like Pharaoh, their English form has been retained.

4. A permanent feature of the original Urdu Ma'arif-ul-Qur'an is its "Khulasa-e-Tafseer" (Summary). Under every group of verses, the esteemed author has given a brief summary of the meaning of the verses to help understand them in one glimpse. This summary was taken from Bayān-ul-Qur'ān, the famous commentary of Maulanā Ashraf Ali Thānavī رحمه الله عليه. He has set up this summary by adding some explanatory words or sentences within brackets to his Urdu translation. The esteemed author of Ma'arif-ul-Qur'an has reproduced this summary (after simplification in some places) with the heading of Khulasa-e-Tafsir خلاصہ تفسیر before his own commentary to the relevant group of verses.

While translating Ma'arif-ul-Qur'an into English, it was very difficult, rather almost impossible, to give that summary in the same fashion. Therefore, the translators have restricted themselves to the commentary of Ma'arif-ul-Qur'an and have not translated the Khulasa-e-Tafsir خلاصہ تفسیر. However, where they found some additional points in the summary which are not expressly mentioned in the commentary, they have merged those points into the main commentary, so that the English reader may not be deprived of them.

It is only by the grace of Allah Almighty that in this way we could be able to present this first volume of this huge work. The second volume is already under composing, and we hope that Allah سبحانه و تعالی will give us tawfiq to bring the next volumes as soon as possible.

Acknowledgments are due to all those who contributed their efforts, advices and financial support to this work. Those deserving special reference are Prof. Abdul-Wahid Siddiqi, Dr. Zafar Ishaq Ansari, Mr. Abubakr Varachia and Mr. Shu'aib 'Umar (both of South Africa) Dr. Muhammad Ismail (of U.S.A), and Mr. Altaf Barkhurdaria.

My elder brother Mr. Muḥammad Wali Raazi has been associated with the work right from its beginning, and has always been a great source of guidance, support and encouragement. He is a member of the committee set up for the translation of the Holy Qur'ān and his remarkable contribution, not only to the translation of the Holy Qur'ān, but also to the translation of the commentary is unforgettable. He, too, has been contributing his valuable time and effort to this project for years just for the sake of Allah. May Allah approve his contributions with His pleasure and bless him with the best of rewards both here and hereinafter.

As for Prof. Muhammad Shameem, the original translator of Ma'āriful-Qur'ān after the demise of Prof. Muḥammad Hasan 'Askari, all the formal words of acknowledgment seem to be miserably deficient for the valuable service he has rendered to this project. He has not only translated the book with precaution and love, but also devoted his whole life to the Holy Qur'ān and spared no effort to bring this volume into light. Out of his commitment to the cause, he did not restrict himself to the work of a translator, but also undertook the function of an editor and a proof reader and supervised all other minute details of the publishing process. His devotion, sincerity and hardwork is beyond any amount of admiration. May Allah grant him the best reward of His absolute approval for his noble work. Amin.

With these few words I am honoured to present this first volume to the readers. May Allah approve this effort and make it beneficial to the Ummah. 'Amin.

PREFACE

This is an introduction comprising of some basic informations about the Holy Qur'an its revelation, the history of its descention and preservation and similar other subjects. This introduction was written by me on the direction of my father, the esteemed author of Ma'ariful-Qur'an. He wanted to write this introduction himself, but due his many other involvements and his deteriorating health, he could not do so. At this stage he directed me to write on these subject. When I started writing the introduction, it became a lengthy volume itself and it was not proper to include it in the Ma'ariful-Qur'an as an introduction. Therefore, the book was published separately under the title of "Uloom-ul-Qur'an" and I condensed its discussions to the present introduction, which was published in the beginning of the second edition of 'Ma'ariful-Qur'an'.

This introduction is translated into English by Prof. Muhammad Shameem after he accomplished the translation of the first volume of Ma'ariful-Qur'an. My book "Uloom-ul-Qur'an" is now available in English also. Those who like detailed discussions on these subjects may refer to it.

PREFACE

by

Justice Maulānā Muḥammad Tāqī Usmānī

It is a matter of honour and privilege for me to present the second volume of Ma'ariful-Qur'ān. The first volume was welcomed by the readers from all over the world and the stock of first edition came to an end within a very short period. It shows the great interest and enthusiasm of the readers towards an authentic and detailed commentary of the Holy Qur'ān. At the same time there was an increasing demand that the remaining volumes should be published as soon as possible. It was by the grace of Allah that we were able to complete the second and third volumes almost simultaneously and we hope that the third volume will also appear soon after the present one, inshallah.

As I have explained in my introduction to the first volume, the translation of the first volume was a combined effort of Professor Muḥammad Ḥasan Askari and Professor Muḥammad Shamīm. The present volume is exclusively translated by the latter, however, the whole manuscript has been revised and edited by me. I am extremely grateful to Prof. Muḥammad Shamīm who, not only undertook the work with his usual sense of commitment and objectivity but also accepted the amendments suggested by me during my revision. The translation of the Qur'anic texts is a joint effort of three members of the committee formed for the purpose, namely, Prof. Muḥammad Shamīm, Muḥammad Wali Raazi and myself.

I am also grateful to those who wrote letters of appreciation about the first volume or honoured us with their valuable suggestions. All of them were a great source of encouragement for all of us.

Acknowledgments are also due to Mr. Yousuf Noor and Mr. Ishaque Noor whose invaluable support to the project made it easier for us to expedite the work. May Allah bless all of them with His best reward both here and in the Hereafter.

I hope this volume will also be appreciated by the readers. May Allah bless this effort with his approval and make it beneficial for the Ummah.

PREFACE

The 4th Volume of Ma'arif-ul-Qur'an is being presented before the readers by the grace of Allah. The response of the first three volumes received from the readers belonging to different walks of life was so encouraging that the publishers had to produce several editions of these volumes within a short period. The translation of the fourth volume was initially undertaken by Mr. Muhammad Walī Raazī who has been involved in the process of the translation of the text from the very beginning of the project. He accomplished the translation of Sūrah Al-A'raf from verse 94 to verse 199 but after that he was engaged with some other works and could not continue the translation, while Prof. Muḥammad Shameem after completing the translation of the 3rd volume was free to take up the task. Therefore, the translation from verse 200 of Sūrah Al-A'raf upto the end of the 4th volume was accomplished by him. This volume consists of the commentary of five Sūrahs of the Holy Qur'an upto the end of Sūrah Hūd.

It is for the information of the readers that the translation of the 5th volume has also been completed by Prof. Muḥammad Shameem. Its revision is also about to conclude. The 6th volume is being translated by Mr. Muhammad Ishrat Hussain, while the translation of the 7th volume is now in the hands of Prof. Muḥammad Shameem with whose remarkable speed and zeal of work it is expected to be complete very soon, Insha Allah. May Allah bless the translators with the best of rewards both here and in the hereafter, give them strength to accomplish the task entrusted to them according to His pleasure and make it beneficial for the Ummah.

By the grace of Allah Subḥānahu Taʿālā we are now able to present the sixth volume of Maʿariful-Qurʾān. Keeping in view the length of work we had decided to divide it between a number of translators, and this sixth volume was entrusted to my learned brother Mr. Muḥammad Ishrat Ḥussain who has accomplished the task with ability and devotion. This volume is entirely translated by him and after my revision and editing it is now being presented to the readers .

Acknowledgements are due to Maulānā ʿAbdullāh Memon and Qārī ʿAbdur Rashīd who have contributed in connection with Arabic text, and Mr. Rafat Saghir Farooqui who contributed to the proof reading of the final text, and also to Mr. Yūsuf Ghānī who helped me in several respects, particularly in proof reading, preparing the index and in supervising the process of composing.

May Allah bless all these brothers with the best of rewards both here and in the hereafter, and make this work beneficial for the Ummah.

Preface

With the name of Allah, the All-Merciful, the Very-Merciful

By the grace of Allah Almighty, the seventh volume of Ma'āriful-Qur'ān is now in the hands of the readers. But while presenting it to them, I am unable to suppress my sentiments of sorrow and grief on a shocking event that took place during the process of its completion. It was the sad demise of Professor Muḥammad Shamīm, who has been the vital spirit behind this project for about a decade. After completing the translation of the fifth volume, he had resumed his work on this seventh volume, the sixth volume being undertaken by Mr. Ishrat Ḥusain. He left Pakistan for USA on the request of his sons, so that they might look after his medical treatment. In spite of his deteriorating health during his stay in New York, he spared no effort to accomplish this volume. He worked day and night in his fervent zeal to serve the Holy Qur'ān up to his last breath, often ignoring that he was a heart patient. He started from surah Luqman and concluded Sūrah Mu'min on 7th March 2002. Immediately after he started Sūrah Ḥa Mīm As-Sajdah, he encountered a severe heart attack and, within a couple of days, passed away. Innā lillāhī wā innā ilāihī rāji'un. During his illness he used to express his desire to accomplish the work he had in hand, but a few days before his demise, he borrowed the words of the author of Ma'āriful-Qur'ān and said "I submit to Allah's will, because the Holy Qur'ān is not something to be finished, rather one should finish his life in the service of the Holy Qur'ān". Allah Ta'ālā has, perhaps, fulfilled his noble desire, and he consumed his life in carrying on this remarkable service of the Holy Book.

This seventh volume is thus appearing at a time when he is no more with us to see it. May Allah approve his sincere efforts and bless him with eternal rewards in the Hereafter.

The translation from Sūrah Ḥā Mīm As-Sajdah was undertaken by my learned friend Mr. Shamshād Ṣiddiqī, except for sūrahs Ad-Dukhān and Al-Jāthiyah that are translated by Moulānā Aḥmad Khalīl 'Azīz of South Africa.

Another change that took place in the course of preparation of this volume is that the translation of the text of the Holy Qur'ān, as mentioned in the beginning of the first volume, was carried out by the joint effort of a committee, but when Professor Muḥammad Shamīm left for USA, the committee decided that the translation of the text of the Holy Qur'ān should be undertaken by me alone. Accordingly, I am responsible for the translation from Sūrah Al-Anbiyā' onwards, and I am pleased to say that Alḥamdulillāh the task has now been completed to the last Sūrah of the Holy Qur'ān. The translation of the eighth volume of the commentary is undertaken by Moulānā Aḥmad Khalīl 'Azīz of South Africa and is close to its completion.

I am extremely thankful to Mrs. Shamīm and her sons Mr. Shama'il and Mr. Sadīm whose sincere efforts facilitated the preservation of the script of the book and its transmission to us. Acknowledgements are also due to Mr. Yousuf Noor, Mr. Ishāq Noor, Mr. Yousuf Ghani, Moulānā 'Abdullāh Memon, Mr. Rafat Ṣaghīr Fārooqī and Mr. Ibrāhīm Nafīs whose valuable assistance made it possible to present this volume. May Allah approve all these efforts and make it beneficial for the readers.

Preface

الحمد لله رب العالمين، والصلاة والسلام على رسوله الكريم، وعلى آله وصحبه
أجمعين وعلى كل من تبعهم بإحسان إلى يوم الدين

By the grace of Allah Ta'ālā this last volume of Ma'āriful Qur'ān is now in your hands. When presenting it to the readers, I am unable to find suitable words to express my gratitude to Allah Ta'ālā who has enabled us to accomplish this project. It was a long journey that I commenced more than thirty years ago with numerous obstacles in my way. Alhamdulillah, it is reaching its final destination today. Ma'āriful Qur'ān, with all its eight volumes, is perhaps the first complete and comprehensive commentary on the Holy Qur'ān that appeared in English, and I hope it will help the English speaking people to fully understand the message of the last Divine Book in its true perspective.

I am extremely grateful to Maulānā Aḥmed Khalīl Azīz who translated this volume in such a speedy manner that the work did not stop for a moment. May Allah grant him the best of health and bless him with the best of rewards both here and in the hereafter.

Acknowledgements are due to Mr. Ibrāhīm Nafīs who composed the whole work, to Mr. Rafat Saghīr Farooqui and Maulānā 'Abdullāh Memon who were responsible for proofreading, and to Mr. Yūsuf Ghani who not only rechecked the final proof but also prepared the basic material for the Index.

I am also thankful to Mr. Khalīl Ashraf 'Usmānī, Mr. Ishāq Noor and Mr. Yousuf Noor whose financial contributions facilitated the process of translation and publication of this volume. May Allah bless all of them with His pleasure and His rewards in the hereafter.

Lastly, I would request the readers to remember the esteemed author of the book, all the translators and this humble servant in their prayers. May Allah make this book beneficial to all those who wish to understand the message of their Creator and to order their lives in accordance with its guidance. A'min.

Wahy* and its true nature

Since the Holy Qur'ān was revealed to our beloved prophet Sayyidnā Muḥammad al-Muṣṭafā صلى الله عليه وسلم by means of Wahy (revelation), an understanding of some particulars about Wahy is imperative at the very outset.

The need for Wahy

Every Muslim knows that Allah Almighty has sent man into this world as a matter of test, and in return for his being obligated with certain duties, the whole universe has been placed at his service. For this reason man, once he is in the world, must do two things:

1. He should make the best use of this world, and of things created in it.
2. While using this world to his advantage, he should keep the injunctions of Allah Almighty in sight and do nothing that goes against His will and pleasure.

For these two functions man needs knowledge. Therefore, unless he knows the reality of this world, the properties of different things and the manner in which they can be put to use, he cannot use anything in this world to his advantage. Likewise, unless and until he knows the will of Allah Almighty as to what pleases Him and what displeases Him, it will be impossible for him to lead a life in line with the will of Allah Almighty.

So Allah Almighty, along with the creation of man, has created three things through which he could continue receiving knowledge of the above-mentioned matters of concern. These are:

1. Man's senses, that is, the eyes, the ears, the nose, the mouth, the hands and the feet.
2. The reason.
3. The Wahy.

Consequently, man finds out many things through his senses, many others through reason, and the knowledge of things he cannot get through these two sources are bestowed upon him through Wahy.

The arrangement between these three sources of knowledge is such that each one has its limits, and a particular sphere of activity beyond which it does not work. In natural sequence, the knowledge of things man collects through his senses cannot be deduced through bland reason. For instance, you know by seeing a wall with your eyes that its colour is white. But, should you close your eyes and try to find out the colour of that wall on the sole strength of your reason, this will then be impossible. Similarly, the knowledge of things that comes through reason cannot be discovered by senses alone. For instance, you cannot find out as to who made that wall by simply seeing it with your eyes or touching it with your hands. Not at all, you rather need reason to arrive at that conclusion.

In short, reason gives no guidance as far as the five senses work efficiently, and when the five senses become helpless, reason starts functioning. But, even the guidance given by this reason is not unlimited. This too stops at a certain limit. Then there are things the knowledge of which can neither be acquired through senses nor through reason. For instance, to find out about this very wall, as to what manner of its use will please Allah Almighty and what manner of its use will displease Him, is possible neither through senses nor through reason. In order to give man the answer to such questions, the source that Allah Almighty has prescribed is what is known as Wahy. And the method it follows is that Allah Almighty selects one of His servants, ordains him as His messenger and to him He reveals His Word. This Word is Wahy.

This makes it clear that Wahy is the highest source of knowledge for man which offers to him the answer to questions about his life which cannot be solved by means of reason and senses, but, he still has to have that knowledge. This further explains that reason and perception alone are not enough to show man the way. It is rather all the more necessary, almost inevitable, that the Divine Wahy be there for his guidance. Since Wahy is basically needed where reason does not work, it is, therefore, not necessary that everything communicated through Wahy be compulsively comprehended through reason. On the contrary, as reason is no help in finding out the colour of some object since that is the job of the senses, so is the knowledge of many religious beliefs, the gracious giving of which is the sole prerogative of Wahy and not of reason. Furthermore, trusting reason alone for their comprehension is not sound and correct.

To begin with, it is totally senseless to discuss the issue of Wahy with a person who, God forbid, does not accept the very existence of God. But, for a person who believes in the existence of Allah Almighty and has faith in His perfect power, it is not at all difficult to understand that Wahy is a rational need, that it is possible and that it is there for real. If you have faith in the fact that this universe has been created by an absolutely powerful entity, He is the One who has sent man down here to accomplish some particular mission, how then is it possible to imagine that He, after once having created man, would leave him off in total darkness, without ever telling him why did he come into this world, what his duties were, where was he destined to go and how could he realize the purpose of his life? How could a person, whose sanity is still there, send one of his servants on a certain trip under a designated mission without ever telling him the purpose of the trip while he is leaving, nor explaining it to him later on through some message as to why he has been sent out there and what duties he is supposed to carry out during the trip? When a man of ordinary reason cannot do something like this, how can something like this be imagined with respect to the most Holy Lord of the Universe under Whose ultimate wisdom this whole system of the universe is functioning? After all, how is it possible that the Being, that did create such a mind-boggling system composed of the moon, the sun, the sky, the earth, the stars and the planets, would remain unable to institute some arrangement of communication with His servants, through which human beings could be given guidance about the purpose of their lives? If there is Īmān or faith in the ultimate wisdom of Allah Almighty, then admitting that He did not forsake His servants in the dark, will become all the more necessary; rather on the contrary, He has surely instituted some regular system for their guidance. And so, this very regular system of guidance is known as Wahy (Revelation) and Risālah (Prophethood).

This makes it crystal clear that Wahy is not only a religious belief but also a rational need the rejection of which amounts to a rejection of the ultimate wisdom of Allah Almighty.

The Modes of Descent

This sacred sequence of Wahy (revelation) and Risālah (prophethood) came to an end with the last of the prophets, Muḥammad al-Mustafā صلی اللہ علیہ وسلم. Nevermore, shall Wahy descend upon any man, nor there is need for it. Wahy used to come to the Holy Prophet صلی اللہ علیہ وسلم in several forms and modes. In a hadīth from Saḥīḥ al-Bukhārī, Sayyidah ‘Ā’ishah رضی اللہ عنہا says that Sayyidnā Hārith ibn Hishām رضی اللہ عنہ once asked the Holy Prophet صلی اللہ علیہ وسلم as to how did Wahy come to him. The Holy Prophet صلی اللہ علیہ وسلم said that 'there are times when I hear something like the chiming of bells and this mode of Wahy is the hardest on me. After that, when this chime-sequence ends, that which has been said by the sound seems to have been committed to my memory. And there are times when the angel appears before me in the shape of a man.' (Saḥīḥ al-Bukhārī, 2/1)

As regards the likening of the sound of Wahy to the sound of bells in the hadīth cited above, Shaykh Muḥyy al-Dīn ibn al-‘Arabī has explained it by saying that, in the first place, the sound of Wahy is continuous like the sound of a bell which does not break off in between; and in the second place, when the bell rings continuously, it generally becomes difficult for the listener to determine the direction of its sound because its sound seems to be coming from all directions. And the Divine Word too carries with it the distinction that it has no one single direction, in fact, the sound gives the impression of being heard from all directions. A correct realization of this phenomenon is just not possible without auditory experience, however, in order to bring this happening closer to common comprehension, the Holy Prophet ﷺ has simply likened it to the sound of bells. (Fayd al-Bari, 19,20/1)

With the descent of Wahy in this mode, the Holy Prophet ﷺ came under very heavy strain. Sayyidah 'A'ishah رضى الله عنها says towards the end of this very hadith that she had seen the coming of Wahy to him during days of extreme winter. When the progression of Wahy ceased, his blessed forehead would have already become dripping-wet inspite of the chilly weather. In yet another narration, Sayyidah 'A'ishah رضى الله عنها relates: When Wahy came to him, his breath would seem to stop, the radiant face would change -- turning pale like the branch of a date palm, the front teeth would shiver from cold and he would perspire so much that its drops would roll like pearls. (Al-Itqan, 1/46)

On occasions, so much intensity would be generated in this state of Wahy that the animal he would be riding at that time would sit down, wilting under his weight. Once, when he was resting his blessed head on the lap of Sayyidnā Zayd ibn Thābit رضى الله عنه there started the descent of Wahy in that very posture. This released so much weight on Sayyidnā Zayd's thigh that it seemed to break. (Zad al-Ma'ad, 1/18,19)

There were times when a low-volumed sound of this Wahy was sensed by others as well. Sayyidnā 'Umar رضى الله عنه says: When Wahy came to him, a sound somewhat similar to the buzzing of honey-bees could be heard close to his most bright face. (Tabwib Musnad Ahmad, Kitab al-Sirah al-Nabaviyah, 20/212)

Under the second mode of Wahy, an angel would come to him in some human form and deliver Allah's message. Generally, on such occasions, Sayyidnā Jibrā'īl عليه السلام used to come to him in the form of Sayyidnā Dihyah al-Kalbi رضى الله عنه. Certainly, at other times, he has come in other forms as well. In any case, this mode of the coming of Wahy when it was brought by Sayyidnā Jibrā'īl عليه السلام appearing in human form, was the easiest on the Holy Prophet ﷺ. (Al-Itqan, 1/46)

The third mode of the coming of Wahy used to be that Sayyidnā Jibrā'īl عليه السلام would appear as he was, without having taken on the shape of a man. But this has happened only thrice in his entire life-time. First of all, it was when the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم had himself wished to see him in his real form and shape. The second time, it was in the Mi'rāj (the Ascent to Heaven), and the third time it was at Ajjād in Makkah al-Mukarramah during the very early days of prophethood. The first two happenings stand proved authentically, however, the last one suffers from weak chains of authority and is, therefore, doubtful. (Fath al-Bari. 1/18,19)

The fourth mode is distinguished by a direct, non-intermediary, two-way conversation with Allah Almighty. This honour was bestowed upon the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم only once, that is, in Mi'rāj, while awake. In addition to that, once it was in a dream as well that he was in a conversing situation with Allah Almighty.

Under the fifth mode of Wahy, it so happened that Sayyidnā Jibrā'il عليه السلام would, without appearing physically in any form whatsoever, let some words of the message fall into his heart. This is technically known as نفث في الروح (naftḥ fī al-rau': blowing into the heart) (Ibid).

The Chronology of the Revelation of the Qur'ān

The noble Qur'ān is, in fact, the Divine Word. It is, therefore, secure in the Preserved Tablet. The noble Qur'ān says: بَلْ هُوَ قُرْآنٌ مَّجِيدٌ فِي لَوْحٍ مَّحْفُوظٍ (Rather, it is the glorious Qur'ān in the Preserved Tablet). (85:21-22)

Then, from the Preserved Tablet, its descention took place twice. Once, the whole of it had been sent to al-Bayt al-'Izzah, the most exalted House on the firmament of the world. The most exalted House (also known as al-Bayt al-Ma'mūr) is a House facing Ka'bah that exists in the firmament as the place of worship for angels. This descention took place on the Night of Qadr (rendered as the Night of Power in English). The second time it used to be revealed to the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم gradually as needed, having reached its completion in twenty three years. These two modalities of the Qur'anic revelations become clear through the style of the noble Qur'ān itself. In addition to that, al-Nasā'i, al-Baihaqī and al-Hākim and others have reported from Sayyidnā 'Abdullāh ibn 'Abbās رضى الله عنه what can be summed up by saying that the first descention of the noble Qur'ān to the firmament of the world took place all at one time and the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم was blessed with the second descention gradually. (al-Itqān, v. 1, p. 41)

Explaining the wisdom behind the first descention of the noble

Qur'ān on the firmament facing the world, Imam Abu Shamah has said that it aimed at demonstrating the exalted majesty of the noble Qur'ān, and at the same time, it was to tell the angels that this was the last Book of Allah which is ready for descension for the guidance of the people of the earth.

Shaykh al-Zurqānī makes yet another point when he says that this two-timed descension also aimed at stressing that this Book is beyond all doubts, and it stands preserved at two more places other than the blessed heart of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم, that is, in the Preserved Tablet, and in the Exalted House. (Manahil al-'Irfan, v.1, p. 39).

It is almost agreed by all the scholars that the second gradual descension which was on the heart of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم began when his age was forty years. The beginning of this descension, as authentically reported, was in the Night of Qadr, and this was the date on which, some years later, the event of the Battle of Badr came to pass. However, nothing definite can be said about the exact date of Ramaḍān when this Night fell. There are some reports which identify that of the seventeenth Rāmaḍān, while others place it on the nineteenth, and still others which indicate the Night of the twenty-seventh. (Tafsir Ibn Jarir v. 10, p. 7)

The verses that came first

It is authentically said that the first verses to come to the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم were the verses from which Sūrah al-'Alaq begins. As in Saḥīḥ al-Bukhārī, Sayyidah 'A'ishah رضى الله عنها while relating its background has said that the very first beginning of revelations to the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم actually was through true dreams. Following that, came his zeal to worship in seclusion. During this period, he would spend night after night in the Cave of Hira' and stay in the state of I'tikāf devoted to his 'ibādah (worship) when one day, right there in that cave, there came an angel from Allah Almighty and the very first thing he said was اقْرَأْ (Iqra': 'Read'). The Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم said: مَا أَنَا بِقَارِئٍ: 'I am unable to read.' After that, relating the event himself, he said that 'the angel, hearing this answer of mine, caught hold of me and embraced me with such force that I had to go through unbearable strain.' Then he released me and said: اقْرَأْ: 'Read'. I said: 'I am unable to read.' Thereupon, he seized me the third time, gave a hard embrace and then released me. After that he said:

الَّذِي عَلَّمَ بِالْقَلَمِ ۝ عَلَّمَ الْإِنْسَانَ مَا لَمْ يَعْلَمْ

Recite with the Name of your Lord who created, created Man out of a blood-clot. Recite and Your Lord is Most Generous who taught by the Pen, taught Man what he did not know. (96:1-3)

These were the first verses to be revealed to him. Thereafter, the coming of Wahy stayed discontinued for three years. This period is known as the period of fatrah, that is, the period when Wahy was discontinued for a short interval of time. Then, it was after three years that the same angel who had visited him in the Cave of Hirā' became visible to him between the heaven and the earth. He read to him the verses of Sūrah al-Muddaththir. Thereafter, the sequence of Wahy was reactivated.

The Makki and Madani Verses

While looking at the titles of the Surahs of the Holy Qur'an, you may have noticed the entry, Makki (or Meccan, Makkan, Makkiyyah) with some Surāhs, and Madani (Medinan, Medinite, Madaniyyah) with some others. It is necessary to understand correctly what it means. In the terminology of the commentators, the 'Makki 'āyah' means a verse that was revealed to the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم earlier than he actually reached Madīnah by way of hijrah (emigration). Similarly, the 'Madani 'āyah' or the Madani verse means that it was revealed after he migrated to Madīnah. Some people take 'Makki' to mean that the verse concerned was revealed in the city of Makkah, and so the 'Madani' is supposed to have been revealed in Madīnah. This view is not correct because there are several verses which were not revealed in the city of Makkah, yet are called Makki because they had already been revealed before hijrah. As such, the verses that were revealed in Minā, 'Arāfat, or during the Journey of Ascent (Mi'rāj) are also called Makki. So much so, that the verses revealed during the journey of hijrah enroute Madīnah are also called Makki. Similarly, there are several verses which were not revealed in the city of Madīnah, but they are Madani. For example, there were several journeys that the Holy Prophet ﷺ had to undertake while going many hundred miles away from Madīnah, and the verses revealed at all those places are called Madanī anyway. So much so that the particular verses that were revealed on the occasion of the Conquest of Makkah or the military campaign of Hudaibīyah in the city of Makkah proper or its environs are also called Madanī. Accordingly, the Qur'ānic verse:

إِنَّ اللَّهَ يَأْمُرُكُمْ أَنْ تُؤَدُّوا الْأَمَانَاتِ إِلَىٰ أَهْلِهَا

Surely, Allah commands you to fulfil trust obligations towards those entitled to them. (4:58) is Madanī although it was revealed in Makkah al-Mukarramah. (al-Burhan, v. 1, p. 88, and Manahil al-Irfan, v. 1, p. 88)

Then there are Sūrahs which are either totally Makki, or totally Madanī. For instance, Sūrah al-Muddaththir is wholly Makki and Sūrah 'Al-'Imran is wholly Madanī. But, on occasions, it has so happened that one or some Madanī verses find a place in the Sūrah which is wholly Makki. On other occasions, it has happened just the reverse. For instance, Sūrah al-A'raf is Makki, but in it the verses from وَإِذْ أَخَذَ رَبُّكَ مِنْ بَنِي آدَمَ to وَأَسْأَلُكُمْ عَنِ النَّارِ الَّتِي كَانَتْ حَاضِرَةً الْبَحْرِ are Madanī. Similarly, Sūrah al-Hajj is Madanī but four of its verses, that is, those from عَذَابٌ يَوْمَ عَقِيمٍ to وَمَا أَرْسَلْنَا مِنْ قَبْلِكَ مِنْ رَسُولٍ وَلَا نَبِيٍّ إِلَّا إِذَا تَلَّيْ

This also makes it clear that the incidence of a Sūrah being Makki or Madanī is generally conditioned by the nature of the majority of its verses and so it happened frequently that the initial verses of a Sūrah which were revealed before Hijrah were regarded as Makki, although some of its verses may have been revealed later on following Hijrah.

Characteristics of Makki and Madanī Verses

The scholars of Tafsir, after having made a thorough investigation into the Makki and Madanī Sūrahs, have come up with a set of characteristics that tell right off if a Sūrah is Makki or Madanī. Some of these characteristics are recognized as universal rules while others hold good most of the time. The universal rules are as follows:

1. Every Sūrah in which the word كَلَّا (never) appears is Makki. This word has been used 33 times in 15 Sūrahs, and all these verses are in the last half of the noble Qur'an.

2. Every Sūrah in which (according to the Hanafīyyah) there appears a verse of Sajdah is Makki.
3. Every Sūrah, with the exception of Sūrah al-Baqarah, in which the story of Ādam and Iblīs finds mention is Makki.
4. Every Sūrah in which a permission of jihād or a description of its injunctions has been given is Madani.
5. Every verse which mentions the hypocrites is Madani.

The following characteristics are general and mostly frequent, that is, sometimes the contrary may happen, but usually and mostly it follows the said pattern:

1. In Makki Sūrahs, generally, the form of address used is يَا أَيُّهَا النَّاسُ (O people), and in Madani Surahs it is يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا (O believers).
2. The Makki 'Ayat (Verses) and Sūrahs are generally short and brief while the Madani verses and chapters are long and detailed.
3. The Makki Sūrahs mostly consist of subjects such as, Oneness of Allah, Prophethood, affirmation of the Hereafter, the panorama of the Resurrection, words of comfort for the Holy Prophet ﷺ and events relating to the past communities, and in these, the number of injunctions and laws taken up is much less as compared with the Madani Surahs where family and social laws, injunctions of jihād and expositions of limits and duties appear frequently.
4. In Makki Sūrahs, most of the confrontation is against idolaters while in Madani Sūrahs it is against the people of the Book and the hypocrites.
5. The style of Makki Sūrahs is more majestic. It has profusion of metaphors, similies and allegories, and the vocabulary used is extensive. Contrary to this, the style of the Madani Sūrahs is comparatively simple.

This difference in the style of Makki and Madani Surahs initially owes its origin to a variety of conditions, circumstances and addressees. Muslims had to deal mostly with the idolaters of Arabia during their Makkan life. No Islamic state was born yet. Therefore, during this period, more emphasis was laid on the correction of beliefs, reform of morals, logical refutation of the idolaters and the miraculous nature of the noble Qur'ān. Contrary to this, an Islamic state had risen in the Holy city of Madinah. People were rushing into the fold of Islam, group after group. Idolatry stood refuted intellectually. The ideological confrontation was now wholly against the people of the Book. Therefore, greater attention was paid to education in injunctions, laws, limits and duties, and on the refutation of the people of the Book. The style adopted matched these objectives.

The Gradual Revelation of the Noble Qur'ān

As said earlier, the noble Qur'ān was not revealed to the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم suddenly and simultaneously. On the contrary, it was revealed, little by little, over a span of nearly twenty three years. At times, Jibrā'il عليه السلام would come with a small verse, or even with some unit of a verse. Then, there were times when several verses would be revealed at one time. The smallest portion of the Qur'ān which was revealed as such is غَيْرِ أُولَى الضَّرَرِ (al-Nisā': 4:94) which forms part of a long verse. On the other hand, the whole of Sūrah al-An'am was revealed at one time. (Ibn Kathir, v. 2, p. 122)

Rather than being revealed all at once, why was the Qur'ān revealed little by little? The polytheists of Arabia had themselves put this question to the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم. Allah Almighty has taken it upon Himself to answer the question in the following words:

وَقَالَ الَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا لَوْ لَا نَزَّلَ عَلَيْهِ الْقُرْآنُ جُمْلَةً وَّاحِدَةً كَذَلِكَ لِنُثَبِّتَ بِهِ فُؤَادَكَ وَرَتَّلْنَاهُ تَرْتِيلًا وَلَا يَأْتُونَكَ بِمَثَلٍ إِلَّا جِئْنَاكَ بِالْحَقِّ وَأَحْسَنَ تَفْسِيرًا

The disbelievers said, "Why has the Qur'ān not been sent down upon him all at once?" "(We did) like this, so that We may strengthen your heart thereby, and We have recited it very distinctly. They bring not to thee any similitude but that We bring thee the truth, and better in exposition" (25:32-33)

It is sufficient to understand a gist of the wisdom behind the gradual revelation of the Holy Qur'ān as stated by Imam al-Rāzī in his explanation of this verse. He says:

1. The Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم was ummiyy, that is, being unlettered, he did not read or write. So, had the entire Qur'ān been revealed at one time, it would have been difficult to remember and document. Contrary to this, Sayyidnā Musā عليه السلام knew reading and writing, therefore, the Torah was revealed to him at one single time.

2. If the entire Qur'ān had been revealed all at once, immediate compliance of all its injunctions would have become obligatory, and this would have gone against the wise graduation which has featured as a matter of concern in the Shari'ah of our Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم

3. The Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم had to go through ever-new tortures inflicted by his people. That Jibrā'il عليه السلام came, again and again, with the words of the noble Qur'an, made his stand against these tortures bearable, and gave strength to his heart.

4. A large portion of the Qur'ān is devoted to answers given to people who posed questions, while some other portion refers to various particular events. Therefore, the revelation of those verses was appropriate at the time when those questions were asked, or those events came to pass. This increased the insight of Muslims and when the Qur'ān unfolded that which was unseen, its truth became all the more manifest. (al-Tafsir al-Kabir, v. 6, p. 336)

Sabab al-nuzul: (Cause of revelation)

The verses of the noble Qur'ān are of two kinds. In the first place, there are the verses that Allah Almighty revealed on His own. Their revelation was not caused by some particular event or a question asked by someone. In the second place, there are those verses which were revealed in answer to some question or with reference to some event. This could be termed as the background of these verses. This background is known, in the terminology of the commentators, as the 'sabab' of nuzul ('cause' of revelation) or the 'shā'n' of nuzul (the 'background' of revelation). For instance, take the verse in Sūrah al-Baqarah:

لَا تَنْكِحُوا الْمُشْرِكَةَ حَتَّىٰ يُؤْمِنَ وَلَا أَمَةٌ مُّؤْمِنَةٌ خَيْرٌ مِّنْ مُّشْرِكَةٍ وَلَوْ أَعْجَبَتْكُمْ

Do not marry female associators unless they come to believe, and a Muslim slave girl is better than a female associator, even though she is liked by you. (2:221)

This verse was revealed in the wake of a particular event. During the days of Ignorance, Sayyidnā Marthad ibn Abī Marthad al-Ghanavī رضى الله عنه had a relationship with a woman, named 'Amaq. After embracing Islam, he migrated to Madīnah while that woman stayed behind in Makkah al-Mukarramah. There was an occasion when Sayyidnā Marthad visited Makkah al-Mukarramah on a certain business. 'Amaq came to him with an invitation to sin. Sayyidnā Marthad refused flatly and said: 'Now Islam has come between me and you, but should you so wish, I can marry you after clearing it with the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم.' After returning to Madīnah, Sayyidnā Marthad sought his permission to marry the woman he said he liked. Thereupon, this verse was revealed, and it prohibited marriage with mushrik women. (Asbab al-Nuzul by al-Wahidi, p. 38)

This event is the 'shā'n' or 'sabab' of nuzūl ('cause' or 'background' of revelation) behind the verse mentioned above. The background of revelation is, therefore, very important in the exegesis of the noble Qur'ān. There are many verses the meaning of which cannot be correctly understood unless the circumstances underlying their revelation become known.

The Seven Readings of the Holy Qur'ān

In order that the noble Qur'ān becomes easily recitable, Allah Almighty has blessed the Muslim community with special convenience by allowing it to read the words of the Qur'ān in more than one way. If there are situations when a person is unable to pronounce some words in one manner, he could recite it in another. It appears in a ḥadīth of Sahīh Muslim that the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم was once sitting by the pond of Banu Ghifar while Angel Jibrā'īl came and said: 'Allah Almighty has commanded you to ask your community to recite the Qur'ān following one method of reading.' He said: 'I seek from Allah His pardon and forgiveness. My people do not have the ability to do so.' Then, Angel Jibrā'īl returned to him and said: 'Allah Almighty has commanded you to let your people recite the Qur'ān following two readings.' He said: 'I seek pardon and forgiveness from Allah Almighty. My people do not have the ability to do even that.' Then, Jibrā'īl came the third time and said: 'Allah Almighty has commanded you to let your people recite the Qur'ān following three readings.' Again he said: 'I seek pardon and forgiveness from Allah Almighty. My people do not have the ability to do even that.' Then he came the fourth time and said: 'Allah Almighty has commanded you to let your people recite the Qur'ān following seven readings. So, whichever of these they follow to read the Qur'ān, their recitation will be correct.'

Accordingly, there is yet another ḥadīth where the Holy Prophet ﷺ has said:

إِنَّ هَذَا الْقُرْآنَ أُنْزِلَ عَلَى سَبْعَةِ أَحْزَابٍ فَأَقْرَأْهُ وَامَّا تيسَّرَ مِنْهُ

This Qur'an has been revealed covering seven versions. So from out of these, recite in a way that is easy on you.

What is meant by 'Seven Versions' in this saying of the Holy Prophet ﷺ ? There are several scholarly positions in this connection but according to scholars who have conducted painstaking and exhaustive research on the subject, the weightier meaning of this expression is that the variations found in different readings of the Holy Qur'ān are of seven types. These are as follows:

1. The difference in nouns: This includes the difference concerning singular, dual, plural, as well as, masculine and feminine. For instance, in one reading it is كَلِمَاتُ رَبِّكَ, while in another, كَلِمَةً رَبِّكَ.

2. The difference in verbs: That there be past in one reading, the present in another and the imperative in yet another. For instance, it is رَبَّنَا بَاعِدْ بَيْنَ أَسْفَارِنَا in one reading, while رَبَّنَا بَعِّدْ بَيْنَ أَسْفَارِنَا in another.

3. The difference in the placement of diacritical marks: That which shows variance in I'rāb, which reflects variance in grammatical mode of a word and is demonstrated through desinential inflections, such as kasrah, fathah, dammah. For instance, reading لَا يُضَارُّ كَاتِبٌ as لَا يُضَارُّ كَاتِبٌ and دُؤَالْعَرْشِ الْمَجِيدُ as دُؤَالْعَرْشِ الْمَجِيدُ.

4. The difference caused by addition and deletion of words: That there be some word missing in one reading while it has been added on in another; for instance, the words تَجَرَّيْ مِنْ تَحْتِهَا الْأَنْهَارُ appear in one reading while the words تَجَرَّيْ تَحْتِهَا الْأَنْهَارُ appear in another.

5. The difference of precedence and succession: That there is a word which precedes in one reading, while it succeeds in the other.

For instance وَجَاءَتْ سَكْرَةُ الْحَقِّ بِالْمَوْتِ and وَجَاءَتْ سَكْرَةُ الْمَوْتِ بِالْحَقِّ.

6. The difference caused by transposition: This happens when a word found in one reading is replaced by another word in another reading. For instance, نَنْشُرُهَا and نُنْشِرُهَا, also فَتَبَيَّنُوا and فَتَبَيَّنُوا, and طَلَعَ and طلع.

7. The difference caused by manners of reading: It includes variations in tafkhīm (velarization, making sound heavy), tarqīq (making a letter sound soft), imālah (inclination, bending the sound of a short vowel), madd (prolongation), qasr (to shorten), hamz: hamzation (providing a letter with hamzah), izhār (clear pronunciation) and idghām (assimilation). It means that, by doing these, the actual word does not change but the mode of its pronunciation does change. For instance, the word, مُوسَى is rendered as مُوسَى in one of the readings.

Anyhow, many readings were revealed incorporating these seven types of different renderings. This difference between them really made no difference in meaning. The latitude so given was aimed at making recitation easy.

In the beginning, people were not totally used to the style of the Qur'ān, therefore, many readings were permitted within the radius of these seven types. But, it was the blessed practice of the Holy Prophet صلی اللہ علیہ وسلم that he would go through the entire revealed Qur'ān with Jibrā'il علیہ السلام during the month of Ramaḍān every year. The year he left this mortal world, that was the year he did so twice. This 'daur' or meticulous re-reading of the Qur'ān is called العرضة الأخيرة (last review). On this occasion, many readings were abrogated. Only readings retained were the ones which continue to stay preserved to this day with uninterrupted succession.

Sayyidnā 'Uthman رضی اللہ عنہ, during the period of his khilafah, arranged to have seven copies of the noble Qur'ān prepared in order to remove misgivings regarding the recitation of Qur'ān. He incorporated all readings in these seven copies by leaving the calligraphed verses of the noble Qur'ān without dots and desinences (the vowel-points) so that the text could be read in accordance with whichever reading one wished to follow from among the very readings cited. Thus most of the readings merged into this script, and the readings that could not merge into the script were saved by him when he elected to have one copy written according to one reading, and another, in accordance with another reading. The community demonstrated such care and diligence in having the fondly-remembered readings collected in these copies that Qirā'ah developed into a branch of knowledge in its own right, and there rose hundreds of scholars, reciters and memorizers of the Holy Qur'ān who spent their entire spans of life to keep it preserved and protected.

What actually happened was that when Sayyidnā 'Uthman رضي الله عنه sent the seven copies of the noble Qur'ān to various areas, he had also sent particular reciters who could teach how to recite them. So, when these revered reciters reached their designated areas, they taught people to read the Qur'ān in accordance with their respective readings. These different readings spread out among people. At this stage, some people bequeathed their lives to memorize different readings, and in training others to continue the discipline. This is how the foundation of the 'science of readings' was laid and people from different parts of the Islamic world started turning to the masters of the discipline to achieve the highest of excellence in it. Some memorized only one reading, others did two or three or seven, or even more than that. In this connection, a standard rule was accepted as norm throughout the ummah and it was invariably followed everywhere. It stipulated that only such reading (qirā'ah) will be accepted as being the Qur'ān which fulfils three conditions:

1. There is room for it in the script of 'Uthmani' copies of the Qur'ān.
2. It conforms to the grammar of the Arabic language.
3. It should have, provenly -- with sound authority, originated from the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم, and be well-known among the masters of readings, that is, the Imāms of Qirā'ah.

A reading which lacks even one of these three requirements cannot be considered as part of the Qur'ān. Thus a large number of readings continued to be reported in uninterrupted succession. Then, as a matter of convenience, it so happened that an Imām started giving instructions in one, or some selected readings, and that particular reading became identified with his name. Then, scholars started writing books to collect these readings. So, Imam Abu 'Ubayd Qāsim ibn Sallām, Imām Abū Ḥātim Sijistānī, Qāḍī Ismā'īl and Imām Abū Ja'far al-Ṭabarī were the first among those who compiled books in this field which included more than twenty readings. Then came the great scholar, Abū Bakr ibn Mujāhid (died 324 Hijrah) who wrote a book in which he had included readings from seven qārīs (reciters) only. This book of his became so popular that these readings from the seven qaris became much more famous as compared with those of other qaris. In fact, some people got used to thinking that these are the only sound readings coming in uninterrupted succession. Although, the truth of the matter is that 'Allāmah ibn Mujāhid has collected these seven readings in one place just by chance. He never meant that readings other than these were wrong or unacceptable. This act of 'Allāmah ibn Mujāhid created yet another misunderstanding when some people began to think that سبعة احرف (seven versions) means just these seven readings which have been collected by ibn Mujāhid. Although, it has been explained earlier that these seven readings are simply a part of sound readings, otherwise every reading that fulfils the above-mentioned three conditions perfectly is sound, acceptable and included within the seven versions (Hurūf) in which the noble Qur'ān was revealed.

The Seven Qārīs

Anyhow, the seven qārīs who became most famous as a result of this act of 'Allāmah ibn Mujāhid are:

1. 'Abdullah ibn Kathīr al-Darī (died 120 Hijrah). He was fortunate enough to have seen Sayyidnā Anas ibn Mālik, 'Abdullāh ibn Zubayr and Abu Ayyūb al-Ansārī رضى الله عنهم from among the Companions. His reading became more famous in Makkah al-Mukarramah. Well-known among those who transmitted his rendition are Bazzī and Qambal, may Allah have mercy on them all.

2. Nafi' ibn 'Abd Al-Rahmān ibn Abī al-Nu'aym (died 169 Hijrah). He had the benefit of learning from seventy successors to the Companions who were direct disciples of Sayyidnā 'Ubayy ibn Ka'b, 'Abdullāh ibn 'Abbās and Abū Hurayrah رضى الله عنهم. His reading became more famous in Madīnah and among those who transmitted his rendition, Abū Mūsā Qālūn (died 220 Hijrah) and Abu Sā'id Warsh (died 197 Hijrah) are better known.

3. 'Abdullāh al-Hisbī, better known as Ibn 'Amir (died 118 Hijrah). He was fortunate to have seen Sayyidnā Nu'mān ibn Bashīr and Wāthilah ibn Asqā' رضى الله عنهم from among the Companions. He had learnt the art of Qur'ānic reading from Mughīrah ibn Shihāb al-Makhzūmī who was a disciple of Sayyidnā 'Uthman رضى الله عنه. His reading gained currency mostly in Syria, and more famous among those who transmitted his rendition are Hishām and Dhakwān.

4. Abū 'Amr Zabbān ibn al-'Alā (died 154 Hijrah). He has reported his rendition from Sayyidnā Ibn 'Abbās and 'Ubayy ibn Ka'b رضى الله عنهم through Mujāhid and Sa'id ibn Jubayr. His reading became fairly well-known in Basrah. Abū 'Umar al-Dawrī (died 246 Hijrah) and Abū Shu'ayb al-Sūsī (died 261 Hijrah) are among the more famous transmitters of his rendition.

5. Hamzah ibn Ḥabīb al-Zayyāt, ex-slave of 'Ikramah ibn Rabī' al-Taymī (died 188 Hijrah). He is a disciple of Sulayman al-A'mash, who was a disciple of Yahyā ibn Waththāb, who was a disciple of Zirr ibn Ḥubaysh, and he had the benefit of learning from Sayyidnā 'Uthmān, 'Alī and 'Abdullāh ibn Mas'ūd رضى الله عنهم. Among his transmitters, Khalf ibn Hishām (died 188 Hijrah) and Khallād ibn Khālīd (died 220 Hijrah) are more famous.

6. 'Āṣim ibn Abī al-Najūd al-Asadiyy (died 127 Hijrah). Through Zirr ibn Hubaysh, he is a disciple of 'Abdullāh ibn Mas'ūd رضى الله عنهم and through Abū 'Abd al-Rahman Sulamī and al-Asadiyy, he is a disciple of Sayyidnā 'Alī رضى الله عنهم. More famous among the transmitters of his rendition are Shu'bah ibn 'Ayyāsh (died 193 Hijrah) and Ḥafṣ ibn Sulaymān (died 180 Hijrah). Generally, the recitation of the Holy Qur'ān these days is made following the rendition of this very Ḥafṣ ibn Sulaymān.

7. Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī ibn Ḥamzah al-Kisā'ī (died 189 Hijrah). Among his transmitters, Abū al-Ḥarith Marwāzī (died 240 Hijrah) and Abū 'Umar al-Dawrī (who is also a transmitter of Abū 'Amr) are better known. The readings of the later three became more common in Kūfah.

As it has been submitted earlier that several other readings, other than these seven, are sound and have been reported in uninterrupted succession. However, when the misunderstanding that sound readings are limited to these seven started gaining currency, several scholars (for example, 'Allāmah Shadhā'ī and Abū Bakr ibn Mihrān) collected, instead of seven, ten readings in one book. Thereupon, the term, "Al-qirā'āt al-'ashrah" or "Ten Readings" became famous. In these ten readings, the readings by the following three were also included in addition to those of the seven mentioned above:

1. Ya'qūb ibn Ishāq al-Ḥaḍramī (died 205 Hijrah). His rendition was famous mostly in Baṣrah.
2. Khalf ibn Hishām (died 205 Hijrah) who is also a transmitter of the rendition of Hamzah. His rendition was common mostly in Kūfah.
3. Abū Ja'far Yazīd ibn al-Qa'qā' (died 130 Hijrah). His rendition found wider currency in Madīnah al-Tayyibah.
4. Abū al-Faraj Shambūdhi (died 388 Hijrah) who was a resident of Baghdād.

Some scholars have counted Sulaymān al-A'mash among the fourteen qārīs in place of Shambūdhi. Out of these, the first ten readings are credited with uninterrupted succession as vouched by sound authority.

Other than these are Shādhdh or rare (Manahil al'Irfan with reference to Munjid al-Muqri'in by ibn al-Jazri).

The Preservation of the Holy Qur'an

In the days of the Holy Prophet ﷺ

Since the noble Qur'an was not revealed all at once, on the contrary, different verses from it used to have been revealed as and when appropriate, therefore, it was not possible from the very beginning to write and preserve it in a book form. So, during the initial stage of Islam, major emphasis was laid on memory as a means of preserving the noble Qur'an. When Wahy used to come in the very beginning, the Holy Prophet ﷺ would tend to repeat its words instantly so that they would be memorized well enough. Thereupon, Allah Almighty directed him through the verses of Sūrah al-Qiyāmah that he need not repeat words in a hurry immediately as Wahy came. Allah Almighty would Himself endow him with a memory that he will be unable to forget the words of the Wahy once its descention has been completed. So it was that the moment the Qur'ānic verses would come to him, they would be committed to his memory the next moment. Thus the blessed chest of the Holy Prophet ﷺ, was the most protected vault of the noble Qur'ān, in which there was no chance of even some common mistake, editing or alteration. Moreover, as a matter of additional precaution, he used to recite the Qur'ān before angel Jibrā'il عليه السلام every year during the month of Ramadān; and the year he left this mortal world he completed a cumulative review of Qur'ānic recitation (daur) twice with Jibrā'il عليه السلام (Sahih al-Bukhari with Fath al-Bari, p. 36, v. 9).

Again, as it was, he would not restrict his teaching of the Companions to just the meanings of the noble Qur'ān, but had them memorize its words as well. Then, the revered Companions were themselves so enamoured with the desire to learn and remember the noble Qur'ān that everyone of them was anxious to get ahead of the other. There were women who claimed no mahr (dower) from their husband except that they would teach the Qur'ān.

Hundreds of Companions, freeing themselves from all other concerns, had devoted their whole lives for this purpose. Not only did they memorize the Qur'ān but also went on repeating it within their nightly prayers. When someone migrated from Makkah al-Mukarramah and came to Madinah al-Tayyibah, says Sayyidnā 'Ubādah ibn Sāmit رضي الله عنه, the Holy Prophet ﷺ would entrust him to one of us Ansars so that he could teach Qur'ān to the newcomer. The Mosque of the Prophet was so filled with voices generated by learners and teachers of the Qur'ān that the Holy Prophet ﷺ had to ask them to lower their voices so that mistakes are not made (Manahil al-Irfan, 1/234).

So, within a fairly short time, there was on hand a large group of the noble Companions who had the glorious Qur'ān all committed flawlessly to their memory. Included in this group were, in addition to the Four Guided Caliphs, persons like Sayyidnā Ṭalḥah, Sayyidnā Sa'd, Sayyidnā Ibn Mas'ūd, Sayyidnā Ḥudhayfah ibn Yamān, Sayyidnā Sālim Mowla abī Ḥudhayfah, Sayyidnā Abū Hurayrah, Sayyidnā 'Abdullāh ibn 'Umar, Sayyidnā 'Abdullah ibn 'Abbās, Sayyidnā 'Amr ibn al-'Āṣ, Sayyidnā 'Abdullah ibn 'Umar, Sayyidnā Mu'āwiyah, Sayyidnā 'Abdullāh ibn Zubayr, Sayyidnā 'Abdullāh ibn al-Sā'ib, Sayyidah 'Ā'ishah, Sayyidah Ḥafṣah, Sayyidah Umm Salmāh, may peace be upon them all.

In short, memorization of the Qur'ān was given more emphasis in early Islam as this was the only protected and trust-worthy method given the conditions of that time. The reason is that the number of people who could read or write was very limited in those days. The means of publishing books, such as the printing press, etc., were not there. Therefore, in that situation, if writing was taken to be sufficient, it would have neither been possible to spread out the Qur'ān on an extensive scale nor to protect it reliably. In its place, Allah Almighty had blessed the people of Arabia with a memory of such dimensions that thousands of poetic lines would normally rest in the memory of one person after another. Ordinary, run-of-the-mill villagers would remember by heart their genealogies and those of their families, and unbelievably enough - even those of their horses! Therefore, this power of memory was well utilized for the conservation and protection of the noble Qur'ān and it was through it that the verses and chapters of the noble Qur'ān reached all over into the far corners of Arabia.

The writing of Wahy

Besides having the Qur'ān committed to memory, the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم made special arrangements to have the Qur'ān committed to writing as well. Sayyidna Zayd ibn Thābit رضى الله عنه says: 'I used to write down the words of Wahy for him. When Wahy came to him he felt burning with heat and the drops of perspiration would start rolling down on his body like pearls. When this state would go away from him, I would present myself before him with a shoulder-bone or a piece (of something else). He would go on dictating and I would go on writing. When I would be finished with writing, the sheer weight of copying the Qur'ān would give me the feeling that my leg is going to break and I would never be able to walk. In any case, when I would be finished with writing, he would say: 'Read'. I would read it back to him. If there was a shortcoming, he would have it corrected and then let it be known to people (Majma' al-Zawaid with reference to Tabrani 1/156).

Besides Sayyidnā Zayd ibn Thābit رضى الله عنه , there were many other Companions who carried out the duty of committing the Wahy to writing. Some of those who can be specially mentioned, in addition to the Four Guided Caliphs, are Sayyidnā 'Ubayy ibn Ka'b, Sayyidnā Zubayr ibn 'Awwām, Sayyidnā Mu'āwiyah, Sayyidnā Mughīrah ibn Shu'bah, Sayyidnā Khālīd ibn al-Walīd, Sayyidnā Thābit ibn al-Qays, Sayyidnā Abān ibn Sa'īd and others (Fath al-Bari, 9/18)

Sayyidnā 'Uthman says that it was the blessed practice of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم that he, soon after the revelation of a certain portion of the Qur'ān, would pointedly instruct the scribe of the Wahy to write it in such Sūrah after such and such verse (for details see Fath al-Bari, 9/18 and Zad al-Ma'ad 1/30).

Since paper was not available in Arabia during those days, therefore, these Qur'ānic verses were mostly written on stone slabs, parchments, date branches, bamboo units, tree leaves and animal bones. However, at times, paper pieces have also been used (Ibid., 9/11).

Thus, there existed, during the times of the Holy Prophet ﷺ , a copy of the noble Qur'ān which he had arranged to be committed to writing under his supervision. Although, it was not there as a formally prepared book, but it certainly was there in the form of various units of available writing materials. Along with it, it was also the practice of some revered Companions that they would make copies of the Qur'ānic verses and keep them for personal recollection. This practice was common since the very early period of Islam. Accordingly, much before Sayyidnā 'Umar رضى الله عنه embraced Islam, his sister and brother-in-law had in their possession verses of the Qur'ān which they had written and kept in book form (Sirah ibn Hisham).

However, it was characteristic of all copies of the noble Qur'ān made during the days of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم that they were either written on different available writing surfaces, for instance, a verse would appear on parchment, another on tree leaf and yet another on a bone; or they were not complete copies. One Companion would have only a single Sūrah in his record while someone else would have five or ten Sūrahs and some others will have only a few verses. Then there were Companions having in their possession explanatory sentences as well along with the text of the verses.

On these grounds, Sayyidnā Abū Bakr رضى الله عنه, during his tenure of Khilafah, thought it necessary to bring together all these scattered units of the Qur'ān and thus have them preserved. The motives and the methods behind this great achievement of his have been explained in detail by Sayyidnā Zayd ibn Thābit رضى الله عنه when he says: "One day, soon after the battle of Yamamah, Sayyidnā Abū Bakr sent a message calling me in. When I reached him, Sayyidnā 'Umar was present there. Sayyidnā Abū Bakr said to me: 'Umar has come just now and he tells me that a large group of Huffāz (those who had committed the Qur'ān to memory) have met their death as martyrs in the battle of Yamamah. If the Huffāz of the noble Qur'ān continue to meet their shahadah (martyrdom) in this manner, I am afraid a large portion of the Qur'ān may just go extinct. So, in my view, you should begin the task of having the Qur'ān collected together under your order'. I said to 'Umar: 'How can we do what the Holy Prophet ﷺ himself did not do?' 'Umar replied: 'By God, this is for nothing but good.' After that, this is what 'Umar continued telling me, until I too started seeing the truth, and now, my view was the same as 'Umar's'. After that Sayyidnā Abū Bakr told me: 'You are young, and intelligent. We have no doubts about you. You have been working as a scribe of Wahy as well under the supervision of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ, so you search and collect the verses of the noble Qur'ān'."

Sayyidnā Zayd ibn Thābit says: "By God, had these blessed people commanded me to haul some mountain, that would have been much less weightier than this duty of collecting the Qur'ān. I said to them: 'How are you doing something that the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم did not do?' Sayyidnā Abū Bakr said: 'By God, this is good, nothing but good.' After that, this is what Sayyidnā Abū Bakr kept saying to me again and again until Allah Almighty put my heart at rest for the same view that was the view of Sayyidnā Abū Bakr and 'Umar. Consequently, I started searching for the Verses of the Qur'ān and it was from the branches of date palms, slabs of stones and hearts of people that I finally collected the noble Qur'ān." (Sahih al-Bukhari, Kitab Fada'il al-Qur'an)

At this point while we are dealing with the process of the collection of the Qur'ān, we should have a clear perception of the method used by Sayyidnā Zayd ibn Thābit رضى الله عنه . As mentioned earlier, he was himself a Hafīẓ of the Qur'ān, therefore, he could have written down the whole Qur'ān from his memory. In addition to that, there were hundreds of Huffāẓ (memorizers of the Qur'ān: plural of Hafīẓ) present at that time; the noble Qur'ān could have still been written down by entrusting the duty to a selected group from out of them.

Also, the copies of the noble Qur'ān committed to writing during the times of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم could have been used by Sayyidnā Zayd to make his copy of the Qur'ān. But he, guided by his caution and concern, did not limit himself to any one of the many methods available. On the contrary, by using all these methods simultaneously, he did not allow any verse to be included in his master copy of the Qur'ān unless he received written and verbal testimonies proving its uninterrupted succession. In addition to that, the verses that the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم had arranged to be written under his supervision, were still preserved by the Companions. Sayyidnā Zayd collected them together so that the new copy be made from them. Consequently, a public proclamation was made to the effect that anyone possessing any number of written verses of the noble Qur'ān should bring them over to Sayyidnā Zayd. When a written verse was brought to him by someone, he used to verify its authenticity by the following four methods:

(1) To begin with, he tested its reliability against his own memory.

(2) Then, Sayyidnā 'Umar too was a Hafīẓ of Qur'ān, and as proved by reliable reports, Sayyidnā Abū Bakr رضى الله عنه had assigned him too to work with Sayyidnā Zayd on this project. When someone came with some verse, Sayyidnā Zayd and Sayyidnā 'Umar used to receive it jointly (Fath al-Bari with reference to ibn Abi Dawud).

(3) No written verse was accepted until such time that two trustworthy witnesses had testified to the fact that the particular verse was written in the presence of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم (al-Itqan, 1/10)

(4) After that, these verses in writing were collated with collections that different Companions had prepared for themselves (al-Burhan fi 'Ulum al-Qur'an, by Zarkashi, 1/238).

If this functional methodology behind the collection of the Qur'ān during the period of Sayyidnā Abū Bakr رضى الله عنه is kept in mind, it would become perfectly simple to understand what Sayyidnā Zayd ibn Thābit meant when he said: "I found the last verses of Sūrah al-Barā'ah beginning with: لَقَدْ جَاءَكُمْ رَسُولٌ مِنْ أَنْفُسِكُمْ with Sayyidnā Abū Khudhaymah رضى الله عنه only. They were not found with anyone else except him."

This never means that no person other than Sayyidnā Abū Khudhaymah رضى الله عنه remembered these verses, or somebody else did not have these in the written form, or anyone other than him did not know of their being part of the Qur'ān. On the contrary, it means that these verses were not found with anyone from among those who were coming along with different verses written as dictated by the Holy Prophet ﷺ. Otherwise, as far as the fact of these verses being part of the Qur'ān is concerned, everyone knew it in an uninterrupted succession. There were hundreds of Companions who remembered it as well. Moreover, these were available in writing with Companions who possessed complete collections of the Qur'ānic verses. But, among those written separately under the supervision of the Holy Prophet ﷺ this verse was found only with Sayyidnā Abū Khudhaymah رضى الله عنه and not with anyone else (al-Burhan, 1/234-45).

So, in every way possible, it was with great caution and concern that Sayyidnā Zayd ibn Thābit رضى الله عنه, by collecting the Qur'ānic verses, wrote them out in an organized form on pages of paper (al-Itqan, 1/60).

But, each Surah was written in separate folios, therefore, this copy was composed of many folios. In the terminology of Qur'ānic Studies, this copy is called the "Umm" (literally, 'the mother', meaning 'the original') and it had the following features:

1. In this copy, the Qur'ānic verses were indeed arranged in accordance with the order identified by the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم, but the Sūrahs were not so arranged, rather they were written separately (Ibid).

2. Incorporated in this copy were all seven Hurūf (versions) of the Qur'ān (which have been explained earlier). (Manhil al'Irfan, 1/246 and Tarikh al-Qur'an by al-Kurdi, p. 28)

3. Collected here were all verses the recitation of which has not been abrogated.

4. The purpose of having this copy made in writing was to prepare an organized document with the collective endorsement of the whole ummah, so that, reference can be made to it when needed.

These folios committed to writing on the orders of Sayyidnā Abū Bakr رضى الله عنه remained with him during his life-time. Then, they remained with Sayyidnā ‘Umar رضى الله عنه. After the martyrdom of Sayyidnā ‘Umar, they were transferred to the custody of Umm al-Mu’minin Sayyidah Ḥaḥṣah رضى الله عنها. After the death of Sayyidah Ḥaḥṣah رضى الله عنها, Mārwan ibn al-Ḥakam had these burnt since the copies of Qur’ān ordered by Sayyidnā ‘Uthmān رضى الله عنه were ready at that time, and a consensus of the ummah had already been reached to the effect that following these copies of the Qur’ān, in script and arrangement of Sūrahs, was obligatory. Marwān ibn al-Ḥakam thought it inadvisable to let any copy which was contrary to this script and arrangement remain in existence (Fath al-Bari, 9/16).

Preservation: In the period of Sayyidnā ‘Uthmān رضى الله عنه

When Sayyidnā ‘Uthmān رضى الله عنه became Khalifah, Islam had grown out of Arabia reaching into the far-flung areas of Byzantium and Iran. As people from new areas embraced Islam, they would learn the noble Qur’ān from the Mujāhidin of Islam or from the traders because of whom they had found the blessing of Islam. On the other side, you have already read that the noble Qur’ān was revealed incorporating seven versions with various readings, and different Ṣahābah (Companions) had learnt it from the Holy Prophet ﷺ in accordance with different readings, therefore, every Companion taught Qur’ān to his disciples in accordance with that particular reading which they had themselves learnt from the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم. In this manner, this difference in readings reached far-out countries. Until such time that people knew that the noble Qur’ān has been revealed incorporating seven Hurūf (versions) no harm was done by this difference. However, when this difference reached those far-out countries, and the fact that the noble Qur’ān has been revealed incorporating different readings was not fully publicised there, disputes among people started showing up. Some people began to insist on their reading as correct and that of others as incorrect. On the one hand, these disputes posed the danger that people would fall into the grave error of declaring the readings of the noble Qur'ān which have followed in uninterrupted succession as incorrect. On the other hand, there was no such standard copy available throughout the Islamic world which could become the rallying authority for the entire ummah, except, of course, the copy committed to writing by Sayyidnā Zayd ibn Thābit رضى الله عنه which was there in Madīnah. Since other copies were written individually, and in them, there was no provision to incorporate all the readings, therefore, the only reliable method to resolve these disputes was that copies which incorporate all valid readings be spread out all over the Islamic world, and then, by seeing them it could be decided as to which reading is correct and which, incorrect. Sayyidnā 'Uthmān رضى الله عنه accomplished this very remarkable feat during the period of his Khilāfah.

Details of this feat, as given in ḥadīth narrations, inform us that Sayyidnā Hudhayfah ibn Yamān رضى الله عنه was engaged in jihād on the Armenian-Azerbaijan front. There he noticed that differences were rising among people about readings of the noble Qur'ān. So, on his return to Madīnah, he went straight to Sayyidnā 'Uthmān رضى الله عنه and once there, he pleaded: 'Yā Amīr al-Mu'minīn! Before this Ummah falls a prey to differences in the Book of Allah like the Jews and Christians, you should do something about it.' Sayyidnā 'Uthmān asked: 'What is the matter?' In reply, Sayyidna Hudhayfah said: 'I was on a jihād mission fighting on the Armenian front. There I saw people of Syria following the reading of Ubayy ibn Ka'b which would not be familiar to the people of 'Irāq, and the people of Irān follow the reading of 'Abdullāh ibn Mas'ūd which would not be familiar to the people of Syria. As a result of this, they are charging each other of being kāfīrs.'

In fact, Sayyidnā 'Uthmān رضى الله عنه had himself sensed the danger much earlier. He was told that there were cases right there in Madīnah al-Tayyibah itself where a teacher of the noble Qur'ān would teach the text to his disciples in accordance with one reading, and another teacher would do so in accordance with another reading. In this way, when the disciples of different teachers came together, differences would crop up between them, and there were occasions when this difference would extend to teachers, and they too, would declare each other's reading to be incorrect. When Sayyidnā Hudhayfah ibn Yamān رضى الله عنه too invited his attention to this danger, Sayyidnā 'Uthmān رضى الله عنه convened a meeting of some highly-regarded Companions and sought their advice. He said: 'I have been informed that there are people who say to each other things like - "my reading is better than yours" - and this could touch the extreme limits of kufr. So, what is your opinion in this connection?' The Companions themselves asked Sayyidnā 'Uthmān رضى الله عنه: 'What are your own thoughts on this subject?' Sayyidnā 'Uthmān رضى الله عنه said: 'I believe we should unite everyone on one Book so that we face no difference or division.' The Companions, approving of this opinion, supported Sayyidnā 'Uthmān رضى الله عنه.

Consequently, Sayyidnā 'Uthmān رضى الله عنه gathered people together and delivered a sermon and in it he said: "You who live so close to me in Madīnah, if you can falsify each other and differ with each other in respect of the readings of the noble Qur'ān, it is quite obvious that those who are far away from me will be indulging in falsification and disputation on a much larger scale. Therefore, let everyone get together and come up with a copy of the Qur'ān following which becomes obligatory for all."

With this in view, Sayyidnā 'Uthmān رضى الله عنه sent a message to Sayyidah Ḥaḥṣah رضى الله عنها requesting her to let them have the blessed folios of the Qur'ānic text (prepared under the orders of Sayyidnā Abū Bakr رضى الله عنه which she had in her custody). He promised that these will be returned to her after copies have been made. Sayyidah Ḥaḥṣah رضى الله عنها sent these pages of the Qur'ān to Sayyidnā 'Uthmān رضى الله عنه. He then formed a group of four Companions which was composed of Sayyidnā Zayd ibn Thābit, Sayyidnā 'Abdullāh ibn Zubayr, Sayyidnā Sa'īd ibn al-'Āṣ and Sayyidnā 'Abd al-Rahmān ibn Hārith ibn Hishām رضى الله عنهم اجمعين. This group was entrusted with the duty of making several copies from the original copy of Sayyidnā Abū Bakr's Qur'ānic folios and making sure that Sūrahs too are arranged in order. Out of these four Companions, Sayyidnā Zayd was an Ansāri, while the rest of the three were Qurayshis. Therefore, Sayyidnā 'Uthmān رضى الله عنه said to them: 'When you and Zayd differ in respect of any portion of the Qur'ān (that is, differ as to how a certain letter should be written) you write it in the language of the Quraysh because the noble Qur'ān has been revealed in their very language."

Basically, this duty was entrusted to only four distinguished persons named above, but later on, other Companions were also attached to help them out. (Fath al-Bari, pp. 13-15, v. 9)

They performed the following functions in connection with the writing of the Qur'ān:

1. In the copy prepared during the period of Sayyidnā Abū Bakr رضى الله عنه, Sūrahs were not placed in sequence, rather each Sūrah was written separately. They wrote down all Sūrahs in their proper sequence in a single copy. (Mustadrak, 2/229)

2. The verses of the noble Qur'ān were written in a way so that all readings backed by uninterrupted succession could be incorporated within their script. Therefore, no dots or desinential marks were placed on them so that the text could be recited in accordance with all readings that are supported by uninterrupted succession. For instance, they wrote نُنشَرُهَا in order that it could be read both نُنشَرُهَا and نُنشَرُهَا, because both readings are correct. (Manahil al- 'Irfan, 1/253-254)

3. Upto this time, there existed only one single copy of the noble Qur'ān - complete, authentically standard and collectively attested by the whole ummah. These distinguished persons prepared more than one copy of this newly organized Muṣḥaf (copy of the Qur'ān).

It is generally believed that Sayyidnā 'Uthmān رضى الله عنه had accomplished the preparation of five copies, but Abū Hātim Sijistānī says that a total of seven copies were prepared. Out of these one was sent to Makkah al-Mukarramah, one to Syria, one to Yamān, one to Bahrain, one to Baṣrah and one to Kūfah, and one was preserved in Madīnah al-Tayyibah.

4. To accomplish the task cited above, these revered elders basically worked through the pages of the Qur'ān which were written during the times of Sayyidnā Abū Bakr رضى الله عنه. But, along with it, as a matter of added precaution, they adopted exactly the same method that was employed during the times of Sayyidnā Abū Bakr رضى الله عنه. Consequently, assorted copies of texts committed into writing during the days of the Holy Prophet ﷺ which were preserved by different Companions were recalled once again, and it was, by yet another collation with these, that the new copies were prepared. This time, a separately written verse of Sūrah al-Aḥzāb, مِنَ الْمُؤْمِنِينَ رِجَالٌ صَدَقُوا مَا عَاهَدُوا اللَّهَ عَلَيْهِ was found with Sayyidnā Thābit al-Anṣārī رضى الله عنه only. As we have explained earlier, it does not mean that nobody else remembered this verse because Sayyidnā Zayd رضى الله عنه has himself said: 'While writing the copy of the Qur'ān, I could not find the particular verse of Sūrah al-Aḥzāb which I used to hear the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم recite.' This shows very clearly that the verse under reference was something Sayyidnā Zayd and other Companions remembered very well. On the other hand, it also does not mean that this verse never existed in writing anywhere, because this verse was obviously there in the pages of the Qur'ān written during the times of Sayyidnā Abū Bakr رضى الله عنه. Besides that, obviously enough, this verse was also included in the copies of the noble Qur'ān which were written and preserved by the Companions on their own. But, like it was in the days of Sayyidnā Abū Bakr رضى الله عنه, this time too, all those scattered documents, available with the Companions in writing, were collected together, therefore, Sayyidnā Zayd رضى الله عنه and others with him did not write down any verse into these copies of the Qur'ān until such time when they did find it in those written documentations as well. As such, the fact was that other verses were found written separately too with several Companions, but this verse from Sūrah al-Aḥzāb was not found written separately with anyone else except Sayyidnā Khudhaymah رضى الله عنه.

5. After having these several standard copies of the Qur'ān prepared, Sayyidnā 'Uthmān رضى الله عنه had all copies personally kept by different Companions burnt so that all copies of the Qur'ān become uniform in terms of the script, incorporation of accepted readings and the order of chapters, leaving no room for any difference between them.

The entire ummah acknowledged this achievement of Sayyidnā 'Uthmān رضى الله عنه with admiration, and the Companions supported him in this venture. The only exception is that of Sayyidnā 'Abdullāh ibn Mas'ūd رضى الله عنه who was somewhat unhappy about it, something that cannot be taken up here in its proper perspective. Sayyidnā 'Alī رضى الله عنه says:

"Say nothing about 'Uthmān unless it be in his favour because, by God, whatever he did in connection with copies of the Qur'ān was done in the presence of all of us, and with our advice and counsel." (Fath

Steps Taken to Facilitate Recitation

After the afore-mentioned achievement of Sayyidnā ‘Uthmān رضى الله عنه, the ummah reached a consensus on the rule that it is not permissible to write the text of the noble Qur’ān using any method other than the ‘Uthmāni Script. Consequently, all copies of the Qur’ān were, later on, written in accordance with this method, and the Companions and their successors, may Allah be pleased with them all, by bringing forth repeatedly, reproductions of the standard ‘Uthmāni copies of the Qur’ān, helped spread the noble Qur’ān on a vast scale.

But, the copies of the noble Qur’ān were still devoid of dots and vowel points or desinential marks which made it difficult for non-Arabs to recite them freely. As Islam spread out wide and deep in non-Arab countries, the need to add dots and vowel points became acute, in order that people may be able to recite them easily. Several steps were taken to achieve this purpose. Their brief history is as follows:

The practice of placing dots over or under letters was just not there among early Arabs, however, the readers were so used to this style that they had practically no difficulty in reading dot-less writing to the limit that they would easily distinguish between doubtful letters by referring to the context. Specially, there was no possibility of any doubt in the case of the noble Qur’ān because its preservation did not rest on writing, rather on the strength of memories, pursuant to which, Sayyidnā ‘Uthmān رضى الله عنه had assigned Qārīs, accomplished reciters of the Qur’ān, along with its copies sent out to various parts of the Muslim world so that they could teach how to read it.

There are different reports as to who first placed dots on the copy of the noble Qur’ān. Some reports say that this feat was first accomplished by Ḥaḍrat Abū al-Aswad al-Du‘alī رحمه الله عليه (al-Burhan, 1/250). Some say he did this under the instructions of Sayyidnā ‘Alī رحمه الله وجهه (Subh al-A’sha, 3/155). There are others who have said that Ziyād ibn Abī Sufyān, the Governor of Kufah, asked him to do this. Then there is yet another report which credits Hajjaj ibn Yūsuf with this feat who did it with the help of Ḥasan al-Basrī, Yaḥya ibn Ya‘mur and Naṣr ibn ‘Aṣim al-Laythī, may Allah’s mercy be upon them all. (Tafsir al-Qurtubi, 1/63)

Marks for correct reading

In the beginning, like dots, the Qur'ān did not have any desinential marks either. Here too, reports are at variance as to who placed desinential marks first. Some say Abū al-Aswad al-Du'alī did it first while others claim that this was accomplished by Ḥajjāj ibn Yūsuf through Yaḥyā ibn Ya'mur and Naṣr ibn 'Aṣim al-Laythī. (Ibid)

Keeping in view all reports in this connection, it appears that desinential marks were first invented by Abū al-Aswad al-Du'alī, but they were not like what they are today. Instead, placed there for fathah was a dot (•) over the letter, for kasrah a dot (◌◌) under the letter, for ḍammah a dot (◌◌◌) in front of the letter; and there were two dots (◌◌ or ◌◌◌ or ◌◌◌) for tanwīn or nunnation. It was only later that Khalīl ibn Ahmad innovated the signs of hamzah (glottal stop) and tashdīd (doubling). (Subh al-A'sha, 3/160-161) After that, Ḥajjāj ibn Yūsuf requested Yaḥyā ibn Ya'mur, Naṣr ibn 'Aṣim al-Laythī and Ḥasan al-Baṣrī, may Allah's mercy be upon them all, to simultaneously place dots and desinential marks on the text of the noble Qur'ān. On this occasion, the present forms of desinential marks were chosen to replace dots as expression of case signs. The purpose was to avoid confusing them with dots intrinsically belonging to letters.

Aḥzāb or Manazil

It was the practice of Companions and their Successors that they would complete the recital of the entire Qur'ān once every week. For this purpose, they had identified fixed portions for their daily recitation which is known as 'ḥizb' or 'manzil'. Thus the entire Qur'ān was divided over seven 'aḥzāb' (plural of 'ḥizb') 'manāzil' (plural of 'manzil').

(al-Burhan, 1/250)

Ajzā' or Parts

Today, the Qur'ān is divided over thirty 'ajzā'' (plural of 'juz'') or parts. This division in parts has nothing to do with the meaning of the Qur'ān. In fact, this division in thirty equal parts has been made to serve as teaching aid for children as, it will be noticed, there are places where the designated part ends with an unfinished statement. It is difficult to say with certainty as to who brought about this division of the Qur'ān in thirty parts. Some people believe that Sayyidnā 'Uthmān رضى الله عنه had arranged to have these written in thirty different folio-units while their copies were being made, therefore, this division dates back to his time for sure. But, this humble writer was unable to find any proof of this position in the writings of earlier scholars. However, 'Allāmah Badr al-Dīn al-Zarkashī has written that the thirty parts of the Qur'ān have been known all along and they customarily appear in copies of the Qur'ān used in schools. (al-Burhan, 1/250; Manahil al-'Irfan, 1/402)

Akhmās and A'shār: The sets of Fives and Tens

Another sign used in Qur'ānic copies of early centuries was that they would write the word, khamṣ (خمس : five) or its abbreviation (خ) after every five verses (on the margin); and the word, 'Ashr (عشر : ten) or its abbreviation (ع) after every ten verses. The former kind of signs were called 'Akhmās' (a pentad or group of five) and the later, 'A'shār' (a decade or group of ten). Consequent to another difference among early scholars, these signs were considered permissible by some, and reprehensible or makrūh by others. Saying, with any degree of certainty, as to who was the first to place the signs, is difficult indeed. According to one view, Ḥajjāj ibn Yūsuf was its inventor, while another view credits this to an order of 'Abbasi Khalīfah, al-Ma'mūn (al-Burhan, 1/251). But, these two views do not appear to be sound since the idea of a'shār seems to be there during the times of the Companions. For example, Masrūq a well-known Tabi'ī, says that with Sayyidnā 'Abdullāh ibn Mas'ūd رضى الله عنه the placement of 'A'shār' markings in the copy of the Qur'ān was makrūh. (Musannaf ibn Abi Shaybah, 2/497).

Rukū' or Section

Moreover, the signs of Akhmās and A'shār were abandoned later on but, yet another sign which continues on even to this day is the sign of rukū' or section. This has been determined in terms of the contents of the noble Qur'ān whereby a sign of rukū' (the letter ع on the margin) is placed at the conclusion of a statement. In spite of his efforts, this humble writer was unable to locate anything authentic which would tell us as to who originated the rukū', and in what period. However, this much is almost certain that the purpose of this sign is to identify an average portion of verses which could be recited in one raka'ah. It is called 'rukū'' so that rukū' (bending position) could be made in ṣalāh.

after reaching this point. There are 540 rukū'āt in the whole Qur'ān. So, by reciting one rukū' in every raka'ah of tarāwih, it is possible to complete the recital of the entire Qur'ān on the night of the twenty seventh (Fatawa 'Alamgiryah, Fasl al-Tarawih, 1/94).

Rumūz al-Awqāf: Stop Signs

Another useful step taken to facilitate recitation and phonetically correct pronunciation (tilāwah and tajwīd) was to provide signs with Qur'ānic sentences which could tell the nature of making a stop (breathing) there. These signs are known as the 'rumūz' (signs) or 'alāmāt' (symbols) of awqāf (stops). Their purpose is to help a person who does not know Arabic to stop at the correct spot during his recitation, and thus, avoid causing a change in meaning by breaking his breath at the wrong spot. Most of these signs were first invented by 'Allamāh Abū 'Abdullāh Muḥammad ibn Tayfūr Sajāwandī, may Allah's mercy be upon him (Al-Nashr fi al-Qira'at al-'Ashr, 1/225). Details about these signs are given below:

⤵ : This letter Tā' is an abbreviated form of al-waqf al-mutlaq. It means that the statement stands completed at this point. Therefore, it is better to stop here.

ج : This letter Jīm is an abbreviation of al-waqf al-jā'iz and it means that it is permissible to stop here.

ز : This letter Zā' is an abbreviation of al-waqf al-mujawwaz. It means that making a stop here is correct all right, but the better choice is not to make a stop here.

ص : This letter Ṣād is an abbreviation of al-waqf al-murakhkhaṣ. It means that the statement has not yet been completed at this point but, because the sentence has become long, here is the place to breathe and stop rather than do it elsewhere (al-Mianh al-Fikriyyah, p. 63).

م : This letter mīm is an abbreviation of al-waqf al-lāzim. It means if a stop is not made here an outrageous distortion in the meaning of the verse is possible. So, it is better to stop here. Some phoneticians of the Qur'ān have also called this al-waqf al-wājib or the obligatory stop. But this is not 'wājib' of fiqh which brings sin if abandoned. In fact, the purpose is to stress that making a stop here is the most preferable of all stops (al-Nashr, 1/231).

ل : This letter lā is an abbreviation of lā taqif. It means 'do not stop here,' but it does not imply that making a stop here is impermissible, because there are certain places bearing this sign where making a stop brings no harm and making an initiation from the following word is also permissible. Therefore, the correct meaning of this sign is: If a stop is made here, it is better to go back and read over again. Initiation from the next word is not approved (al-Nashr, 1/233).

As far as the origin of these signs is concerned, it stands proved beyond doubt that they were invented by 'Allamāh Sajāwandī. In addition to these, there are some other signs as well that appear in the copies of the Qur'ān, for instance:

مع : This ma' is an abbreviation of "mu'ānaqāh". This symbol is inserted at a place where a single verse has two possible explanations. According to one explanation, the stop will be made at one given place, while according to another explanation, this will be at another place. So, a stop can be made at either one of the two places, but once a stop has been made at one place, it is not correct to stop at the other. For instance, take the verse ذٰلِكَ مَثَلُهُمْ فِي التَّوْرَةِ وَمَثَلُهُمْ فِي الْاِنْجِيلِ كَزَرْعٍ اَخْرَجَ شَطَاٌ. If a stop is made here at التَّوْرَةِ, then it is not correct to stop at الْاِنْجِيلِ and should a stop be made at الْاِنْجِيلِ, then it is not correct to stop at التَّوْرَةِ. However, if a stop is not made at both places, that will be correct. It is also known as 'al-muqābalah'. It was, first of all, pointed out by Imām Abū al-Faḍl al-Rāzī (al-Nashr, 1/237 and al-Itqan, 1/88).

سكته : This is a symbol for saktah. It means one should stop here breaking the sound but not the breath. This is generally inserted at a place where assimilated reading is likely to cause an erroneous projection of meaning.

وفنه : At this sign of waqfah, one must stop a little longer than saktah (pause). But, breath should not break here too.

ق : This letter qāf is an abbreviation of qīla 'alaihi l'waqf'. It means that some phoneticans of the Qur'ān identify a stop here while others do not.

قف : This word is 'qif' which means 'stop' and it is inserted where the reader may possibly think that a stop was not correct there.

على : This is an abbreviation of al-waṣlu awlā which means 'it is better to recite in assimilated continuity'.

وقف النبي صلى الله عليه وسلم : This is marked at places where some ḥadīth report proves that the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم stopped here while reciting.

The printing of the Holy Qur'ān

Before the advent of the printing press, all copies of the Qur'ān were calligraphed by hand, and for this purpose, there always has been, in every age, a large group of calligraphers whose sole purpose in life was nothing else except the calligraphy of the Qur'ān. The amount of hard work put in by Muslims in writing the words of the Qur'ān in ever better styles, and the way they demonstrated their intense emotional involvement with this great Book has a long and interesting history of its own which would need a regular book. This is not the appropriate place to go in such details.

With the invention of the printing press, the noble Qur'ān was first printed at Hamburg in 1113 Hijrah, a copy of which is still present in Dār al-Kutub al-Misīyyah. After that, several orientalists arranged the publication of the copies of Qur'ān but they were not received with much approval in the Muslim world. After that, Mawlay 'Uthmān was the first person among Muslims who had one manuscript of the Qur'ān printed at St. Petersburg, a Russian city, in 1787 A.D. Similarly, another manuscript was printed in Qazān also. In 1828 A.D., the Qur'ān was printed by lithography on stone slabs in the Iranian city of Tehran. After that, printed copies of the Qur'ān became common throughout the world. (Tarikh al-Qur'ān by al-Kurdi, p. 186, and 'Ulum al-Qur'ān by Dr. Subhi Saleh; Urdu Translation by Ghulam Ahmad Hariri, p. 142)

An introduction to the science of Tafsīr

Now we can turn to the requisites of 'Ilm al-Tafsīr or Exegesis. The literal meaning of 'tafsīr' in the Arabic language is 'to open' or to explain, interpret or comment. Technically, the science of tafsīr is a branch of knowledge in which the meanings of the Qur'ān are explained and its injunctions and wisdoms are described openly and clearly (al-Burhan). Addressing the Holy Prophet ﷺ, the Glorious Qur'ān says:

وَأَنْزَلْنَا إِلَيْكَ الذِّكْرَ لِتُبَيِّنَ لِلنَّاسِ مَا نُزِّلَ إِلَيْهِمْ

We revealed the Qur'ān to you so that you explain to the people what has been sent down to them(16:44).

Once again, the Qur'ān says:

لَقَدْ مَنَّ اللَّهُ عَلَى الْمُؤْمِنِينَ إِذْ بَعَثَ فِيهِمْ رَسُولًا مِّنْ أَنفُسِهِمْ يَتْلُو عَلَيْهِمْ
آيَاتِهِ وَيُزَكِّيهِمْ وَيُعَلِّمُهُمُ الْكِتَابَ وَالْحِكْمَةَ

Surely, Allah did a great favour to Muslims when He sent a Messenger to them from among them who would recite His verses before them and purify them and teach them the Book and the Wisdom (3:164).

Keeping this in view, it should be noted that the Holy Prophet ﷺ did not only teach the words of the Qur'ān, but he also explained these in details. This is why, on some occasions, the revered Companions had to devote years together in learning a single Sūrah; details will, inshallāh, appear later on.

Until such time that the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم graced this mortal world with his presence, seeking the explanation of any verse was not much of a problem. When the Companions faced any difficulty, they would turn to him and get a satisfying answer. But, later on after him, it became necessary that the tafsīr of Qur'ān be preserved as a permanent branch of knowledge so that, along with the words of the noble Qur'ān, its correct meaning as well stands protected and conserved for the Muslim ummah, and heretics and deviationists find no room there for distortion of its meanings. So, with the grace and tawfīq of Allah Almighty, this ummah accomplished this wonderful mission with such efficiency that today we can say without any fear of doubt or rejection that not only are the words of this last Book of Allah protected but also stands protected even that correct tafsīr and explanation which has reached us through the Holy Prophet ﷺ and his Companions who were ever-prepared to sacrifice their lives for him.

In what ways the Muslim ummah protected and preserved the 'ilm (science) of tafsīr? What extreme hardships they faced in this pursuit? How many stages did this struggle had to go through? All this has a long and fascinating history which cannot be taken up in the present context (for this, please see 'Ulūm al-Qur'ān', a detailed work on this subject by this humble writer). The intention here is to state briefly as to what are the sources of Qur'ānic exegesis and how these sources have been utilized in explaining the noble Qur'ān by all those countless books on 'Ilm al-Tafsīr' available in every language. These sources are six in number:

The Sources of Tafsīr

1. The Glorious Qur'ān

The first source of the knowledge of tafsīr is the Holy Qur'ān itself. Accordingly, it happens very often that a certain point which is brief and requires explanation is invariably clarified by some other verse of the Qur'ān itself. For instance, there appears that sentence of prayer in the Surah al-Fāṭihah: إِهْدِنَا الصِّرَاطَ الْمُسْتَقِيمَ صِرَاطَ الَّذِينَ أَنْعَمْتَ عَلَيْهِمْ that is, 'Guide us in the straight path - the path of those on whom You have bestowed Your Grace...' Now it is not clear here as to who are those whom Allah Almighty has blessed. But, in another verse, they have been identified very clearly where it is said:

فَأُولَٰئِكَ مَعَ الَّذِينَ أَنْعَمَ اللَّهُ عَلَيْهِمْ مِنَ النَّبِيِّينَ وَالصِّدِّيقِينَ وَالشُّهَدَاءِ
وَالصَّالِحِينَ

So, these are the people whom Allah Almighty has blessed, being the prophets, their true followers, the martyrs (in the way of Allah) and the righteous. (4:69)

Therefore, when respected commentators explain some verse, they first check to see if a tafsīr of this verse is already there elsewhere in the noble Qur'ān itself. If it is there, they elect to go by it as their first choice.

2. The Ḥadīth

The words and the deeds of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم are called Ḥadīth, and as it has been stated earlier, Allah Almighty had sent him with the Qur'ān solely for the purpose that he should explain to people, openly and explicitly, the correct meanings of the noble Qur'ān. Consequently, he discharged this duty with grace and excellence both by his words and deeds. In fact his whole blessed life is, after all, a practical tafsīr of Qur'ān. It is for this reason that respected commentators, in order to understand the Qur'ān, have laid the greatest emphasis on Ḥadīth as the second source, and it is in the light of ahadīth that they have determined the meanings of the Book of Allah. However, because all sorts of narrations - sound, weak, and fabricated - are included in Ḥadīth, therefore research-oriented commentators do not accept a narration as trustworthy until it withstands the principles used in the scrutiny of Ḥadīth narrations. Hence, finding a ḥadīth report somewhere, looking at it, and then employing it to determine a certain tafsīr is not correct, because that report could be weak, even contrary to other stronger reports. This is really a very delicate matter, and venturing therein is the exclusive prerogative of those who have spent their years in mastering these fields of knowledge.

3. The Reports from the Ṣaḥābah

The noble Ṣaḥābah (Companions), may Allah be pleased with them all, had received their education directly from the Holy Prophet ﷺ. In addition to that, they were personally present on the scene when Wahy came, and they had themselves witnessed all circumstances and backgrounds of the revelation of the Qur'ān. Therefore, naturally, the recorded statements of these blessed souls are far more authentic and trustworthy in explaining the noble Qur'ān; the later people cannot take that place. Hence, in the case of verses the explanation of which is not found in the Qur'ān or Ḥadīth, statements recorded from the noble Companions are given the highest priority. Consequently, if there is a consensus of Companions on the explanation of a certain verse, the commentators follow just that, and explaining it in any way, other than that, is not permissible. By the way, if the statements of Companions differ in the interpretation (tafsīr) of a certain verse, then the commentators who come later examine them in the light of arguments and determine as to which interpretation or explanation can be given preference. In order to handle this situation, there is an important corpus of rules and regulations already codified under the sciences of Usūl al-Fiqh, Usūl al-Ḥadīth and Usūl al-Tafsīr a detailed discussion of which is not appropriate here.

4. The Reports from the Tābi'īn or Successors

After Companions (Ṣaḥābah) come the Successors (Tābi'īn). The later are those who have learnt the tafsīr of Qur'ān from the Companions. Therefore, their statements too have great importance in the science of tafsīr, although there exists a difference among scholars whether or not the statements of the tābi'īn are decisive evidences in tafsīr (al-Itqan, 2/179) but their importance is something which cannot be denied.

5. The Arabic Language

Since the noble Qur'ān was revealed in the Arabic language, therefore, in order to explain the Qur'ān, it is necessary to have a complete mastery over the language. There are several verses of the noble Qur'ān in the background of which there happen to be just no attending circumstances of revelations, or any juristic or scholastic question, therefore, in their tafsīr or explanation, the sayings of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم or the statements of the ṣaḥābah and tābi'īn are not reported. For that reason, the only means through which these can be explained is that of the Arabic language, and it is on the basis of language alone that they are elucidated. Besides that, should there be some difference in the tafsīr of a certain verse, then, in that case too, the science of linguistics is used to run a test of veracity between varying opinions.

6. Deliberation and Deduction

The last source of tafsīr consists of deliberation and deduction. The subtleties and mysteries of the noble Qur'ān are an ocean with no shore, no end. Therefore, the more a person, who has been blessed with insight into the Islamic sciences by Allah Almighty, deliberates in it, the more he discovers ever-new mysteries and subtleties. As a result of this, commentators do present the outcomes of their respective deliberations as well, but mysteries and subtleties so described are found acceptable only when they do not go against the five sources mentioned above. So, should a person, while explaining the Qur'ān, come out with a subtle point or independent judgment which is contrary to the Qur'ān and Sunnah, Consensus (Ijmā'), Language, or the statements of Companions and Successors, or stands in conflict with another principle of Shari'ah, that will then have no credence. Some mystics (رحمهم الله) had started describing such mysteries and subtleties in tafsīr, but investigative scholars of the ummah did not consider these trustworthy because the personal opinion of any person against the basic principles of the Qur'ān, Sunnah and Shari'ah has obviously no weight. (al-Itqan, 2/184)

The rules relating to Israelite reports

Judaica or Isrā'īliyyāt are narratives which have reached us through Jews and Christians. It may be noted that early commentators used to write down all sorts of narrations which reached them from an identified source. Many of these narrations were straight Judaica. Therefore, it is equally necessary to know what they really are. The reality is that some noble Companions and their Successors first belonged to the religion of the people of the Book, later on when they became Muslims and learnt the Qur'ān, they came across several events relating to past communities in the Qur'ān and which they had also read in the books of their previous religion. Therefore, while referring to the events mentioned in the Qur'ān they would describe other details before Muslims which they had seen in the books of their old religion. These very details have entered into the books of tafsir under the name of 'Isrā'īliyyāt'. Ḥāfiẓ ibn Kathīr, who is one of the authentic research scholars, has written that there are three kinds of 'Isrā'īliyyāt':

1. Narrations the truth of which is proved from other evidences of the Qur'ān and Sunnah, for instance, the drowning of Pharaoh and the ascent of Sayyidnā Mūsā عليه السلام onto Mount Tūr (Sinai).

2. Narrations the falsity of which is proved from other evidences of the Qur'ān and Sunnah, for instance, it appears in Judaic narrations that Sayyidnā Sulaymān عليه السلام had become (God forbid) an apostate in his later years. Its refutation is proved from the Qur'ān. It is said there: 'وَمَا كَفَرَ سُلَيْمَانُ وَلَكِنَّ الشَّيَاطِينَ كَفَرُوا'. 'It was not Sulaymān who became an infidel, but the devils did become infidels' (2:102). To cite yet another example, it finds mention in Judaic narrations that (God forbid) Sayyidnā Dawūd عليه السلام (David) committed adultery with the wife of his general (Uriah), or, having him killed through all sorts of contrivances, ended up marrying his wife. This too is a blatant lie, and taking such narrations to be false is imperative.

3. Narrations regarding which the Qur'ān, the Sunnah and the Shari'ah are silent, such as the injunctions of Torah etc., are subjects about which silence is to be observed as taught by the Holy Prophet ﷺ

: 'Neither confirm, nor falsify'. There is, however, a difference of opinion among scholars whether or not reporting such narrations is permissible. Ḥāfiẓ ibn Kathīr has given the decisive word by saying that reporting these is permissible all right but doing so is useless because they cannot be taken as authentic. (Muqaddamah Tafsīr ibn Kathīr)

A misconception about the tafsir of Qur'ān

Hopefully, details given above have made it clear that the tafsīr (exegesis or interpretation) of the noble Qur'ān is an extremely delicate and difficult undertaking for which getting to know the Arabic language alone is not enough. In fact, it is necessary to have expertise in all related branches of knowledge. Therefore, scholars say that a mufasssir or commentator of the Qur'ān must have vast and deep knowledge of the syntax, etymology, rhetoric, and literature of the Arabic language, as well as, that of prophetic Traditions, principles governing jurisprudence and exegesis, doctrinal articles of belief and scholastics. The reason is that one cannot arrive at correct conclusions while explaining the Qur'ān unless there be that adequacy in these fields of knowledge.

It is regrettable that a dangerous epidemic has overtaken Muslims lately whereby many people have started taking the sole reading ability of Arabic sufficient for the tafsīr (interpretation) of the Qur'ān. As a result, anyone who gets to read ordinary Arabic starts passing out opinions in the domain of Qur'ānic exegesis. Rather, it has been noticed on occasions that people having just passable familiarity with the Arabic language, and who have yet to master their Arabic to perfection, take it upon themselves to engage in explaining the Qur'ān following their whims, even going to the limit of finding faults with classical commentators. Bad come to worse, there are some subtle tyrants who would, by simply reading the translation, imagine that they have become scholars of the Qur'ān, not even feeling shy of criticising commentators of great stature.

It should be understood very clearly that this is a highly dangerous pattern of behaviour which, in matters of religion, leads to fatal straying. As regards secular arts and sciences, everyone can claim to understand that should a person simply learn the English language and go on to study books of medical science, he would not be acknowledged as a physician by any reasonable person anywhere in the world, and certainly not trustworthy enough to take care of somebody's life unless he has been educated and trained in a medical college. Therefore, having learnt English is not all one needs to become a doctor.

Similarly, should anyone knowing English hope to become an engineer just by reading through engineering books, it is clear that no sane person in this world would accept him as an engineer. The reason is that this technical expertise cannot be acquired simply by learning the English language. It would, rather, need a formal training in the discipline under the supervision and guidance of expert teachers. When these stringent requirements are inevitable in order to become a doctor or engineer, how can the learning of Arabic language alone become sufficient in matters relating to the Qur'an and Ḥadīth? In every department of life, everyone knows and acts upon the principle that every art or science has its own particular method of learning and its own peculiar conditions. Unless these are fulfilled, the learner's opinion in given arts and sciences will not be considered trustworthy. If that is so, how can the Qur'an and the Sunnah become so unclaimed a field of inquiry that there be no need to acquire any art or science in order to explain them, and anyone who so wishes starts passing out opinions in this matter?

Some people say that the Qur'an has itself stated that: وَلَقَدْ يَسَّرْنَا الْقُرْآنَ لِلذِّكْرِ : 'And surely We have made the Qur'an easy for the sake of good counsel.' And since the noble Qur'an is a simple book, its explanation hardly needs much of a support from any art or science. But this argument is terribly fallacious, which is, in itself, based on lack of intellect and plenty of superficiality. The fact is that the verses of the Qur'an are of two kinds. Firstly, there are the verses that offer general good counsel, relate lesson-oriented events and introduce subjects dealing with taking of warning and acting on sound advice. Examples of this are the mortality of the world, the accounts of Paradise and Hell, the discourses likely to create the fear of God and the concern for the Hereafter, and other very simple realities of life. Verses of this kind are undoubtedly easy and anyone who knows the Arabic language can benefit from their good counsel by understanding them.

It is in relation to teachings of this kind that, in the verse cited above, it was said that 'We have made them easy'. Hence, the word لَدِكُمْ (for the sake of good counsel) in the verse itself is pointing out towards this meaning.

Contrary to this, the other kind consists of verses which include injunctions, laws, articles of faith and intellectual subjects. Understanding verses of this kind as they should be rightfully understood and deducing and formulating injunctions and rulings from them cannot be done by just any person unless one has the insight and permeating reach into the Islamic areas of knowledge. This is why the noble Companions, whose mother-tongue was Arabic and they did not have to go anywhere to get trained into understanding Arabic, used to spend long periods of time in learning the Qur'ān from the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم. 'Allamāh al-Suyuti has reported from Imām Abū 'Abd al-Raḥman Sulami that the Companions, who formally learned the Qur'ān from the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم such as Sayyidnā 'Uthmān ibn 'Affān and 'Abdullāh ibn Mas'ūd and others, have told us that, after having learnt ten verses of the Qur'ān from the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم, they would not proceed on to the next verses until such time that they had covered all that was intellectually and practically involved in the light of these verses. They used to say:

فَتَعَلَّمْنَا الْقُرْآنَ وَالْعِلْمَ وَالْعَمَلَ جَمِيعًا

We have learnt the Qur'ān, knowledge and action all in one.

Consequently, as reported in Mu'aṭṭā' of Imām Mālik, Sayyidnā 'Abdullāh ibn 'Umar رضى الله عنه spent full eight years memorizing Sūrah al-Baqarah alone and, as in the Musnad of Aḥmad, Sayyidnā Anas رضى الله عنه says that 'one of us who would learn Sūrah al-Baqarah and Sūrah 'āl-'Imrān had his status enormously raised among us.' (Ibid)

Worth noticing is the fact that these noble Companions whose mother-tongue was Arabic, who had the highest degree of expertise in poetry and letters and who would have no difficulty in having very long qaṣīdah poems perfectly committed to their memories with the least of effort, why would they need, just to memorize the Qur'ān and understand its meanings, as long a time as eight years, and that too, for mastering one Sūrah? The only reason for this was that proficiency in the Arabic language was not enough to have a learning of the noble Qur'ān and areas of knowledge bearing on it. In order to do that, it was also necessary to seek the benefit of the teaching and the company of the Holy Prophet ﷺ. Now this is so obvious that the noble Companions inspite of having an expertise in the Arabic language and notwithstanding their being direct witnesses to the revelation, still needed the process of going through formal education at the feet of the blessed master in order to become the 'alims of the Qur'ān, how then, after all these hundreds of years following the revelation of the Qur'ān, just by cultivating an elementary familiarity with Arabic, or by simply looking at translations, can anyone claim to having become a commentator of the Qur'ān? What a monstrous audacity and what a tragic joke with knowledge and religion! People who opt for such audacity should remember well that the Holy Prophet ﷺ has said:

من قال فى القرآن بغير علم فليتبوا مقعده فى النار

Whoever says anything about the Qur'an without knowledge, then he should make his abode in Hell. (Abu Daw'ud, as in al-Itqan, 2/179)

And he has also said:

من تكلم فى القرآن برأيه فأصاب فقد أخطأ

Whoever talks about the Qur'an on the basis of his opinion, and even if says something true in it, still he made a mistake.

(Abu Daw'ud, Nasa'i)

Famous Commentaries of the Qur'ān

Countless commentaries of the Glorious Qur'ān have been written since the blessed period of the Prophethood. In fact, no other book of the world has been served as much as the noble Qur'ān. Introducing all these commentaries is not possible even in some detailed book, much less in a brief introduction such as this. But, what we wish to do here is to introduce very briefly the major commentaries that have served as particular sources of Ma'ariful Qur'ān and which have been cited there time and again. Although, during the period the above commentary was being written, many commentaries and hundreds of books were constantly referred to, but here, the purpose is to limit the introduction to commentaries the references to which will appear

Tafsīr ibn Jarīr

The real name of this Tafsīr is Jāmi' al-Bayān and it was compiled by 'Allamāh Abū Ja'far Muḥammad ibn Jarīr al-Ṭabarī (died 310 Hijrah). 'Allamāh Ṭabarī is a highly rated commentator, muḥaddith (ḥadīth expert) and historian. It is said that he kept writing for forty years continuously and used to write forty pages every day (al-Bīdayah wa al-Nihayah, v. 11, p. 145). There are charges of being Shi'ah against him, but researchers have refuted this charge and the truth of the matter is that he is a highly regarded scholar of the followers of the Sunnah, rather one of the Shi'ite scholars.

Being in thirty volumes, his Tafsīr enjoys the status of a basic source for later commentaries. In his explanation of the verses, he quotes different scholars and then goes on to prove the position which, according to him, is weightier, of course, with arguments and proofs. It must, however, be admitted that narrations of all sorts, sound and weak, have found a place in his commentary. Because of this, not every narration presented by him can be relied upon. In reality, he was aiming through his commentary to collect and compile all narrations that could become available to him, so that this collected material could be put to use later on. Conceded is the fact that he has given the chain of reporters along with each narration so that whoever wishes to investigate into the chain of narrators could do so and decide for himself if the narrations are true or false.

Tāfsīr ibn Kathīr

Ḥāfiẓ 'Imād al-dīn Abū al-Fidā' Ismā'il ibn Kathīr al-Dimashqī al-Shaffī (died 774 Hijrah), a distinguished research scholar of the eighth century, is the author of this commentary. It has been published in four volumes. Here emphasis has been laid on explanatory narrations. A special feature is his criticism as ḥadīth expert on different narrations, and from this point of view, this book holds a distinct place among all books of Tafsīr.

Tafsīr Al-Qurṭubī

Its full name is Al-Jāmi' li-Ahkām al-Qur'ān. It was written by the famous learned writer and research scholar of Andalusia (Spain), Abū 'Abdullāh Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad Abi Bakr ibn Farah al-Qurṭubī (died 671 Hijrah). He was a follower of the Mālikī school of fiqh and was known all over for his ibādah and piety. The fact is that the basic objective of this book was to deduce juristic injunctions and rulings from the Qur'ān yet, while doing so, he has also provided the explanation of verses, research into difficult words, discussion of diacritical marks and elegance of style and composition, and related Traditions and Reports in his Tafsīr, and quite ably so. This book is in twelve volumes and has been published repeatedly.

Al-Tafsīr al-Kabīr

This is the work of Imām Fakhr al-din al-Razi (died 606 Hijrah). Its real name is Mafatih al-Ghayb, but is popularly known as 'Tafsīr Kabīr'. Imām Rāzī is an imām of the theology of Islam, therefore, great emphasis has been laid in his Tafsīr on rational and scholastic debates and on the refutation of false sects. But, the truth is that this Tafsīr is, in its own way, a unique key to the Qur'ān as well. Furthermore, the pleasing way in which the meanings of the Qur'ān have been clarified and the mutual link of the Qur'ānic verses established, is all too praise-worthy. Most likely, Imām Rāzī himself wrote down his Tafsīr as far as Sūrah al-Fath. Onwards from there, he could not complete. So, the remaining part of the Tafsīr, from Sūrah al-Fath to the end, was completed by Qādī Shihāb al-Din ibn Khalīl al-Khawli al-Dimashqī (died 639 Hijrah) or Shaykh Najm al-Dīn Ahmad ibn Muḥammad al-Qamūlī (died 777 Hijrah). (Kashaf al-Zunūn v. 2, p. 477)

Imām Rāzī has particularly emphasised scholastic debates and the refutation of false sects in accordance with the dictates of his time, and while doing so, his discussions have become too lengthy at several places, therefore, some people have made the following comment on his Tafsīr: فيه كل شيء الا التفسير: 'There is everything in this (book) except the Tafsīr.' But this comment is a terrible injustice to Tafsīr Kabīr. That which is the truth has already been stated above, namely, that this Tafsīr enjoys a high rating as far as the resolution of the meanings of the Qur'ān is concerned. But, there are places where he has explained verses of the Qur'ān while moving away from the consensus of the ummah, however, such places are very thinly spread out in this book that goes on to eight volumes.

This was written by 'Allāmah Abū Hayyān al-Gharnāṭī al-Andalūsī (died 754 Hijrah) who was a master of syntax and rhetoric in addition to other Islamic fields of learning. As a result of this, his own Tafsīr is soaked in syntax and rhetoric. He places special stress on investigating into the words of every verse, the difference in structures and on points of eloquence.

Aḥkām al-Qur'ān by al-Jaṣṣāṣ

This was written by Imām Abū Bakr al-Jaṣṣāṣ al-Rāzī (died 370 Hijrah) who occupies a distinguished place among Hanafi jurists. The deduction of juristic injunctions and rulings from the noble Qur'ān is the subject of this book. Instead of explaining verses in serial continuity, he has taken up the juristic details as called for by verses which consist of juristic injunctions. Several other books have also been written on this subject, but this book enjoys a prominent place among those.

Tafsīr al-Durr al-Manthūr

This was written by 'Allāmah Jalāl al-Dīn al-Suyūṭī (died 910 Hijrah). Its full name is 'al-Durr al-Manthūr fī al-Tafsīr bi l'Ma'thūr.' Here 'Allāmah al-Suyūṭī has tried to collect all narrations about the tafsīr of Qur'ān he was able to find. Several ḥadīth scholars such as Hāfiz ibn Jarīr, Imām Baghawī, Ibn Mardūwayh, Ibn Hibbān and Ibn Mājah and others had already worked in this area on their own. 'Allāmah al-Suyūṭī has assembled narrations presented by all of them in this book. But, rather than refer to complete chain of authorities along with narrations, he has found it sufficient to simply name the particular author who has presented that narration under his authority so that, if needed, one could go back to the work and investigate into the ultimate authority. Since his purpose was to put together a mass of narrations, as a result of which, all sorts of narrations, sound and weak, have found their way into his book. Hence, every narration allowed entry by him cannot be considered reliable without investigation into its authority. There are occasions when 'Allāmah al-Suyūṭī does indicate with each narration the degree of its authority as well. But, as he is known to be fairly easy-going in respect of ḥadīth critique, it is still difficult to fully rely on that too.

Al-Tafsīr al-Mazhari

This was written by Qādi Thanāullah Pānīpatī (died 1225 Hijrah). He has named this Tafsīr as 'Al-Tafsīr al-Mazhari' after the name of his spiritual master, Mirzā Mazhar Jān-e-Jānān Dehlavī. This Tafsīr of his is very simple and clear, and extremely useful to locate brief explanations of Qur'ānic verses. Along with the elucidation of Qur'ānic words, he has also taken up related narrations in ample details, and in doing so, he has made an effort to accept narrations after much more scrutiny as compared with other commentaries.

Rūḥ al-Ma'ānī

The full name of this Tafsīr is 'Ruh al-Ma'ani fi Tafsīr al-Qur'ān al-'Azim wa al-Sab' al-Mathani' and it was written by 'Allāmah Maḥmud al-Ālūsī (died 1270 Hijrah), the famous scholar of the last period of Baghdad, and comprises of thirty volumes. He has made his best possible effort to make this Tafsīr comprehensive. There are exhaustive discussions on language, syntax, letters, style, and on jurisprudence, articles of faith, scholastics, philosophy, astronomy, mysticism and related narratives of Traditions. He has made an attempt to leave no intellectual aspect pertaining to a verse unexplained. In the case of ḥadīth narratives as well, the author of this work has been more cautious as compared to other commentators. From this angle, this is a very comprehensive commentary, and no future venture in connection with the Tafsir of the Qur'ān can now afford to ignore its help.

INTRODUCTION

الْحَمْدُ لِلَّهِ وَكَفَى وَسَلَامٌ عَلَى عِبَادِهِ الَّذِينَ اصْطَفَى

Praise belongs to Allah who suffices. And peace be on His chosen slaves.

The Qurān is a blessing of Allah for all mankind. No amount of worldly wealth can replace it. It is that piece of cure which brings blessings in both the worlds through its recital, just looking at it, listening to it or reading over to others, learning it or teaching it, practicing its commands and propagating and diffusing its teachings in any manner whatever.

A Hadith is transmitted in Saḥeeḥ Muslim as narrated by Sayyidina Uqbah Ibn 'Aamir رضي الله عنه they were seated one day at Suffah when the Prophet ﷺ came to them and said, "Does any of you love that he should go every morning to the market of) Buṭḥān or Aqeeq and bring two she-camels of the best kind without committing a sin or severing ties of relationship?" They said, "O Messenger of Allah, every one of us would like to do that. "So, he said, "If anyone goes to the Mosque everyday and learns two verses (of the Qurān) or recites them then, that is better for him than two she-camels. And, if he learns three verses, that is better than three she-camels, and learning four verses is better than four she-camels."

This Hadith is just one example of the encouragement that the Prophet ﷺ gave to his ummah to recite the Quran to interpret its Message, to put it into practice and to diffuse its knowledge worldwide. The books of Ahadith are full with other Ahadith of the same Message. This is why the ummah has done great service to the Qur'an and its sciences and made extraordinary efforts to preserve its words and meanings. If we probe into these efforts, we are held spellbound.

Efforts to understand and interpret the Qurān are one thing, the ummah has left no stone unturned to learn and preserve correct pronunciation and delivery of its words and the diacritical marks over its letters. They have founded a science of this subject and we do not find an example of that in any other language or religion of the world. Take the science of Tajweed alone. Whole libraries are found on the subject of correct reading of the Qur'an.

In short, of the many ways in which service is rendered to the Qurān, one is through the books on the sciences of the Qurān.

This is a vast knowledge and it underlines the principles and basis of exegesis. It tells us, how the Qur'an was revealed to the Prophet ﷺ, the reality of wahy, the sequence of revelation, the period during which the whole of it was revealed, the distinction of Makkan and Madinan surahs, background of revelation and how it helps in interpreting the Qur'an, the abrogated verses of the Qurān. Meaning of many letters and many Recital of Qurān, its subjects, manner in which Allah has preserved it, the stages which its writing and printing has gone through, principles and manners of exegesis, correct way to understand it and the errors that could mislead anyone. Many other similar questions are answered in the books of Uloom al Qur'an.

There are books on this subject in Arabic. They include: al Burhan fi uloom il Qur'an, 4 vols. By 'Allamah Zakashī, al Itqān, 2 vols. by Allamah Suyūti, Manahil al Irfan, 2 vols. By Shaikh Zarqāni. These books are well-known and reliable to this day and serve as source for subsequent works and study. There are innumerable books in Urdu, too that cover this topic. The most comprehensive and distinctive is al Bayan fi uloom il Qur'an by Abdul Haq Haqqani رحمه الله عليه.

However, in different times the requirements also differ. With the influence of western thought and ideas, fresh question came to be raised and had to be answered. The subject had to be dealt with from a new angle. For a long time it was felt that another book should be written with a fresh approach but I had not an iota of idea that I would have some part in it.

This honour seemed to be written for me. The background of the story is that my respected father Mawlana Mufti Muḥammad Shafi رحمه الله عليه wrote the Urdu exegesis of the Qur'an, Ma'arif ul Qur'an which is published in eight volumes. We can say without the least hesitancy that it is an unmatched urdu Tafseer on the pattern of the righteous predecessors for the modern times. And Allah granted it immense approval, when the second edition was about to be printed. My respected father commanded me to write down an introduction to it on the important points of the sciences of the Qurān.

I began to write it down in obedience to him and while I was writing it down the earlier wish arose in me again and the introduction became lengthy in spite of my efforts to shorten it. When the manuscript crossed two hundred pages, I realized that that was too lengthy an introduction for the Tafseer, and many important points had yet not been touched!. So, on the advice of my respected father, I summarized the introduction for the Tafseer and it was published with that. The lengthier work became part of a separate book by itself. However, my engagement in other tasks caused a delay in completing the book. When it was ready, I had included in it almost all the material I had in mind for the book.

While I cannot yet say it the book has everything that is necessary for the present times, yet I have full hope in Allah that as far as the subject is concerned, it includes much of what we need to teach today. I have had to consult many books to collect together the answers to many known questions and to include fresh ones. If they meet the approval of the learned then it is merely a favour of Allah, otherwise, I have the satisfaction of at least having initiated an effort for other scholars to complete it. If it helps anyone in understanding the Quran, I will have received my reward in full.

I request readers to pray that Allah grant approval to my humble effort and let it be an asset for me in the hereafter. Aameen.

وَمَا تَوْفِيقِي إِلَّا بِاللَّهِ الْعَلِيِّ الْعَظِيمِ

And only Allah is the One who enables, the Exalted, the Magnificent!.

INTRODUCTION

THE NAME QURĀN AND THE REASON FOR IT

¹Allāmah Abul Ma'ālī has listed 55 names of the ²Holy Qurān. Some scholars have counted them to be more than 90, but the fact is that they have reached these numbers by considering the various attributes of the Qurān as its names. But actually the names of the Qurān are limited only to five names viz,

1. AL-QURĀN	The Reading
2. AL-FURQĀN	The Criterion
3. AZ-ZIKR	The Advice
4. AL-KITĀB	The Book
5. ³ AT-TANZEEL	The Revelation

The Holy Qurān itself has used these five words as its proper⁴ names. Of these the most popular name is "Qurān,"

1. Abul Ma'ālī (ma'ālī's father), real name was 'Azizy bin 'Abdul Malik and shaydhlah was the Title, was a Shafa'ī scholar in the fifth century Hijri, died in 494. AH. 'Aallamah Zarkashy and Suyūti have quoted his book "Al-Burhān-fī-Mushkilātil Qur'an: at numerous occassions.
 2. See "Al-Itqān fī 'Ulloom il Qurān" by Allama Suyūti, v.1, p51, Cairo edition. 1368 H.
 3. See "Manhil-al-'Irfān", by Zarqāni, v.1, p2. Printed at 'Īsa-al-bābi Al-Halbi 1372 AH.
 4. For Al-Furqān see Q:3:1, for Az-Zikr Q:3:58, 14:6, p8: etc., for Al-Kitāb Q 2:1, 16:64, 89 etc, for Al-Tanzeel, Q 26:5, 56:80, 69:69 etc.

so Allah Himself has called it with this name in not less than ⁵sixty-one places.

The word Qurān is derived from Qara'a Yaqra'u (قرأ) (يقرأ) which literally ⁶means. "To collect" but later on this word came to be used for "Reading" because the words and letters are collected together while reading something. The masdar or verbal noun is قراءة and قرآن. Allah says:

إِنَّ عَلَيْنَا جَمْعَهُ وَقُرْآنَهُ

Surely upon Us rests the collecting thereof, and the reciting thereof. (al-Qiyamah, 75:17)

Also, in Arabic language sometimes verbal noun is used in the meaning of its passive participle. The Qurān is so named in the same sense, that is, ⁷"The Book that is read".

Various reasons have been advanced for giving it the name, Qurān. It seems more appropriate that this name has been given to the Book of Allah to refute the unbelievers of Arabia, because they used to say,

لَا تَسْمَعُوا لِهَذَا الْقُرْآنِ وَالْغَوْا فِيهِ

Listen not to this Qurān, but boo loudly during its recital. (Fussilat, 41:26)

Thus by giving it the name "Qurān", has been proclaimed that its Message cannot be suppressed by such ridiculous means. The Book is revealed to be read and it shall be read till the Last Day.

6. "Al-Mufradāt fī Gharīb al-Qurān" by Raghīb Isphahani, P. 411, printed at Ashāl Maṭābī, Karachi 1380 AH.

7. There are several other views regarding the origin of this word, but they are not free of doubts. For details see, al-Itqān, v.1, p52, and Manā-hil-al-Irfān v.1, p7.

Hence it is now an established fact that the Holy Qurān is the most widely read Book in the world.

However, the conventional definition of "Qurān" has been made in the following words:

المنزل على الرسول المكتوب في المصاحف المنقول إلينا نقلاً
متواتراً بلا شبهة.

The words of Allah that were revealed to His Messenger ﷺ, written in Books and narrated continuously from him with out any doubt.⁸

This definition is unanimously accepted by all the learned scholars without any difference of opinion.

FACTS ABOUT WAHY

(DIVINE REVELATION)

Since the Qurān has been sent down to the Holy Prophet Muhammad ﷺ through Divine revelations or "Wahy" (وحي), it is necessary at the outset to know certain things about "Wahy".

NEED FOR WAHY

Every Muslim knows that Allah has sent Man in this world for trial, and, after assigning certain duties to him, the entire universe has been placed at his service. Hence two things become imperative for Man to do after he has come to this world. First, he must make use of the Universe around him in the right manner, and secondly while using these things he must keep in view the Commandments of Allah and do nothing against His will.

For both these things he needs "knowledge". Unless he knows the reality of this universe and the uses of things present therein, and the way he can make use of them, he cannot get any benefit out of them. Further; it will be impossible for him to live in accordance with the pleasure of Allah unless he knows what He likes, and what He does not like.

Thus, when Allah created Man, He complemented his creation with three such things as give him knowledge of the foregoing. For this purpose, along with human beings, He, Allah, also created three other things through which they would come to know about this. First, the five sense organs, i.e. eyes, ears, nose, mouth and limbs; secondly, the faculty of reasoning, intellect or wisdom; and thirdly, the Divine revelation or Wahy. Hence a man learns many things through his senses and many more through his intellect. Those that cannot be learnt through these two media are brought to his knowledge through Wahy. (Divine Revelation).

The three sources of knowledge are so arranged that each one of them has a definite range and fixed sphere of activity beyond which it does not work. Hence those things that a man learns through his senses cannot be perceived through reason alone. For example, if a man is sitting in front of me I know through my eyes that he is a human being. My eyes also tell me that he is fair coloured, has a broad forehead, black hair, thin lips and oval face. But if I do not use my sensory faculties keeping my eyes closed and rely on my mental abilities alone to know the colour and structural built of this man, it will be impossible.

Similarly, things that are learnt through intellect cannot be perceived by the senses alone; For example, I know about that same person that he has a mother, and also that he has been created by Someone, even though neither is his mother present before me nor can I see his Creator, but my intellect tells me that this person could not be born by himself. If, however, I want to have this knowledge through my eyes rather than intellect, it would be impossible because the scene of his creation and birth cannot come before my eyes.

Thus, as far as the five senses are concerned, our intellect does not give us any guidance but its activity starts from where the scope of the senses ends. But even the scope of intellectual faculties is not limitless; it ends at a certain point, And there are many things which cannot be known either by senses or by intellect. Taking the example of this same person, our intellect told us who created him, but why was he created, what duties have been assigned to him by the Creator, which of his deeds are liked by Allah and which are disliked, are questions which cannot be answered even jointly by the senses and intellect. It is the channel by Allah to provide answer to such questions that is known as "Wahy" (Divine Revelations), which is revealed to a selected person appointed as His Messenger whom His discourses are revealed. "Wahy" is the highest source of knowledge that provides answers to questions related to his life and which he solved through his senses or intellect, he must have answers to these questions.

This also clarifies that intellect and observation alone are not sufficient for the guidance of man but the need of "Wahy" is an inescapable requirement for his guidance. Since the need of "Wahy" is felt, where mental faculties fail to provide guidance. Human intellect may not necessarily comprehend everything related to Wahy. Just as perception of colour of a thing not within the scope of intellect but it is done by senses, Similarly transmission of knowledge about many religious beliefs is the function of Wahy and it will not be wise to rely upon intellect alone for this perception.⁹

MEANING OF WAHY

Keeping in view the above introduction, ponder over the substance and reality of "Wahy". وحي and ايحاء are Arabic words and their meanings in dictionaries have been described as "To signify something quickly", whether by way of enigma or metaphor, by way of a meaningless sound, by moving a part of the body, or by way of

9. Only brief hints have been made here about the need for "wahy" For a detailed discussion on this subject please consult, "Introduction by Abi Shakoor Salimi (p3-72) and" 'Uloom-ul-Qurān' by Mawlana Shamsul Haq Afghani p3-18, published by Idara Madrasah Farooquiyah Bahawalpur 1389AH.

inscriptions and writings. These words apply in all these situations.¹⁰ Thus, the Holy Qurān uses the word in the same meaning while describing the incident of Zakariyya (zachria):

بُكْرَةً وَعَشِيًّا

So he went forth to his people from the sanctuary, then he beckoned to them "Glorify (your Lord) morning and evening". (Surah Maryam, 19:11)

Evidently such gestures are meant to infuse something in the heart of one's audience. The word Waḥy and Ī-ḥā' un therefore, began to be used in this meaning. In a number of verses of the Holy Qurān this very meaning is intended. For example,

وَأَوْحَىٰ رَبُّكَ إِلَى النَّحْلِ أَنْ اتَّخِذِي مِنَ الْجِبَالِ بُيُوتًا

"And your Lord revealed to the bee (saying): "Build your homes in the mountains..." (An-Nahl, 16:68)

So much so that the word has been used in The Qurān even for the suggestions inspired by the devils,

وَكَذَلِكَ جَعَلْنَا لِكُلِّ نَبِيٍّ عَدُوًّا شَيَاطِينَ الْإِنْسِ وَالْجِنِّ
يُوحِي بَعْضُهُمْ إِلَى بَعْضٍ

And thus did We appoint to every Prophet an enemy-states of men and jinn, inspiring one another with gilded speech... (Al-An'ām, 6:112)

And also,

10: Az-Zubaydi, Taj ul-'urūs v.1, p384 Dar ul Libya, Banghāzi 1386 AH. Ar-Rāghib: al-Mufradāt.

وَإِنَّ الشَّيَاطِينَ لَيُوحُونَ إِلَىٰ أَوْلِيَائِهِمْ لِيُجَادِلُوكُمْ

And certainly the satans are ever inspiring their friends to dispute with you. (Al-An'am, 6:121)

And Allah had addressed the angels again with word I-ha'un.

إِذْ يُوحِي رَبُّكَ إِلَى الْمَلَائِكَةِ أَنِّي مَعَكُمْ

(Recall), when your Lord, (O Prophet), inspired the angels (saying), "I am with you..." (Al-Anfal, 8:12)

Anything that Allah prompts into the heart of those other than Prophets is also expressed by the same word

وَأَوْحَيْنَا إِلَىٰ أُمِّ مُوسَىٰ أَنْ أَرْضِعِيهِ

And We revealed to Mūsā's mother saying, "Suckle him..." (Al-Qasas, 28:7)

But these are literal expressions of this word. In religious terminology, however,¹¹ "Wahy" is defined as,

كَلَامُ اللَّهِ الْمُنَزَّلُ عَلَى نَبِيٍّ مِّنْ أَنْبِيَآئِهِ -

"The Words of Allah that are sent down to any of His Prophets".

It must be borne in mind that the word "Wahy" has come to be used in this sense to such an extent that its application to anyone other than a Prophet is not proper. 'Allāmah Anwar Shah Kashmiri رحمه الله عليه has stated that Wahy un and I-Ha-un are two different words and there is a minor distinction in the meaning of the two words. I-Ha'un has a general application, and apart from denoting

11: 'Umdatul Qari Li-Sharāh Saḥīḥi Bukhārī v.1, p18, Dārut Taba-al-Āmirah Istanbul 1308 A.H.'

Revelations to the Prophets it includes gestures and inspirations to any one other than a Prophet as well. Thus the word is used for both Prophets and other persons. Contrary to this, Wahy is applied to Divine inspiration sent down to Prophets only. The Holy Qurān has also used the word “Ilhām” for both Prophets and other human beings, but the word Wahy has not been used for anyone except the¹² Prophets.

Thus, Wahy is the channel through which Allah sends down His words to any of His chosen servant and Messenger, and through this Messenger to all other human beings. And since Wahy is a sacred instructive link between Allah and His servants and is perceived by the Prophets عليهم السلام only, its true cognition is not possible for human beings. However, the Qurān and Hadīth (Prophetic Traditions) have imparted some knowledge about its kinds and perceptions, and only those can be described here.

TEACHINGS OF WAHY

By means of Wahy people are taught those things which they cannot learn from their senses and intellect alone. These things may be purely of religious nature, or may belong to common needs of the world. The Wahy of the Prophets generally belongs to the first category, but when needed, instructions about mundane affairs have also been imparted through Wahy. For example Nooh عليه السلام was commanded to construct the Ark in these words:

وَاصْنَعِ الْفُلْكَ بِأَعْيُنِنَا وَوَحْيِنَا

And make the Ark under Our eyes and Our revelation.

12: Faḍlul Bārī v1, p19, Mat-bah Hījazi, Cairo 1357 AH by Maulana Anwar Shah Kashmiri.

This tells that the art of making Ark or ship building was taught to him by means of Wahy. Similarly Dawood عليه السلام was taught the art of making armour. Also Adam عليه السلام was taught the peculiarities of things through Wahy, and according to one narration basic knowledge of medical science was also sent down through ¹³*Wahy*.

KINDS OF WAHY

‘Allāmah Anwar Shah Kashmiri رحمه الله عليه has stated that basically there are three kinds of ¹⁴*Wahy*.

1: WAHY AT HEART

This kind of Wahy is directed to the heart of a Prophet and Allah inspires something into it. In this there is no medium of angel or hearing faculty or other senses of the Prophet, He does not hear any voice but something is infused into the depths of his heart, and he knows that it has come from Almighty Allah. This may happen in sleep or wakefulness. Hence every dream and vision of the Prophet is also a Wahy Sayyidina Ibrāhim عليه السلام was commanded in this manner to slaughter his son.

2: DIRECT DISCOURSE FROM ALLAH

In this kind of Wahy Allah directly speaks to the Prophet and there is no interlink with an angel but the Prophet does hear the voice. This voice is entirely different from that of any of His creation and imparts a strange sensation, the cognition of which is not possible through intellect. Only the Prophets who hear this voice can recognise the state and ecstatic feeling it imparts.

13: Abdul ‘Aziz Far Hari: al Nabras Ali Sharah-al-‘Aqāid pp427, 428, printed Amritsar 1318 A’H.

14: The three kinds are derived from his book, “Faidhul Bari” pp14-18. The nomenclature, classification and explanations are our own interpretations.

Since in this kind of Wahy the Prophets get the honour of direct conversation with Allah, this kind is regarded as most superior and ¹⁵honorific. That is why in describing the high status of Musa (Moses) ﷺ, the Qurān States.

وَكَلَّمَ اللَّهُ مُوسَى تَكْلِيمًا

And to Musa, Allah spoke directly. (An-Nisa, 4169)

3: ANGELIC WAHY

In this kind, Allah sends His message to the Prophet through an angel, and that angel conveys it to the Prophet. Sometimes the angel is not visible but only his voice is heard, and sometimes he comes in a human figure and conveys the message, and sometimes he is seen by the Prophet in his original form but this happens only rarely.

The Holy Qurān has pointed to the three kinds of "Wahy" in the following verse.

أَوْ يُرْسِلَ رَسُولًا فَيُوحِيَ بَأْذَنِهِ مَا يَشَاءُ

And it is not (vouchsafed) to a mortal that Allah should speak to him except by revelation or from behind a veil, or that He sends a Messenger to reveal whatsoever He will by His leave. (Ash-Shura. 42:51)

In this verse, inspiration is Wahy at heart, behind the veil means direct discourse and by sending a message is meant angelic Wahy.

METHODS OF WAHY ON THE HOLY PROPHET ﷺ

Wahy was sent down to the Holy Prophet ﷺ through different means. According to Sayyidah 'Āishah رضى الله تعالى عنها¹⁶ as narrated in Saḥīḥ Bukhārī Ḥārith bin Hishām once asked the Prophet ﷺ about the manner of Wahy sent to him. The Holy Prophet ﷺ said:

أَحْيَانًا يَأْتِينِي مِثْلُ صَلَاصَةِ الْجَرَسِ وَهُوَ أَشَدُّ عَلَيَّ فَيَفْصِمُ عَنِّي
وَقَدْ وَعَيْتُ مَا قَالَ وَأَحْيَانًا يَتَمَثَّلُ لِي الْمَلَكُ رَجُلًا

(صحيح بخارى، ص ٢٠٢، ج ١، اصح المطابع)

Sometimes I hear the voice like that of ringing bells, and I find this kind of Wahy the hardest when this state ends all that the voice had said is retained in my memory, and sometimes the angel comes to me in the guise of a man.

(Saḥīḥ Bukhārī p.2. v1, Asaḥ-ḥul Matab'ē, Karachi.)

From this Tradition we know of two methods of Wahy on the Holy Prophet ﷺ.

1. RINGING OF BELLS

The first method was that he used to hear a sound similar to the ringing of bells. Since the Tradition mentions only this much, we cannot say with certainty in what sense this kind of Wahy has been similar to the sound of bells. However, some scholars think that it was the voice of the angels while some others think that it was the flutter of its wings while bringing down the Wahy. Allamah Khaṭṭābī is of the opinion that the similarity does not relate to the tune of the sound but its continuity. Just as the sound of a ringing bell is continuous and it does not break, the sound of Wahy was also continuous.¹⁷ But these are all hypothetical views and nothing can be said with certainty on the basis of these views. However, the explanation given by Allama Anwar Shah Kashmiri quoting Hadhrat Moḥiuddin Ibn 'Arabi is more subtle than all the others. He states that the simile has been used in two respects. First it pertains to continuity of the sound as stated above, and secondly in so far as it is difficult to ascertain the direction of the sound of a bell continuously ringing as it appears to be coming from all directions. Since Allah is independent of place and directions, His words are heard from all directions. The exact perception of this state is not possible without actual observation but the Holy Prophet ﷺ used the simile of ringing bells to bring it as near common understanding as possible.¹⁸

Anyhow the exact nature of the voice is known to Allah or to His Messenger. From the Hadith we only learn that in this particular type of Wahy, the Holy Prophet ﷺ used to hear a voice resembling the sound of bells. We also learn that this method of Wahy used to be the hardest on him.

According to Ḥafiz Ibn Ḥajar رحمه الله عليه the words وَهُوَ أَشَدُّ عَلَى "And it is hardest on me" denote that in fact all types of Wahy were hard on the Prophet ﷺ but this particular type used to be hardest on him. The reason is that it is necessary that there be some sort of harmony between the speaker and the listener. Now, if the angel came in human form that was not an extraordinary burden on the Prophet ﷺ. Only the majestic burden of the words of Allah used to be there. On the other hand, if the angel did not come in human form but either his voice or directly the words of Allah were heard, that was an extraordinary state and to get familiar with it and to get the benefits from it, the Holy Prophet ﷺ felt much greater burden.¹⁹ Sayyidah 'Āishah رضى الله تعالى عنها added her own observation to the foregoing Hadith:

وَلَقَدْ رَأَيْتُهُ يَنْزِلُ عَلَيْهِ الْوَحْيُ فِي الْيَوْمِ الشَّدِيدِ الْبَرْدِ فَيَقْصِمُ عَنْهُ
وَأَنَّ جَبِينَهُ لَيَتَفَصَّدُ عَرَقًا
(صحيح بخارى، ص ٢، ج ١، حديث رقم ٢)

I have observed the state of Wahy on him during severe cold and yet his forehead used to be drenched with Sweat.²⁰

In another narration Sayyidah 'Āishah رضى الله تعالى عنها said, Whenever Wahy came to him his breathing became difficult, his face turned pale like the twig of date-palm, his front teeth began to clatter with cold and he used to sweat so much that its drops rolled down like beads.²¹

This state of Wahy was sometimes so intense that the animal on whom he rode could not stand the weight and would sit down.

Once he was resting with his head on the thigh of Zayd bin Thābit رضى الله تعالى عنه when Wahy began to come, and it caused much pressure on his thigh that Sayyidina Zayd رضى الله تعالى عنه thought it would crush down.²²

In one narration of Musnad Ahmad the Holy Prophet ﷺ himself said that in this form of Wahy he feels as if his soul was being squeezed out.²³

Sometimes a faint sound of this Wahy was heard by other people as well. 'Umar رضي الله عنه said that a sound similar to humming of bees was heard near his face at the time of descent of Wahy.²⁴

2. ANGEL COMING IN HUMAN GUISE

The other method of Wahy mentioned in this tradition was that the angel used to appear in a human form and convey the message. In such a situation, generally Jibril عليه السلام came in the form of the renowned companion Dihyah Kalbi رضي الله عنه. Allama 'Ainy رحمة الله عليه states that the selection of Dihyah Kalbi رضي الله عنه was probably because he was the most handsome person of his time. He was so beautiful that he used to wrap a cloth round his face when coming out.²⁵

However, it is mentioned that sometimes Jibril عليه السلام came in other appearances too. In the narration of Sayyidina 'Umar رضي الله عنه he is said to have come as a total stranger,²⁶ because it was probably intended that the people be taken by surprise when they find him talking informally to the Holy Prophet ﷺ.

However, it is agreed almost unanimously that the angel who brought Wahy to the Holy Prophet Muhammad ﷺ was Jibril عليه السلام, the Qurān says:

قُلْ مَنْ كَانَ عَدُوًّا لِّجِبْرِيلَ فَإِنَّهُ نَزَّلَهُ عَلَىٰ قَلْبِكَ say (O Prophet) Whoever is an enemy of Jibril عليه السلام (he is an enemy of Allah) for surely he is the one who has revealed it to your heart... (Al-Baqarah, 2:97)

From this it becomes apparent that Wahy was generally brought to the Holy Prophet ﷺ by Jibril عليه السلام. However Imam Ahmad رحمة الله عليه has quoted Imam Sha'abi رحمة الله عليه that during the first three years of Prophethood²⁷ Israfil used to bring Wahy but the Qurān was not revealed through him. It was entirely brought by Jibril عليه السلام. But Allama Wāqidi رحمه الله عليه and others have rejected this view and maintained that no angel other than Jibril عليه السلام brought any Wahy to Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ. 'Allamah Badaruddin 'Ayni' also seems to be inclined to the same view,²⁸ and we also do not find support for this view in any authentic Hadith or saying of companions. Ḥafiz Ibn Ḥajar is, however, inclined to accept this view and places the incidence during the period of fatrah;²⁹ (the period of about three years after the first Wahy during which no portion of the Qurān was revealed).

Anyhow, in this manner of Wahy the angel used to come in human form and in this the Prophet ﷺ did not experience much hardship. In one of the narrations in Saḥiḥ Abu 'Awanah it is stated that the Holy Prophet ﷺ said:

And this state was the easiest for me.³⁰

In the narration of Sayyidah Aishah رضي الله تعالى عنها only these two methods of the descent of Wahy are mentioned. But from other traditions we come to know of several other methods also.³¹ Allama Ḥalimi has mentioned as many as 46 ways of descent of Wahy.³² But Ḥafiz Ibn Ḥajar has stated that Ḥalimi has counted the various attributes of Jibril عليه السلام as the methods of descent of Wahy to reach the

However, other important ways of descent of Wahy as mentioned in other Prophetic traditions, are as follows:

3. ANGEL COMING IN HIS ORIGINAL APPEARANCE

The third method of Wahy was that Jibril عليه السلام came in his original appearance but this had happened only three times in the lifetime of Holy Prophet ﷺ. First, when he himself wished to see the angel in his original form, secondly, at the time of Ascension of the Prophet ﷺ to Heavens, and the third time in the very early days after the Prophethood at Ajyād in Makkah. The first two sightings are authentic but the last one is doubtful.³⁴

4. TRUE DREAMS

The fourth method of Wahy was that the Prophet ﷺ used to have dreams before the revelation of the Qurān had started. Whatever he saw in a dream happened in exactly the same manner when he awoke. Sayyidah Aishah رضي الله عنها says:

أَوَّلُ مَا بُدِئَ بِهِ رَسُولُ اللَّهِ صَلَّى اللَّهُ عَلَيْهِ وَسَلَّمَ مِنَ الْوَحْيِ الرَّؤْيَا

الصُّبْحِ - (صحيح بخارى، ص ٢، ج ١، حديث رقم ٣)

The initial Wahy on the Holy Prophet ﷺ was through true dreams. Whatever he dreamt always came out true like the morning light.³⁵

Also, when a hypocrite of Madinah had performed a spell on him, it was in his dream that he was informed of it and also of the method of breaking the spell.³⁶

5. DISCOURSE WITH ALLAH

Like Sayyidina Musa عليه السلام our Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ also had the privilege of direct discourse with Allah. While awake this happened only on the night of Ascension. Apart from this he once had a direct talk with Allah in dream.³⁷

6. INSPIRATION IN THE HEART

The sixth method of Wahy was that, without appearing before him in any Shape, Jibril عليه السلام used to inspire something in the heart of the Prophet ﷺ. In one narration the Prophet ﷺ is reported to have said:

إِنَّ رُوحَ الْقُدُسِ نَفَثَ فِي رَوْعِي..... الخ

The Holy spirit (Jibril عليه السلام) inspired this in my heart.³⁸

And the words of the narration of Mustadrak-Ḥākim are:

ان جبرئيل عليه السلام القى في روعي ان احدا منكم لن يخرج من الدنيا حتى يتكمل رزقه -

(الحاكم، المستدرک، کتاب البیوع، ص ٤، ج ٢، دائرة المعارف، دکن، ١٣٤٠هـ)

Jibril عليه السلام infused in my heart that none of you would depart from this world until he has earned all his subsistence.³⁹

WAḤY, KASHF AND ILHĀM

It has been explained above that Waḥy is specific for the Prophets ﷺ and any other person, irrespective of his spiritual status, cannot be a recipient of Waḥy. However, sometimes Allah does tell certain things to some of His selected servants. This is known as Kashf or Ilham each of which is a form of inspiration. Mujaddid Alf Thani رحمه الله عليه has stated the difference between the two is that Kashf relates to sensory abilities, that is, an incidence or a thing is directly visible, and Ilham relates to intuitive knowledge where nothing is seen but some thought is infused in the heart. That is why generally Ilham is more correct than Kashf.⁴⁰

The last method of the descent of Waḥy, that is, inspiration in the heart is apparently very near to Ilham. In both of them something is infused in the heart, but the difference between the two is that inspiration of Waḥy is done only to a Prophet and he also gets to know who inspired him, as is the case in the above narration of Ḥākīm where the Holy Prophet said, Jibril عليه السلام infused this in my heart ... But in Ilham a person does not know who inspired him. He only feels that something has come to his heart that was not there before.⁴¹

On this basis the Waḥy of the Prophets is absolutely certain and must be obeyed. But the inspiration (Ilham) of the saints is not a certain thing hence they form neither an argument in matters of faith nor do they become obligatory. In fact if one gets an inspiration or dream that is not in accordance with the Universally known injunctions of the Qurān and Traditions it is not considered permissible by any authority to act according to its directives.⁴²

QURĀNIC AND NON-QURĀNIC WAHY

The Wahy that was revealed to the Holy Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ was of two kinds. One, that comprised verses of the Qurān in which the words and meanings were both from Allah, and they have been preserved in the Qurān forever so that even an iota or dot has not changed nor can be changed. This type of Wahy is termed by religious scholars as Wahy Matluw that is, the Wahy that is recited (Qurānic). The second type of Wahy is that which does not form part of Qurān, but a large number of commands and tenets have been sent through it. This type is known as non-Qurānic Wahy, that is, the one that is not recited or Wahy Ghayr Matluw. Generally, only the fundamental beliefs and basic teachings of Islam have been defined through Wahy Matluw, i.e the Holy Qurān. Details of these teachings and subsidiary tenets have been sent through non-Qurānic Wahy. This non-Qurānic Wahy has been preserved in the form of Traditions (Sayings and Deeds) of the Holy Prophet termed as Ḥadith. Generally, in this type of Wahy only the subject matter was revealed to the Holy Prophet ﷺ who then expressed it in his own⁴³ words. The Holy Prophet ﷺ has said,

أُوتِيْتُ الْقُرْآنَ وَمِثْلَهُ مَعَهُ

I have been given the Qurān and with it also other similar teachings.

In this other teachings refer to the non-Qurānic Wahy.

As we have seen subsidiary details of Islamic laws have been given through this non-Qurānic Wahy. Therefore, there are certain people who though they call themselves Muslims yet are intent upon leading a life free of restrictions imposed by Islamic laws. These people make the mischievous propaganda that there is nothing like non-Qurānic Wahy and say that the entire Wahy sent to the Holy Prophet ﷺ is preserved in the Qurān, and whatever commandments other than Qurān he gave were in his capacity of the Head of State and were applicable only to the people of his time, and nowadays it is not obligatory to follow them.

But this idea is totally wrong and ill-founded. We learn from several verses of the Holy Qurān itself that Divine Revelation (Wahy from Allah) is not limited to the Qurān alone, but there are many other things in addition to the Qurān that have been taught through Wahy. In support of this a few verses of Qurān are cited below.

الرَّسُولَ مِمَّنْ يَنْقَلِبُ عَلَى عَقْبَيْهِ

And We appointed not the Qiblah which you (O Prophet) have had except in order that We might know who followed the Messenger from him who turned back on his heels.. (Al-Baqarah, 2:143)

Every Muslim knows that for a considerable time in Madinah the Holy Prophet ﷺ observed Salah facing towards Baytal-Maqdis (Jerusalem), and the above verse was revealed when it was ordained to face Ka'bah again. This verse states that the previous order to face Baytul-Maqdis was test to know who obeys the order and who rejects it. It is noteworthy that the order to face Baytul-Maqdis during worship has been attributed by Allah to Himself meaning thereby that He was the One Who had commanded His Messenger to the direction of Baytul-Maqdis. But the command itself is not found anywhere in the Qurān. It is clear that this order was given by Allah through a Wahy that is not part of the Qurān and which is not mentioned anywhere in the Qurān. It is this sort of Wahy that is termed non-Qurānic Wahy.

Then she informed about it (to the other) and Allah disclosed that to him, he had made known (to her) a part of it and passed over a part... (Al-Tahrim, 66:3)

This verse refers to an incident that one of the wives of the Holy Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ hoped to conceal a certain thing from him, Allah revealed it to him through Wahy. So, she asked him how he had come to know about it and he replied that it was the Knower and the One Everinformed who had revealed it to him. This verse clearly shows that the particular thing was revealed through Wahy although we do not find it in the Qurān anywhere. Hence, he was informed of it though non-Qurānic Wahy. There are many other verses that prove the non-Qurānic Wahy but only two are mentioned here to avoid a lengthy discussion. For the seeker of truth even two verses are more than sufficient to prove that non-Qurānic Wahy too, is a kind of Wahy, as definite and as binding as Qurānic Wahy.

INTELLECTUAL DOUBTS ABOUT WAHY

The above discussion pertains to the essential information about Wahy that are proved from the Qurān and Hadith. We have stated in the beginning that Wahy is a form of guidance from Allah in matters that cannot be perceived by anyone other than the Prophets عليهم السلام it is not possible for others to have a true perception of the state and effect of Wahy. That is why these things appear so unfamiliar and all those people who are overwhelmed by the world-wide dominance of western thoughts. They look at things with doubts and disbelief. Some people even go to the extent of open denial of Wahy believing it to be nothing but stories and tales. There are some who do not deny it openly but in this era of scientific advancement they feel shy of talking about it. It is necessary, therefore, to see the position of Wahy vis-a-vis intelligence.

Before delving over the subject of Wahy any further, we should first decide whether there is a Creator and Master of this universe or it came into existence all by itself? As for those materialists who deny the very existence of God, it will be futile to discuss this topic with them because a person who does not accept the existence of God will not think over the reality of Wahy seriously. Therefore, we must first discuss with them the existence of God. But as for those who believe in the existence of God, it is not difficult for them to understand the intellectual need of Wahy and its possibility and real existence.

If the universe has been created by the One and Only Omnipotent Being Who runs its well knit and organised system through His infinite wisdom, and Who has sent man in this world with a specific purpose, how then would it be possible for Him to leave him astray in darkness and not even tell him why he came into this world what his duties are, what is his ultimate goal, and how may he achieve that? Can anybody in his senses send forth his servant on an errand and not tell him the purpose of this journey when he starts, nor make it clear to him through any message afterwards as to what he is supposed to do or what his duties are during the course of his journey? When an ordinary human being cannot be expected to do so how can we say that for Almighty Allah Whose Infinite Wisdom is running the entire Universe. How is it possible that the All-knowing Who created such an amazing system of sun and moon, heavens and earth, stars and planets, will not make any arrangement for establishing a channel to communicate to with His creatures to guide them about the purpose of their existence? If one believes in the All Comprehensive wisdom of Allah he must also admit that He has not left His creatures in darkness but has definitely established system for their guidance. It is this organised system of guidance that is known as Wahy and Prophethood.

It should now be clear that Wahy is not merely an article of faith but a religious belief, also a requirement of human mind, an intellectual requirement, the denial of which is in fact denial of the infinite Wisdom of Allah. As for the objection that the various methods of Wahy are beyond our comprehension, it is not a rational argument for not accepting the reality of Wahy. The intellectual need and occurrence of a thing proved by irrefutable arguments cannot be rejected merely because we have not directly observed it. If only a few centuries ago someone was told that people would be able to cover thousands of miles in a few hours by travelling in an aeroplane, he would have dismissed the idea as a fairy tale. But did his ignorance about aeroplanes make them any the less real? In many of the backward areas even today you will come across people who are not prepared to accept that man has landed on the moon. But does their denial disprove the reality? Talk to a villager about the computer system and tell him that it works like human brain, he will never believe you. But does that in any way affect the existence of computers? If the answer is "No" and certainly it is "No", then how can the Wahy, the intellectual need of which is proven and undeniable, and which has been experienced by one hundred and twenty four thousand (1,24,000) of the most truthful persons, be rejected or disbelieved? And then after all where do these methods of Wahy clash with reason? If with their limited brains Scientists could invent such marvellous things as telephone, teleprinter, radio and television as means of communication, does Allah not have enough power to establish a surer and more powerful system of communication between Him and His servants than all these methods? (We seek the refuge of Allah for sayings like that).

The reality of Waḷḥy is just that Allah reveals His words to any of His Messenger directly or through some agency. The question is what intellectual reason bars its acceptance? We hesitate to cite the example of human inventions or action to help understand Waḷḥy, but just to clarify the point we are presenting here the example of a human action wherein someone captures the mind of another person and induces in him whatever thoughts he desires.

In the terminology of mystics (Saints) this action is called possession through the power of thought, or Thought Transfer. We find innumerable examples in the biographies of the mystics. Through the power of his imagination someone prevails over the mind of another person to the extent that he makes him speak and do act whatever he commands him. The materialists had been rejecting such power of dominance for a long time, and following them, many Muslims also thought it to be mere fiction, until the celebrated Swiss Physicist Mesmer born in the middle of 18th century, ⁴⁴selected human mind as the subject of his research, and in 1775 AD. disclosed in one of his articles that human mind can be subjugated through a magnetic process. He called this process as "Anima Magnetism" and,

44: His full name is Fredric Anton Mesmer. He was born in a place near lake contance Switzerland in May 1733.AD. and died at Merseberg in March 1815. Initially, he selected Medicine as his subject, but later he became known as inventor of Anima Magnetism, and "Mesmerism" is attributed to him (World Family Encyclopaedia v12, p3425, published Michigan, USA, 1957) while in France, he also made successful practical experiment of this process but he could not fully convince his contemporaries. Then another person, James Braid, in 1842, in England, confirmed the validity of this process on a scientific basis and called it as Hypnotism.

There are different stages according to the Hypnotic Theory as propounded by James Braid. In the highest stage the entire muscular and nervous systems of the hypnotised person become paralysed and senseless and along with this the extrinsic and intrinsic sensations also become idle. But there is also an intermediate stage in which the body is not paralysed. This effect has been described in World Family Encyclopaedia as under:

“If the hypnotic process is light, the hypnotised person remains capable of imagining, various objects, for example in such a semi-hypnotised state it is quite possible that he may believe himself to be a different person or he may begin to see certain things that are not there, or feel some extraordinary sensations, under suggestions by the hypnotiser because he becomes a subject to the commands of the latter.”⁴⁵

Even the materialists who did not believe in hypnotism were convinced after the research and experiments of James Braid, and today become a subject of great interest for western people. Hundreds of conjurers are making good money out of it. It is also being used to treat patients. The Thought Force which is known to Muslim mystics for hundreds of years which was generally brushed aside as superstition has now become a reality in the form of Hypnotism. And now even the so-called ‘Rationalists,’ for whom every discovery of the West is scientific and any extraordinary performance of Muslims a superstition, have come to accept it.

Anyhow, what is emphasised here is whether it is Mesmerism or Hypnotism, it is nothing but that one man prevails over the mind of the other and infuses his own thoughts into the mind of the other person. The question now arises that God who bestowed so much power to the imaginative faculty or hypnotism to man that he can possess the mind of another person for just ordinary purposes and sometimes just for nothing, does He not Himself possess the power and authority that He may prevail over or capture the mind and heart of His Messenger and reveal His words to them for the sake of guidance to mankind?

Glory be to You (Allah!) this is a mighty calumny?

(Surah Nur, 24:16)

DOES WAHY INCLUDE ONLY THE MEANING OF THE QURĀN

In the preceding lines we have described that there are two kinds of Wahy, Qurānic Wahy and non-Qurānic Wahy. In the latter kind, of course, only the subject matter used to be from Allah, but in order to express it the selection of words was left to the angel Jibril عليه السلام or the Holy Prophet ﷺ. But it is not so with Qurān. Word for word, alongwith their meanings, the Qurān is the direct word of Allah in the literal sense. Just like its subject matters, its words, too, are exactly the same as they were revealed by Allah Himself. Angel Jibril عليه السلام or the Holy Prophet ﷺ had no hand in their selection, arrangement or composition.

Some of those overawed by the objections of the materialists about Wahy, say these days that only the substance of the Qurān was sent through Wahy which were composed in their own words (God forbid) by the Angel (Jibril ﷺ) or the Prophet ﷺ.

But this concept is totally false, absurd and against the convincing proofs of the Qurān and the Hadith.

There are several verses of the Qurān itself that clearly signify that its words and meanings were both revealed from Allah. Some of them are given below:

- 1: Qurān has described one of its attributes as being "Arabic", that is, it has been revealed in Arabic language.⁴⁶ It is now obvious that if only the meanings of the Qurān were revealed its being "Arabic" انا انزلنه قرانا عربيا would have been meaningless because "Arabic" qualifies the words and not the meanings.
- 2: At several places in the Holy Qurān three principal duties of the Holy Prophet ﷺ have been described. These are

who shall recite to them Your revelations, and shall teach them the Book and the wisdom, and shall purify them. (Al-Baqarah, 2:129)

It is clear that he was assigned two separate duties. First, recitation of the verses of Allah, and secondly, teaching their meanings. Obviously, recitation relates to words and not meanings, hence his first duty relates to the words of the Qurān and not to its meanings.

- 3: At many, places the Qurān has used for itself the word "Al-Kitāb (The Book)". The word "Book" does not relate to mental thoughts but only when these thoughts are transformed into words these may be called a "Book". This clearly proves that both the words and meanings of the Qurān have been revealed from Allah.

- 4: It is signified from Sūrah al-Qiyāmah that whenever, Jibrīl عليه السلام came with Wahy the Prophet ﷺ used to repeat the words hurriedly to memorize them. On this Allah Commanded him.

فَإِذَا قَرَأْنَاهُ فَاتَّبِعْ قُرْآنَهُ ۚ ثُمَّ إِنَّ عَلَيْنَا بَيَانَهُ ۚ

(O Prophet) move not your tongue therewith to make haste with it (the learning of the Qurān). Surely upon Us rests the collecting thereof, and the reciting thereof. So, when We recite it follow you the reciting thereof. And surely upon Us then rests the explaining thereof.

(Al-Qiyāmah 75:16-19)

It is quite clear the words that Jibrīl عليه السلام used to reveal to the Prophet were the words of Allah, that is why Allah took upon Himself the responsibility for all the three things—getting the words memorised, teaching recitation and explaining the meaning.

In the light of such clear proofs the concept that the words of Qurān were not revealed through Wahy becomes quite absurd. While commenting on this subject Shaikh Muḥammad ‘Abdul’ ‘Azeem Zarqānī has written the following:

“At this stage the gist of entire discussion is that it is unanimously agreed that both the words and meanings of the Qurān were revealed through Wahy. And the popular conception is that the same holds good about Ḥadīth Qudsi" (Divine non-Qurānic inspirations beginning with the words "Allah said to me..."). However, as for the Aḥādīth of the Prophet ﷺ only the meanings were revealed, but the words were his own. Then, as for such of his sayings as were not revealed to him but were his own thoughts, both the words and meanings were Prophetic traditions and not revealed through Wahy.⁴⁷

In fact those who have denied the words of the Qurān to be part of Wahy have suffered from a confusion that arose because they were unable to understand the reality of revelation of words through Wahy. But if the above discussion on the reality of Wahy, its intellectual need and answers to the mental confusion are kept in view, all doubts and confusions are removed. If Wahy is a definite requirement and Allah has full power to send it, how may it be said that He could reveal the meanings in the heart of the Prophet ﷺ but He is powerless (God forbid) to reveal the words?

It should also be clarified at this point that 'Allāmah Badruddin Zarkashi رحمه الله عليه and 'Allamah Suyuti رحمه الله عليه have also quoted some people's views that they thought that only the subject matters are from Allah while the words belong to the Prophet ﷺ or the⁴⁸ Angel Jibril عليه السلام. But you must have noted that in the light of the Qurān, Sunnah, and consensus of scholars, with strong arguments in them such views are baseless. Even the above authorities have not named the actual persons but have only mentioned, "Some people have

HISTORY OF THE DESCENT OF THE QURĀN

The Qurān is in fact the word of Allah. Hence it is preserved in a Guarded Tablet as expressed in the Qurān itself.

بَلْ هُوَ قُرْآنٌ مَجِيدٌ ۝ فِي لَوْحٍ مَّحْفُوظٍ ۝

(Al-Burūj, 85:21-22)

Then from the Guarded Tablet it was sent down in two stages. First, it was sent as a whole to Bayt-ul'Izzat (The House of Honour) on the heaven of this world. Thereafter it was revealed to the Holy Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ in bits according to the needs until it was completed in twentythree years. Two words have been used in the Qurān for its descent: انزال (Inzāl) and تنزيل (Tanzeel). The former means "to send down bit by bit". Hence wherever the Qurān has used the first word for itself it means the descent from the Guarded Tablet to the heaven of this world, eg.

إِنَّا أَنْزَلْنَاهُ فِي لَيْلَةٍ مُبَارَكَةٍ

Surely, We have sent down it in a blessed night

(Ad-Dukhān, 44:3)

And wherever the second word is used it signifies the revelations made to the Holy Prophet ﷺ from time to time.

Allah has said:

وَقُرْآنًا فَرَقْنَاهُ لِتَقْرَأَهُ عَلَى النَّاسِ عَلَى مُكْثٍ وَنَزَّلْنَاهُ تَنْزِيلًا ۝

And this is a Qurān that We sent down in piecemeal that you many recite it to mankind at intervals, and We have sent it down in gradual sending. (Al-Isrā. 17:106)

These two forms of descent of the Qurān are apparent from the verses itself. In addition to this Nasā'i, Ḥakim, Baihaqī, Ibn Abi Shaybah, Tabarāni, and Ibn Mardawiyah, have quoted several narrations from Abdullah Ibn 'Abbas رضى الله عنهما which affirm that the first descent was on the heaven of the earth and the second gradually on the Prophet ﷺ. 49

FIRST DESCENT

The narrations of Ibn 'Abbas رضى الله عنهما only indicate that first descent took place from the Guarded Tablet to a place on the heaven of this world and this place is called Bayt-ul-'Izzat also known as Baytul Ma'moor which is directly over the Kābah and is the place of worship of the Angels. 50

How did this descent take place, what was the prudence behind it? Nothing can be said about it with certainty. However, some scholars, such as 'Allāmah Abu Shāmah رحمه الله عليه have stated that the intention was to emphasise on the splendour of the Qurān, and also to let the angels of that place know that it was the last Scripture meant to be sent down for the guidance of the people on this earth. Zarqāni رحمه الله عليه has made another point (Manāhil ul Irfān) that the purpose of these two descents was to affirm that this Book is free from any doubt about its Divinity, and apart from the memory of the Holy Prophet ﷺ it is also preserved in two other places, Luh 'Mahfooz (The Guarded Tablet) and Baytul 'Izzat. (Allah knows the best)

Anyway, who can encompass the expediencies of Allah? He alone knows the many reasons for that and it is fruitless for us to investigate these matters. However, we have been clearly told that this first descent took place on the Night of power.

SECOND DESCENT

There is almost a consensus on that the second piecemeal descent of the Qurān started when the Holy Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ was forty years old, and according to the accepted view this descent commenced on the Night of power.⁵¹ It was the same date on which the battle of Badr took place eleven years later. The Qurān says:

وَمَا أَنزَلْنَا عَلَى عَبْدِنَا يَوْمَ الْفُرْقَانِ يَوْمَ التَّقَى الْجَمْعَانِ

...And in which We sent down upon Our servant (Muḥammad), on the day of Discrimination, the day on which the two hosts met (at Badr). (Al-Anfāl, 8:41)

In this way we find the following facts about the beginning of the descent of the Qurān are proved from the Qurān itself:

- 1: It started in the month of Ramadān.
- 2: It started on the Night of Power.
- 3: The battle of Badr took place on the same date.

However, it cannot be stated with certainty. According 51: It is popularly known that he was commissioned to the office of Prophethood in the month of Rabi-'ul-Awwal through true dreams, and this continued for six months whereafter the Qurān began to be revealed in the month of Ramadan. Al-Itqān v1, p42.

to various narrations it could be 17th, 19th or 27th of the month of Ramadān.⁵²

THE VERSE THAT WAS THE FIRST TO BE REVEALED

The accepted view about it is that the first few verses of the Qurān that were revealed to the Holy Prophet were the initial verses of Surah al-'Alaq. According to Saḥīḥ Bukhari Sayyidah Aishah رضى الله عنها has stated that the Wahy started as true dreams. Thereafter, he got an inner urge for Prayers and meditations, and for that he used to spend several days and nights in the Cave of Hira until one day Allah sent an angel to the Cave, and the first thing he said was اقرأ (Read!) The Prophet replied, "I do not know reading." Subsequent event has been described in the words of the Prophet ﷺ himself: "The angel then embraced me so hard that I was in much difficulty, then left me and said again 'Read'. I again replied 'I don't know reading'. The angel again embraced me still harder, and left me and said, 'Read', and I again replied, 'I do not know reading.' He embraced me a third time and left me again and said.

إِقْرَأْ بِاسْمِ رَبِّكَ الَّذِي خَلَقَ ۝ خَلَقَ الْإِنْسَانَ مِنْ عَلَقٍ ۝ اقْرَأْ

Read in the Name of your Lord Who created man from a blood-clot. Read and your Lord is most Bountiful.

When he was returning home after the revelation of these verses his heart was beating heavily. On reaching home addressing Sayyidah Khadijah رضى الله تعالى عنها he said, twice زَمِّلُونِي، زَمِّلُونِي (Wrap me up!)

A blanket was spread over him until his fear was gone.⁵³

These were the first verses revealed to him. Therefore, a period of three years passed without any further revelation. This is known as the period of Fatrat-e-Wahy (period of Wahy). Then again he saw the same angel sitting on a chair between the earth and sky, and he revealed to him the verses of Surah Al-Muddaththir.

This incidence has been described in all the books of Hadith except Bukhari and Muslim with authentic proofs. The majority of scholars agree that the first revelation consisted of the first few verses of Surah Al-'Alaq, and then were the verses of Surah Al-Muddaththir. In this context, however, there are three more opinions that deserve mention.

- 1: It appears from a narration of Ibn Jābir رضى الله عنه carried by Bukhari in Kitabut-Tafseer that the verses of Surah Al-Muddaththir were the first to be revealed to him, and on this basis some scholars have deduced that these verses have preceded those of Surah Al-'Alaq. But Ḥāfiz Ibn Ḥajar رحمه الله عليه has explained that the narration of Ibn Jābir رضى الله عنه as quoted in Kitabut Tafseer of Bukhari is abridged and two sentences are missing from it. The same has been quoted by Bukhari in chapter Bad' al-Wahy on the authority of Imām Zuhri from Ibn Jābir رضى الله عنه wherein the following words have been mentioned, 53: Saḥiḥ Bukhari, chapter ' what was the state of Prophet ﷺ when the Wahy descended .

(So suddenly (I saw) the angel who had come to me in Hira was sitting on a chair.)

It is quite clear that the verses of Surah Al-Alaq had already been revealed when those of Surah Muddaththir were sent down.⁵⁴ However, it may be true to say that after the period of 'Fatrat-a-Wahy' the verses of Surah Al-Muddaththir were the first to be revealed or it was the first Surah to be revealed as a whole, because Surah Al-'Alaq was not revealed in its entirety in the Cave of Hira.

Imām Baihaqi has quoted a narration from 'Amr bin Hubayl رضي الله عنه that before the revelation of Wahy the Prophet used to tell Khadijah رضي الله تعالى عنها that he heard some one calling 'O Muḥammad, O Muḥammad, whenever he was alone, until one day the voice said, "O' Muḥammad! In the name of Allah, the Compassionate, the Merciful. All praise belongs to Allah, the Lord of the worlds" to the end of the Surah Al-Fatiḥah."⁵⁵

On the basis of this narration 'Allāmah Zamakhshari has written that the first Surah to be revealed is surah Al-Fatiḥah. Rather he has considered it to be the verdict of most of the commentators.⁵⁶ But Ḥāfiz Ibn Ḥajar رحمة الله عليه has refuted him and stated that Zamakhshari is wrong in saying so and there are only few scholars who concur with him and most of the commentators have maintained that the first few verses of Surah -al-'Alaq were the first to be revealed.⁵⁷

As far as the foregoing narration of Bayhaqi is concerned, he has himself written that if this is correct then it is possible that this incident may have occurred after the revelations of Surah al-'Alaq and Surah Muddaththir.⁵⁸ 'Allamah Anwar Shah Kashmiri has stated that it is possible that Surah Al-Fatihah was revealed twice as was the case with some other verses once before Surah Al-'Alaq and a second time after that. In that case it will have to be admitted that the first revelation of Surah Al-Fatihah was not made as Qurānic revelation but the angel had simply recited it, and later on it was revealed as part of the Qurān at the time destined for it.⁵⁹ Anyway, except for these three narrations all other traditions are unanimous that the first few verses of Surah al-'Alaq were the first to be revealed. 'Allamah Suyūṭī has quoted several narrations in support of this view.⁶⁰

MAKKAN AND MADINAN VERSES

You must have observed that the titles of various Surahs of Holy Qurān denote a Surah to be "Makkan" or "Madinan". It is essential to know the exact interpretation of these words. Most of the commentators believe that a "Makkan" verse means a verse revealed before the Prophet's ﷺ arrival in Madinah on his migration from Makkah. Some people think that Makkan means a verse revealed in the city of Makkah, and Madinan means the one revealed in Madinah. But most of the commentators maintain that this view is incorrect because there are several verses which were not revealed in Makkah, but because they were revealed before Hijrah (Migration) they are classed as Makkan. Hence the verses revealed at Mina, 'Arafāt and during Mi'rāj and even during the journey of migration to Madinah are classed as Makkan verses. Similarly, there are many verses which were not revealed in Madinah yet they are called Madinan. The Prophet ﷺ undertook several journeys after migration in which he even travelled hundreds of miles away from Madinah yet all those verses that were revealed in those places have been classed as Madinan, so much so that even the verses that were revealed in the very city of Makkah or its surrounding during the conquest of Makkah or treaty of Hudaibiyah⁶¹ are classed as Madinan. Hence the verse...

60: Al-Itqān p24, v1.

إِنَّ اللَّهَ يَأْمُرُكُمْ أَنْ تُؤَدُّوا الْأَمَانَاتِ إِلَىٰ أَهْلِهَا

Surely Allah commands you (O Believers) that you restore the trusts to their owners.... (An-Nisa, 4:58)

as Madinan although it was revealed In Makkah.⁶²

In short, although the classification of Makkan and Madinan gives the impression that it is based on the place of revelation, in fact it relates to the time of revelation. Verses revealed before the completion of Migration are called Makkan, and those after that are Madinan.

Although the Holy Prophet ﷺ is not known to have himself classified a verse or a surah as Makkan or Madinan. Yet his companions and their followers, who had devoted their lives to the safeguard the words and meanings of the Qurān have pointed out as to which of them are Makkan and which Madinan. For example, ‘Abdullah bin Mas‘ūd ؓ has said, “I swear by the Being besides Whom there is none worthy of worship that I know about every verse of the Qurān about whom it was revealed and where was it revealed”.⁶³ And Sayyidina Ali ؓ said, “By Allah, 61: For details see Al-burh ān-fi-‘uloomil Qur ān p88, v1, 9th edition.

62: Mana hil-ul-‘Irfān p188, v1.

63: Al-Itqān p9, Bukh āri.

I know about every verse whether it was revealed at night or during daytime, in the plains or over the mountains.”⁶⁴

Mostly it had been these companions of the Prophet ﷺ who told about the Surahs and verses of the Qurān whether they were Makkan or Madinan. However, we get information from some other sources as well. For example, the verses describing the incidence of Badr could only be Madinan. Similarly, most of the verses wherein the Prophet ﷺ has been asked to address the idolaters of Makkah could only be classed as Makkan. Hence some of verses have been classified on the basis of such evidences and conjectures. But since conjecture might vary there have resulted some differences of opinion among the commentators about some of the verses in this respect, some of them classify a verse or surah to be Makkan and some others as Madinan.

Then there are some Surahs which are wholly Makkan or wholly Madinan. For example, Surah al-Muddaththir is wholly a Makkan Sūrah and Sūrah Āl-Imrān is entirely Madinan. It has also occurred that a Surah as a whole is Makkan but contains one or more Madinan verses. For example, Surah Al-A'raf is a Makkan Surah but the verses from وَإِذْ أَخَذَ رَبُّكَ مِنْ بَنِي آدَمَ الْهَيْكَلَ to وَأَسْأَلُهُمْ عَنِ الْقَرْيَةِ الَّتِي كَانَتْ حَاضِرَةَ الْبَحْرِ are Madinan; or it may be the other way round for example Surah Al-Hajj is Madinan but four of its verses from وَمَا أَرْسَلْنَا to عَذَابَ يَوْمٍ عَقِيمٍ are Makkan.....

It also becomes clear that classification of a Surah as Makkan or Madinan is based on the majority of its verses but in some cases a Surah has been classed as Makkan because its initial verses were revealed before Migration although the subsequent verses were revealed after Migration.⁶⁵

CHARACTERISTICS OF MAKKAN AND MADINAN VERSES

After a logical analysis the commentators of the Qurān have described certain attributes of the various Surahs through which one can find at a glance whether a particular Surah is Makkan or Madinan. Some of these are rigid rules while others are valid most of the time. The rigid rules are:

- 1: Every such Sūrah which has the word كَلَّا (certainly not) in it is a Makkan Sūrah. This word has been used 33 times in 15 Sūrahs and all such occur in the second half of the Qurān.

Allāma Deereeni رحمه الله عليه composed this complet

وما نزلت كلا، يشرب فاعلمن
ولم تأت في القرآن في نصفه الأعلى

كلا was not revealed at Madinah and it does not occur in the first half of the Qurān.

- 2: Every Sūrah containing a verse about Sajdah is a Makkan Sūrah. This rule is based on Ḥanafī school of thought because according to them there is no verse of Sajdah in Surah Hajj but according to Imām Shafa'ī there is a verse of Sajdah in this Surah while it is Madinan Surah, hence this would be an exception to the rule.^{66a}
- 3: Every Surah, with the exception of Surah al-Baqarah, which relates the story of Sayyidina Ādam عليه السلام and Iblis is Makkan.
- 4: Every Surah in which a permission of Jihad or its injunctions are given is Madinan.
- 5: Every Surah is Madinan wherein there is a mention of hypocrites. Some scholars have exempted Surah 'Ankabut from this rule. But in fact this Surah on the whole is Makkan but the verses that mention hypocrites are Madinan.^{66b}

66a: This characteristic is derived from al-Itqān and other sources. It conforms to the contention that surah al-Hajj is Makkan but if we go by certain Sahābis and Tabi'īn that it is Madinan then surah Hajj is an exception to this ruling. (Maulana Taqī Usmani)

66b: Manāhil al 'Irfān, p191, v1.

The following characteristics are general and frequent, but sometimes it may happen the other way about.

- 1: In Makkan Surahs people have been generally addressed as يَا أَيُّهَا النَّاسُ (O mankind) while in Madinan Surahs they have been addressed as يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا (O you who believe).
- 2: Makkan Surahs and verses are generally short and concise while Madinan verses and Surahs are long and detailed.
- 3: Makkan Surahs generally deal with affirmation of oneness of Allah, Prophethood, Hereafter, picturing the Resurrection, words of comfort for the Holy Prophet ﷺ and the events concerning the previous nations. And, there are very few injunctions and rules in these Surahs. Contrary to this Madinan Surahs deal with social and family laws, injunctions relating to Jihad ḥudūd (limits) and duties.
- 4: Makkan Surahs mostly speak of confrontation with idolaters, while Madinan Surahs with the people of the Book and hypocrites.
- 5: The style of the Makkan Surahs is more elegant. They contain more similes, metaphors, allegories and parables, and a large vocabulary is used. The Madinan Surahs have a comparatively simple style.

The difference in mode and style of the Makkan and Madinan Surahs result from a difference in environment and addressees. In the Makkan stage Muslims were confronted mostly with the idolaters of Arabia as no Islamic state existed then. Hence, great emphasis was laid on restoration of Faith and Belief, moral reforms, arguments for refuting idolatry and on the miraculous status of the Holy Qurān. Contrary to this, Islamic state had come into existence in Madinah. The people were coming into the fold of Islam in increasing numbers. Idolatry had been confuted on the literary level, and the entire ideological confrontation was now against the people of Scriptures (Jews and Christians). For this reason greater emphasis was laid on laws and commandments, Rights and Duties and refuting the false innovation of the people of Scriptures. The mode and style was adopted accordingly.

Every upright person can easily understand this difference in the style and description of Qur̄anic injunctions in the light of the evolution in human environments. But certain Orientalists whose hearts are kindling with the fire of enmity with Islam have tried to deduce self-conceived conclusions from the difference in the style of Makkan and Madinan verses and Surahs. Hence, some of them conclude that the Qur̄an is the work of the Prophet ﷺ because its style varies according to changing environment. If it was the word of Allah its style and mode would not have varied with change in the surroundings.

Anyone having the slightest sense of justice and rationalism in his heart would realise the absurdity of this objection. The true spirit of eloquent and laconic discourse is that it should correspond to the needs of its environment and the person addressed. Sticking to one rigid mode and style in all kinds of environments and varying types of addressees would be distasteful in the extreme, betraying an ignorance even of the fundamental principles of a linguistic style. Only those who are given to raise objections for the sake of criticism attribute such distaste to the words of Allah.⁶⁷

67: For details see Manahil-ul-Irfān pp198 to 232 by Shaikh Zarqānī.

CLASSIFICATION OF REVELATION ON THE BASIS OF TIME AND PLACE

Apart from the classification of Qurānic verses into Makkan and Madinan the commentators have classified them also according to time and place of their revelation. For example, Hadri verses are the ones that were revealed when the Prophet ﷺ was staying at home and not travelling. Most Qurānic verses fall in this category. Safri verses are those revealed during the travels, for example.⁶⁸

إِنَّ اللَّهَ يَأْمُرُكُمْ أَنْ تُؤَدُّوا الْأَمَانَاتِ إِلَىٰ أَهْلِهَا

was sent down during conquest of Makkah. 'Allāma Suyūṭī has counted about forty such verses.⁶⁹ In addition, he has given the following classification too:

- 1: Nahari (Day-time) revelations: These are the verses that were revealed in day light. According to Allāma Ibn Habib, most verses belong to this category.
- 2: Layla (Nightly) revelations: These are the verses that were revealed at night. For example, the last few verses of Surah Aal Imrān (v.198 to 200) beginning with ان في خلق السموات والارض واختلاف الليل والنهار لآيت لاولى الالباب - were revealed at night. Allāma Suyūṭī has mentioned twelve more examples in this category in Al-Itqān.
- 3: Sayfi (Summer) revelations: These are the verses that were revealed during summer. For example, the last verse of Surah an-Nisa:

يَسْتَفْتُونَكَ قُلِ اللَّهُ يُفْتِيكُمْ فِي الْكَلَالَةِ

According to a Hadith related by Sayyidina Umar رضي الله عنه and found in Sahih Muslim, the verse was revealed in Summer. According to another tradition these verses were revealed on the occasion of the Farewell Hajj. Thus all other verses revealed at that occasion are summer verses, e.g.

69: Al-Itqān, pp 19 to 21, v1.

(Al-Ma'idah) الْيَوْمَ أَكْمَلْتُ لَكُمْ دِينَكُمْ

- 4: Shitā'i (Winter) revelations: These are the verses that were revealed during winter for example, the verses of Surah An-Nur.....

إِنَّ الَّذِينَ جَاءُوا بِالْإِفْكِ عُصْبَةٌ مِّنْكُمْ لَا تَحْسَبُوهُ شَرًّا لَّكُم ۖ
بَلْ هُوَ خَيْرٌ لَّكُم ۚ لِكُلِّ امْرِئٍ مِّنْهُمْ مَّا اكْتَسَبَ مِنَ الْإِثْمِ وَالَّذِي تَوَلَّى كِبْرَهُ مِنْهُمْ لَهُ عَذَابٌ عَظِيمٌ ۝ (النور، ١١) which condemn the slanderers of Sayyidah 'Aishah رضى الله تعالى عنها were revealed during winter as has been narrated by 'Sayyidah Aishah رضى الله تعالى عنها herself as stated in Sahih Bukhari. Similarly, the verses of Surah Al-Ahzab about the Battle of Trench are winter revelations because this battle was fought in winter.

- 5: Firāshī Revelations in bed. These are the verses that were revealed when the Prophet was lying on his bed, for example, of Surah Al-Ma'idah والله يعصمك من الناس (verse 70). 'Allamah Suyūṭī has mentioned two more examples of this type of verses.
- 6: Nawmi (Revelations during sleep): Some scholars have described certain verses as having been revealed during the Prophet's ﷺ sleep. In this connection they quote a narration from Sahih-Muslim wherein Sayyidina Anas رضى الله تعالى عنه has stated "The Holy Prophet ﷺ was once sitting among us when he suddenly got a wink of sleep, and thereafter he raised his head, smiled and said that a Surah has just been revealed to him, and then he recited Surah Al-Kauthar."

But the truth is that no verse was revealed to the Prophet ﷺ during his sleep. The state of sleep referred to in the foregoing incidence is called اغفارة in Arabic. Imām Rafa‘ī رحمه الله عليه and others suggest that it was not sleep but a particular condition peculiar to the Prophet ﷺ generally experienced whenever Wahy was sent to him. Therefore it is wrong to presume that Wahy descended while he was asleep Allāma Suyūṭī رحمه الله عليه concurs with Imām Rafa‘ī رحمه الله عليه ⁷⁰

- 7: Samāvi (Revelations on the Heavens): These are verses that were revealed during the Holy Prophet’s Ascention (Mi‘raj). In this connection we find only one narration in Sahih Muslim according to which the last few verses of Surah al Baqarah were revealed during this journey near Sidrat-ul-Muntahā.⁷¹
- 8: Fidā ī (Revelations on the air); ‘Allāmah Ibn ‘Arabi has described another type of revelation that was sent down neither on earth nor on the sky (but somewhere in the atmosphere). According to him, three verses of Sūrah as-Ṣāffāt, وما منا الا and one verse of Sūrah az-Zukhruf, وَأَسْأَلُ مَنْ أَرْسَلَنَا مِنْ قَبْلِكَ مِنْ رُسُلِنَا belong to this category. But ‘Allāmah Suyūṭī رحمه الله عليه has stated that he could not find any authentic proof for this kind of revelation.

71: Al-Itqān v11, p24.

GRADUAL DESCENT OF THE HOLY QURĀN

It has been mentioned earlier that the Qurān was not revealed on the Holy Prophet ﷺ instantly or all at a time, but it was sent down bit by bit over a period of twenty-three years. Some times Jibril ﷺ came with a single verse or even a small portion of a verse, and sometimes several verses were revealed at one time. The smallest portion of the Qurān to be revealed was غير اولى الضرر (An-Nisa 4:94) which is a piece of a large verse, while, on the other hand the entire Surah Al-Anām was revealed all at one time.⁷²

Due to a quotation of Ibn-Asākir some scholars have got an impression that Jibril ﷺ did not bring more than five verses at a time. But ‘Allāma Suyūtī رحمه الله عليه has refuted this view and stated that more than five verses have been revealed on occasions. For example, it is known from authentic Aḥādith that ten verses were revealed together at the time of case of Ifk (Slander). What actually happened was that Jibril ﷺ used to make the Prophet ﷺ memorise five verses at a time. When he memorised five verses, he would recite him more verses. Hence Imām Baihaqi has quoted Abul ‘Āliyah رحمه الله عليه as saying ‘Learn five verses of the Qurān at a time because the Holy Prophet ﷺ used to memorize five verses at a time from Jibril ﷺ.’⁷³

Why was the Qurān revealed in piecemeal rather than all at a time? The question was asked by the polytheists of Arab themselves from the Prophet ﷺ because they were used to hearing long eulogies in one sitting, 'and piecemeal revelations were rather astonishing for them. Apart from this, even before Qurān, other divine Scriptures namely Torah, Zaboor and Injeel were revealed each as a complete Book all at a time, the piecemeal method was not adopted in their case. Allah has Himself provided the answer to this question in the following words:

73: For a complete discussion refer to Al-Itqān v1, p44.

وَقَالَ الَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا لَوْ لَا نُزِّلَ عَلَيْهِ الْقُرْآنُ جُمْلَةً وَّاحِدَةً
كَذَلِكَ لِنُثَبِّتَ بِهِ فُؤَادَكَ وَرَتَّلْنَاهُ تَرْتِيلاً ۝ وَلَا يَأْتُونَكَ بِمَثَلٍ
إِلَّا جِئْنَاكَ بِالْحَقِّ وَأَحْسَنَ تَفْسِيرًا ۝

And those who disbelieve say, "Why has not the Qurān been sent down on him all at once?" Thus, (We send down) that We may strengthen your heart (O Prophet) thereby; and We have rehearsed it to you in a well arranged gradual rehearsal. And they come not to you (O Prophet) with a similitude but that We bring to you the Truth (against it), and the best explanation.

(Al-Furqān, 25:32-33)

Imām Rāzi has presented several reasons for the gradual revelation of the Qurān in his exegesis of the above verse. Let us go through a summary of his presentation;

- 1: The Holy Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ was unlettered. He could not read or write, hence if the entire Qurān was revealed all at a time it would have been difficult to memorize it. Contrary to this Sayyidina Musa عليه السلام knew reading and writing Torah hence was given to him as a complete Scripture in one go.
- 2: If the entire Qurān was revealed all at a time, it would have become obligatory to obey all Commandments at once and this would have been against the wisdom that has been one of the objectives of Shari'ah.

- 3: The Prophet ﷺ was being subjected to fresh torture every day. Frequent revelations of the Qurān through Jibril ﷺ made it easy for him to face these tortures and became a source of sustaining his spirit.
- 4: A great part of the Qurān deals with answers to questions of the people and various events at different times. Hence, revelation of those verses in their relevant backgrounds were more expedient and enhanced the insight of the believers. When the Qurān exposed that which was unseen, its truth became more manifest.⁷⁴

SEQUENCE OF REVELATION AND THE PRESENT ARRANGEMENT

It has been stated earlier that the Qurān was not revealed to the Holy Prophet ﷺ in the order as it exists today. The order of its revelation was different and in accordance with the needs and circumstances of particular times. As soon as a verse was revealed the Prophet ﷺ used to dictate it to the scribes and instruct where exactly to place it and the Surah wherein to write it. They would write it at the place shown by the Prophet ﷺ. No attempt was made either by the Prophet ﷺ or by his companions رضي الله عنهم to preserve the chronological order of the revelations. Hence nobody remembered the order of revelations when it was completed. Hence we may have a partial knowledge of the order of revelation of certain Surahs or verses, but the chronological order of the entire Qurān cannot be ascertained with authenticity. In his book Al-Itqān,⁷⁵ Allāma Suyūṭī has attempted to fix a chronological order of revelation of the Surahs with reference to certain traditions or narrations, but in fact they only affirm which Surah is Makkan and which is Madinani the chronological order cannot be established. Recently some orientalists have also tried to establish the order of revelations. First of all the well known German Orientalist Noldeke⁷⁶ started working on it. Thereafter it became a subject of great interest with other orientalist. William Muir⁷⁷ has also made an individual attempt in this regard. In fact J.M. Rodwell in his English translation of the Qurān has arranged the Surahs in the hypothetical chronological order of Noldeke rather than their popular order.⁷⁸ In early twentieth century. Hartwig Hirschfeld tried to establish a chronological order of not only the Surahs but also the verses of the Qurān.⁷⁹ In addition to this, Regis Blachere⁸⁰ also undertook this task on his French translation. Richard Bell⁸¹ has also gained popularity for this in the west. Orientalists are still at work in this direction. And perhaps being influenced by them, Muslims also have undertaken research on the chronological order of revelation.⁸²

74: At-tafseer-ul-Kabīr - Imām Ar-Rāzi v6, p336 Al-Matba al 'Āmira 1324 AH.

75: Al-Itqān v1, p1-12 A book by an unknown scholar of Andulus has been referred to by Arthur Mubider as giving true chronological order but that is not reliable.

But in our view all these attempts are akin to spending time on a problem that can never be successfully resolved. All the work done by the orientalists is mostly based on their personal conjecture about the text. Since the conjectures differ one from the other the orders described by each of them are also different. Hence, no useful inferences can be derived from these conjectures despite all possible efforts.

In fact all these efforts of the orientalisists are motivated by a particular bias in their minds. They think that the Qurān is still disarranged, and its true arrangement is the order in which it was revealed, but instead of writing it in the form of a book it was written on different materials and hence the original order could not be retained. Rodwell has written in the Preface of his translation of the Qurān that the present order of verses and Surahs of the Qurān is due to the fact that Zayd bin Thābit رضي الله عنه arranged them in the order in which he received them from various sources, and hence chronological order could not be retained.⁸³

In his opinion; therefore, the present arrangement is defective which he wants to correct through his "Research". The picture thus drawn is not only imaginary but totally against undeniable facts because the order of arrangement of the Qurānic verses is proved by Wahy without any difference of opinion. Sayyidina Uthman رضي الله عنه has stated that the Prophet ﷺ used to give clear instructions to his scribes to place a fresh revealed verse in a particular Surah next to such and such verse.⁸⁴ And the companions رضي الله عنهم memorised them in that very order that was shown by the Prophet ﷺ. It is absolutely wrong to say that Zayd رضي الله عنه wrote them in the order in which he received them from the companions. If that were so, the last verse in the existing Qur'an would have been because this was the last verse received by Zayd عليه السلام but it has been inscribed in Surah Al-Ahzāb. This makes it clear that Zayd عليه السلام and his colleagues used to put a verse in the place indicated by the Holy Prophet ﷺ. However among learned people there are two opinions about the arrangement of Surahs. Some say that this, too laid down by Wahy, while others maintain that the Surahs were arranged by the companions according to their understanding. More appropriate seems to be the fact that a number of Surahs were arranged according to Wahy but no clear cut instructions were available about some of them, such as Surah Tawbah which was placed after Surah Anfāl, according to the opinion of the companions.⁸⁵

CAUSES OF REVELATIONS

There are two kinds of verses of the Holy Qurān. The first kind of verses are those that Allah sent down on His own without reference to an incident or enquiry by anyone. The second kind comprised verses that were revealed in reference to an incident or an enquiry. This is termed as the background or cause of revelation of such verses. For example, the following verse of Surah Baqarah.

وَلَا تَنْكِحُوا الْمُشْرِكَاتِ حَتَّى يُؤْمِنَ وَلَأَمَةٌ مُّؤْمِنَةٌ خَيْرٌ مِّنْ
مُّشْرِكَةٍ وَلَوْ أَعْجَبَتْكُمْ

Marry not the mushrikah,⁸⁶ until they believe; and surely a believing slave girl is better than a mushrikah even though she please you. (Al-Baqarah, 2:221)

This verse was revealed in reference to a particular incident. In the pre-Islamic days Marthid bin Abi Marthid Ghanavi عليه السلام had relations with a woman named 'Anaq. After embracing Islam he migrated to Madinah and the woman remained in Makkah. After some time Marthid ﷺ went to Makkah on some business and 'Anaq invited him to fornication but he refused on the ground, "Islam has come between me and you". However, he was willing to marry her if the Prophet, ﷺ allowed him. On return to Madinah he sought permission of the Prophet ﷺ for this. This verse was revealed on that occasion prohibiting marriage with a Mushrikah (Idolatress).⁸⁷ This incident, therefore, forms the cause or the background of revelation of this verse.

85: For details see Fathul Bārī pp 32 to 35 chap. Tālīful Qurān.

IMPORTANCE AND ADVANTAGES

Some people whose knowledge is not deep enough to get a true cognition of such matters deny the importance of background of revelations and argue that the Qurān itself is self-explanatory and one should not feel the need for the causes or backgrounds of various revelations for their explanations. But they are wrong in thinking in this manner. Knowledge of the causes of revelations is an essential condition for exegesis of the Qurān, and it has many advantages some of which are mentioned here.

- 1: 'Allāmah' Zarkashi رحمه الله عليه states that the first advantage of the knowledge of causes of revelation of a verse is that through them we understand the prudence behind various Commandments, and we know why a particular injunction was promulgated?⁸⁸ For example, in Surah an-Nisa it is ordained,

يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا لَا تَقْرَبُوا الصَّلَاةَ وَأَنتُمْ سُكَارَى

O you who believe! Draw not near Salah while you are intoxicated. (An-Nisa, 4:43)

87: Polytheists.

88: Az-Zarkashi: Al-Burhān fi 'uloom al Qurān, v1, p22. Esa Al-Babi 1376 AH.

If we do not keep in view background of revelation of this verse, the question would naturally arise in our minds that when intoxication is totally prohibited by the Qurān what does this verse mean by disallowing Salah in a state of intoxication. The answer to this question can only be found in the background of its revelation. It is stated by Sayyidina ‘Ali عليه السلام that ‘Abdur Raḥmān bin ‘Auf رضي الله عنه once invited some companions to dinner. Drinking had not been prohibited until that time, and hence wine was served after dinner. Meanwhile the time for Salah came and one of the companions led the Salah and because he was intoxicated, he made a mistake in the recitation of the Qurān. The above verses were revealed after this incident.⁸⁹

- 2: Often it is not possible to understand the true meaning of a verse without knowing the background of its revelation. If the background is unknown, a totally wrong meaning may be deduced. A few examples shall make it clear.

In Surah Al-Baqarah, Allah says:

وَلِلَّهِ الْمَشْرِقُ وَالْمَغْرِبُ فَأَيْنَمَا تُولُّوا فَثَمَّ وَجْهُ اللَّهِ

And to Allah belong the East and the west, so whithersoever you turn, there is Allah's countenance.

(Al-Baqarah, 2:115)

If the background of this verse is not kept in view one may deduce that in Salah there is no obligation to face towards a particular direction but this inference is wrong because at another place the Qurān itself has enjoined that Muslims must face towards K'abah during Salah.

This problem can only be solved through the background of revelation of this verse. ‘Abdullah bin 89: Tafseer Ibn Kathīr, v1, p500, Matba'tul Mustafa Muḥammad 1356 AH.

‘Abbās رضى الله تعالى عنهما states that on the occasion of change of direction of Qiblah of Muslims from Bayt-ul-Maqdis to K‘abah the Jews objected to the change in Qiblah. This verse was revealed in the context of this objection⁹⁰, stating that all dicrections belong to Allah and He is Omnipresent hence it becomes obligatory to face in the particular direction commanded by Him. There is no room for conjectures in this matter.

Similarly in the following verse, it is stated:

لَيْسَ عَلَى الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا وَعَمِلُوا الصَّالِحَاتِ جُنَاحٌ فِيمَا
طَعِمُوا إِذَا مَا اتَّقَوْا وَآمَنُوا

On those who believe and do righteous deeds there is no blame for what they may have eaten (in the past) provided they abstain (from the forbidden things), and believe (firmly). (Al-Mā'idah, 5:93)

If we study this verse only in its apparent meanings, it may be inferred that there is no food which is prohibited for Muslims if they are believers and fear Allah and do good deeds. In that case, they are free to eat and drink all that they desire. And since these verses were revealed in association with the verses that prohibited intoxication it can be said that it allows alcoholic drinks and other intoxicants to virtuous believers. Even some companions have misunderstood this verse and they had argued with Sayyidina Umar رضى الله تعالى عنه that a person charged with drinking cannot be subjected to *Hadd*⁹¹ if his life in general had been a pious life. Ibn ‘Abbās رضى الله تعالى عنه removed their misunderstanding by referring to the context in which the verse was revealed.⁹²

91: Hadd: specific Qurānic punishment.

92: Al-Qurtabi: Al-Jami ‘ l-Ahkam-al-Qurān v6, p297, Cairo 1387 AH.

Actually, some companions had wished to know the fate of the departed Companions who had indulged in gambling and drinking before they were forbidden.

This verse was revealed in reply to this question and is specific to this incident.

It clarifies that those who had indulged in drinking and gambling before the ban would not be punished for that if they were believers and had obeyed other commands.⁹³

Here is another example. In Surah Baqarah it is stated:

إِنَّ الصَّفَا وَالْمَرْوَةَ مِنْ شَعَائِرِ اللَّهِ فَمَنْ حَجَّ الْبَيْتَ أَوْ اعْتَمَرَ
فَلَا جُنَاحَ عَلَيْهِ أَنْ يَطَّوَّفَ بِهِمَا

Surely Safa and Marwah are among the emblems of Allah: So whosoever performs the Hajj to the House (of Allah) or performs Umrah, there is no blame on him if he goes around them. (Al-Baqarah, 2:158)

In this verse the words "there is no blame on him" apparently signify that the "Run" between Safa and Marwah as a rite of Hajj or 'Umrah is only permissible but not obligatory.' 'Urwah bin Zubair رضي الله عنه had the same misunderstanding. Sayyidah 'Aishah رضي الله تعالى عنها told him that there used to be two idols kept on the top of these hills. One was called Asāf and the other's name was Nā'ilah and due to this the companions fell into doubt lest the "Run" (Sa'ee) may have been forbidden. This verse was revealed to remove their doubt.⁹⁴

These are a few examples but many more can be cited to indicate that there is a good number of verses which cannot be properly understood without the knowledge of their background.

94: Manāhil-ul-'Irfān v1, p104 (Ref, Bukhārī).

- 3: At times Qurān uses words which have a close relation to the context in which they were revealed, and if their exact background is not known these words would appear irrelevant, and that would spoil the eloquence and laconic beauty of the Qurān, for example, the following verses:

وَاللَّائِي يَئْسَنَ مِنَ الْمَحِيضِ مِنْ نَسَائِكُمْ إِنْ ارْتَبْتُمْ فَعِدَّتُهُنَّ
ثَلَاثَةُ أَشْهُرٍ وَاللَّائِي لَمْ يَحِضْنَ

And as for your women who have despaired of menstruation if you are in doubt, their waiting period is three months, and of those too who have not yet menstruated... (At-Talāq, 65:4)

In this verse the words "if you are in doubt" appear to be irrelevant and hence some people deduced from these words that an old woman who has stopped menstruating and it is certain that she is not pregnant, for her there is no period (of waiting).⁹⁵

But the cause of its revelation clarifies the reason for these words. Ubayy bin Ka'ab رضي الله عنه has stated that at the time the period of waiting was prescribed in Surah An-Nisa, he asked the Holy Prophet ﷺ, "There are some women for whom this period has not been defined in the Qurān, such as small girls who have not yet started menstruating, and old women who have stopped menstruating and pregnant women. This verse was revealed in this context, and it has covered all three kinds."⁹⁶

Further, in Surah al-Baqrah it has been stated:

فَإِذَا قَضَيْتُمْ مَنَاسِكَكُمْ فَاذْكُرُوا اللَّهَ كَذِكْرِكُمْ آبَاءَكُمْ

95: Al-Itqān, v1, p30.

96: Tafsīr Ibn Kathīr v14, p381.

And when you have performed your devotional rites, remember Allah, like your remembrance of your forefathers... (Al-Baqarah, 2:200)

If we do not keep in view the background of revelation of this verse the phrase "like your remembrance of your forefathers" would appear irrelevant, because it is difficult to understand why on this particular occasion Allah's remembrance should be compared to that of the forefathers. But the background of its revelation makes it clear. This verse has been revealed in connection with the rites of stay of pilgrims in Muzdalifah. It was customary with the pagan Arabs that after fulfilling the devotional rites of Hajj they used to boast about the virtues and achievements of their forefathers. Allah ordained that instead of boasting about forefathers they should remember and glorify Allah.⁹⁷

- 4: There are many places in the Qurān where a passing reference is made to a particular incident, and such verses cannot be understood unless that incidence is known, for example:

وَمَا رَمَيْتَ إِذْ رَمَيْتَ وَلَكِنَّ اللَّهَ رَمَىٰ

And you (O Prophet) threw not when you did throw (a handful of dust), but Allah threw, it (Al-Anfāl, 8:17)

Here, there is a reference to the battle of Badr when the Prophet ﷺ had thrown a handful of dust towards the enemy who had besieged the Muslims, and the dust grains went into their eyes and the siege was lifted.⁹⁸

It is quite obvious that one will not understand the true meaning of this verse without knowing this background.

It is not intended here to describe all the benefits of studying the causes or backgrounds of particular verses but the foregoing examples must have highlighted their importance to an exegetist of the Qurān. For the same reason Imām Mahdi رحمه الله عليه has stated:

98: Asbāb-un-nuzūl-lil-Wahidi p133.

As long as the background of a verse and circumstances are unknown, it is not possible to define the meaning of the verse.⁹⁹

Hence those people who reject the importance of causes or backgrounds of revelations are either ignorant or they do it in order to give their own interpretation to the subjects of the Qurān.

CAUSES OF REVELATIONS AND SHAH WALI-ULLAH

The renowned scholar of Hadith Shāh Wali-ullāh Dehlavi رحمه الله عليه has presented a thoughtful discussion on the causes of Revelations in his book “Al-Fawzul Kabīr. Some people who have not been able to understand it properly say that he has not given any importance to the causes of Revelations in exegesis or has at least minimised their importance. But this is due to lack of understanding of the meaning of Shāh Waliullāh’s discussion. In fact, he considers the knowledge of the causes of Revelations as a prime condition for exegesis, just like the majority of Muslims. But what he has written is this:

”ويذكرون المحدثون في ذيل آيات القرآن كثيرا من الاشياء
ليست من قسم سبب النزول في الحقيقة مثل استشهاد الصحابة
في مناظراتهم بأية وتلاوته صلى الله عليه وسلم أية للاستشهاد
في كلامه الشريف او رواية حديث وافق الآية في اصل الغرض او
تعيين موضع النزول او تعيين اسماء المذكورين بطريق الإيهام او

99: Asbab-un-Nuz ul-lil-Wahidi p4.

بطريق التلفظ بكلمة قرآنية او فضل سور و آيات من القرآن
او صورة امتثاله صلى الله عليه وسلم بامر من او امر القرآن و نحو
ذلك، وليس شيء من هذا فى الحقيقة من اسباب النزول-“¹⁰⁰

The gist of this discussion is that in the books of exegesis sometimes we find several narrations in connection with a single verse. All these narrations are not related to the causes of Revelation of that verse but may contain the following:

- 1: At times a Companion may have quoted a verse as an argument at a scholarly discussion, and the commentators cite his argument as a minor relation to that verse.
- 2: Sometimes the Prophet ﷺ cited a verse as a testimony on a particular occasion. The commentators reproduce that when explaining the meaning of that verse.
- 3: Sometimes the Prophet ﷺ stated the same subject as has been revealed in a Qurānic verse. In the books of exegesis that Hadith is also quoted under that verse.
- 4: Sometimes the exegetists quote a narration simply to tell the place where the verse was revealed, and this is also made a part of exegesis.
- 5: Sometimes the Qurān mentions certain people without giving their names. The commentators specify their names through various narrations.
- 6: Sometimes the correct pronunciation of a particular word of the Qurān is known through a Hadith. The books of exegesis reproduce that Hadith.
- 7: Some traditions and verses define the excellence of certain Surāhs or verses of the Qurān. The commentators quote them at the relevant place in their exegesis.

- 8: Sometimes those Aḥādith are included in the exegesis which tell us how the Holy Prophet ﷺ conducted himself in relation to the injunction contained in the verse.

Shāh Wali-ullāh has stated that all such narrations come neither under the definition of causes of Revelation nor is it necessary for the commentators to be fully conversant with them. However, all those traditions which are factually the causes of revelation must be known to any commentator, and it is not proper for anyone to explain the Qurān without this knowledge. Shāh Wali-Ullah has elaborated this in the following words:

و انما شرط المفسر امران، الاول ما تعرض به الآيات من القصص
فلا يتيسر فهم الايماء بتلك الآيات الا بمعرفة تلك القصص،
والثاني ما يخصص العام من القصة او مثل ذلك من وجوه صرف
الكلام عن الظاهر فلا يتيسر فهم المقصود من الآيات بدونها-¹⁰¹

“However, a commentator must have knowledge of two things. First, the incidents and happenings in the verses, because it is not easy to understand the hints unless the incidents are known. Secondly, sometimes an incident is described in common words but the background of its revelation makes it specific, or the apparent meaning is different from the one determined in the light of the background of its revelation. It is difficult to understand the true meanings of Qurānic verses without having knowledge of such traditions.

101: Al-Fawzul Kabīr fi Usūl tafsīr p.23.

CAUSES OF REVELATIONS AND GENERALISATION AND SPECIFICATION OF COMMANDS

The verses of the Qurān revealed against a particular background are of four kinds in relation to their general or specific application.

- 1: Verses where a particular person has been named and thus it is specified that the subject matter refers exclusively to him. There is a consensus of opinion among the scholars that the subject matter of these verses would relate specifically to the person named and shall not apply to others, for example.

تَبَّتْ يَدَا أَبِي لَهَبٍ وَتَبَّ ۝

Perished are the hands of Abu Lahab. (Al-Lahab, 111:1)

The background of revelation of this verse is well known, that when the Holy Prophet ﷺ stood atop the mount Safā and preached Islam to the Quraysh, Abu Lahab had said:

تَبَّالِكَ إِلَهَذَا دَعَوْتَنَا؟

Perish be you, did you invite us for this?

This was the cause of revelation of the above verse and the name of Abu Lahab has been specifically mentioned. Therefore, the warning refers to him alone.¹⁰²

2. In the other kind of verses attributes of a particular person or a group or a thing are described without naming anyone and some injunctions are laid down on the basis of these attributes. However, other evidences reveal the person or group or things meant. In this situation also there is a consensus among the scholars that the commandment thus pronounced shall be exclusively applicable to that person, or group or thing alluded to in the Qurān and it shall not apply to others even though the same attributes may be found in them, for example the verse of Surah Al-Layl:

وَسَيُجَنَّبُهَا الْأَتْقَى ○ الَّذِي يُؤْتِي مَالَهُ يَتَزَكَّى ○

Far removed from it will be the most God-fearing who gives his wealth to purify himself. (Al-Layl, 92:17-18)

This verse was revealed about Abu Bakr Ṣiddiq رضي الله عنه whose practice was to purchase poor slaves and then free them.¹⁰³ Here, the name of Abu Bakr has not been mentioned but the attributes pertain to him and narrations of the Prophet ﷺ tell us that it refers to Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه alone and, therefore the grace of this verse is reserved for him. For this reason, Imām Rāzi has inferred from this verse that Abu Bakr Ṣiddiq رضي الله عنه is the most exalted among all mankind after the Prophets عليهم السلام because in this verse he has been described as “the most devoted.”

And another verse says..

Surely the noblest among you in the sight of Allah is the most pious of you. (Al-Hujurāt, 49:13)

There is consensus among the commentators that the verse specifically refers to Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه even though he has not been named, because of two reasons. First, the word 'الأتقى' (Al-Atqā) can be used for a specific person only due to the prefix 'ال' (Al) according to Arabic grammar. Secondly, the Hadith of the Prophet ﷺ confirms this assertion.¹⁰⁴

Hence the verses would not be applicable to anyone else

103: Asbāb-un-Nuzūl lil Waḥidi p255.

104. Al-Itqān, v1, p31.

even if he were to spend in the way of Allāh.¹⁰⁵

Verses in the third category are those that were revealed against a particular background. However, its words carry a universal application and some other extraneous argument also signifies that the commandment in that verse is not exclusive to that background alone but in fact would apply to all incidents of a similar nature. The consensus about this type of verses is that its application will be universal as governed by its words and shall not be specific to the incident in the background of its revelation. For example, it is authentically established that the introductory verses of Surah Al-Mujādilah were revealed about Sayyidah Khawlah رضى الله عنها¹⁰⁶ whose husband had said to her:

أَنْتِ عَلَيَّ كَظَهْرِ أُمِّي

You are to me like the back of my mother.

But the words of the verses denote that the commandment given thereby is not exclusive for the husband of Sayyidah Khawlah رضى الله عنها but is applicable to all such people who use these words for their wives.

It is obligatory for these men that before they have sexual relation with their wives they should free a slave, or keep sixty fasts or feed sixty poor people.

4: The fourth kind of verses were revealed in the background of a particular incident but the words carry a general sense and there is no extraneous argument to suggest that the verse or verses are exclusive to that incident in application or have a general application for all similar situations. There is a slight difference of opinion about it among the various commentators. Some say that the verse should be related strictly to the cause of its revelation but, contrary to this, majority of scholars hold the view that in this situation it would be more reliable to interpret the words in their general meaning rather than in the specific context of the cause of revelation. Hence, the tenets derived out of the verse should apply to all such situations as the words suggest. The rule framed by the authors of principles in Jurisprudence and Exegesis is described by the popular sentence :

105. For further details see Al-Itqān v 1, p30.

106. Asbāb-un-Nuzūl-lil-Wāḥidi p231.

الْعِبْرَةُ لِعُمُومِ اللَّفْظِ لَا لِخُصُوصِ السَّبَبِ

Reliance will be placed on the generalisation of words and not on the specific cause of revelation.

But in fact this difference is only hypothetical. In practice there is no difference, because even those scholars who firmly bind the verses of Qurān with the cause of their revelation apply them in other similar situations.

The only difference is that the majority of scholars deduce their laws with the verse as their source while others do so on the authority of Hadith, consensus etc. This is easily understood with the following example. In surah al-Baqarah it has been stated:

وَإِنْ كَانَ ذُو عُسْرَةٍ فَنَظِرَةٌ إِلَىٰ مَيْسَرَةٍ

But if the debtor is in difficulty let there be respite till it is easy (for him). (Al-Baqarah, 2:280)

The background of revelation of this verse is that Banu Mughirah owed some money to Banu 'Amr bin 'Umayr. Meanwhile, the verses prohibiting interest were revealed. Banu 'Amr said to their debtors that they would write off the interest but asked for prompt repayment of the principal. Banu Mughirah made the plea that they were facing difficulty and requested some respite. Banu 'Amr refused to give them any respite. The said verse was revealed concerning this incident.¹⁰⁷

Now both groups of scholars agree that the commandment contained in the verse has a general application. It is better for every lender to give respite to his debtor if he faces straitened circumstances. The difference in their views lies in that a majority of them take that very verse as the source of this particular commandment, but others argue that while the verse was meant exclusively for Banu 'Amr, they cite the Aḥādith and consensus as the source of general application. It thus proves that this difference in opinion does not have any effect on the practical application of the command.¹⁰⁸

DIFFERENT AHĀDITH AGAINST CAUSES OF REVELATIONS

In working on the exegesis of the Qurān a great difficulty is experienced in citing the causes of revelation when we come across different narrations for the same verse. Anyone not fully conversant with the principles of exegesis gets involved into various doubts and confusions. Hence, it is essential to understand the reality of these differences. To get over these difficulties, scholars have framed very useful rules, which are summarised below.

- 1: The Companions  and their followers were used to explain a verse saying, this verse was revealed about such and such tenet or matter. This creates the wrong impression that they may have defined the cause of its revelation, while in fact they meant to explain that such and such tenet is derived from this particular verse.¹⁰⁹

107: Asbābun-Nuzūl-lil-Wahīdi p51.

108: We have presented a brief account of this question. It is discussed in detail in Al-Burhān by Zarkashi v1, p24 Al-Itqān v1, p30, and Manāhil ul Irfān v1, pp118-127.

109: Ibn Taymiyah: Muqaddamah fi Usūl il Tafsīr p9. al-Maktaba al-'Ilmiyah Lahore 1388 AH. and Al-Itqān.

For example, in Surah an Nisa, Iblis has been quoted to have said,

وَلَأْمُرَنَّهُمْ فَلْيَغَيِّرُنَّ خَلْقَ اللَّهِ

And I will command them so that they will alter Allah's creation. (An-Nisa, 4:119)

In explaining this, Anas bin Mālik رضي الله عنه 'Ikrimah رضي الله عنه and others have stated that this verse has been revealed about castration,¹¹⁰ but this does not mean that some one got himself castrated at that time and thus became the cause of its revelation. In fact it means that castration is one of the devilish acts which Satan uses to alter Allah's creation. It does not mean that altering Allah's creation depends on castration but there may be several other ways to do that and these have been mentioned in the books of Exegesis.

On getting acquainted with the mode of description employed by the Companions and their followers we come to know of two rules in connection with the background of revelation.

- a: * If two different narrations are quoted to explain a verse and the words. "This verse was revealed about such and such matter," have been used in both the narrations, there is in fact no contradiction in both of them. Both are correct in their context because none of them mean that the incident was the cause of revelation of that verse. It only means that this matter is governed by the subject and injunctions of this verse. The following example shall make it more clear. Allah has said about pious persons

Their sides forsake their beds. (As-Sajdah, 32:16)

110: Durr Manthur, Suyūti, v2, p223.

About this verse Anas bin Mālīk رضي الله عنه states that this verse has been revealed about those Companions who kept themselves engaged in offering optional Ṣalah between the Maghrib and Isha obligatory prayers. In another narration he has been quoted to have said that the verse has been revealed about those who kept themselves awake for the 'Isha Ṣalahs. Some other Companions consider it to be attributed to those who used to wake for late night prayers (Tahajjud).¹¹¹

On the face of it, the varying interpretations seem to be due to different causes of its revelation but in fact these are the various attributes of this verse and it includes virtuous deeds in its meaning.

- b: If there are two narrations used in the exegesis of a verse, one using the words... نزلت الآية في كذا (This verse has been revealed about such matter) and the other specifically mentioning an incident the cause of its revelation, Then in this case the latter narration will be relied upon. The former narration being non-specific in relation to the cause of revelation shall be taken as narrators own interpretation or opinion. For example, the Qurān states...

نَسَاؤُكُمْ حَرْثٌ لَّكُمْ فَاتُوا حَرْثَكُمْ أَنَّى شِئْتُمْ

Your wives are a tillage for you so come to your tillage as you will. (Al-Baqarah, 2:223)

About this verse Bukhārī has quoted Ibn 'Umar رضي الله عنه as saying that it has been revealed about rectal coitus with women.¹¹² But Jābir رضي الله عنه and 'Abdullah bin 'Abbās رضي الله عنه specify the cause of its revelation to refute the prevalent Jewish conception that vaginal coitus with a woman in lateral or prostate position will result in squint-eyed offsprings. Thus, this verse has clarified that coitus should be exclusively vaginal but any posture may be adopted for it.¹¹³

113: Asbābun Nuzūl lil-Wahīdī p41.

Of the two foregoing narrations, the version of Sayyidina Jābir رضي الله عنه and Sayyidina Ibn ‘Abbās رضي الله عنه is preferred because it is specific and detailed while Ibn ‘Umar’s narration will be taken as his own interpretation.¹¹⁴ In fact even he does not read in this verse permission for rectal coitus. Rather, he means that the verse prohibits this the unnatural act,¹¹⁵ (because in it the woman has been called a tillage, that is, a means of production of human race which is not possible through rectal coitus.)

- 2: If one narration is supported by a sound transmission and the other has weak or inconsistent precedents the former will be adopted and the latter ignored. For example the initial verses of Surah Ad-duha

وَالضُّحَى ○ وَاللَّيْلِ إِذَا سَجَى ○ مَا وَدَّعَكَ رَبُّكَ وَمَا قَلَى ○

By the morning brightness, by the night when it is still, your Lord has not forsaken you, nor is He displeased.

(Ad-Duha 93:1-3)

Bukhārī and Muslim have narrated the version of Jundub رضي الله عنه ascribing the background of these verses to an incident when due to some trouble the Holy Prophet ﷺ could not offer Salat-ut-Tahajjud (late night prayers) for one or two nights. On this an unbeliever woman taunted him: “It seems that your Satan (God forbid), has deserted you.”

On the other hand, Tabarānī and Ibn Abi Shaybah have quoted Khawlah, the grandmother of Ḥafs bin Maisarah رضي الله تعالى عنها that a puppy once sat down under a cot in the house of the Prophet ﷺ and died there. “For four days thereafter no Wahy came to him and he asked me what has happened in the house that Archangel Jibrīl was not coming to me, I thought I must clean the house. When I swept under the cot the dead puppy was discovered under it.” These verses were revealed on this occasion. But this narration is not based on authentic precedents because, as Ḥāfiz Ibn Ḥajar says some of its narrators are unreliable.

115: Manāhil-ul-‘Irfan v1, p108.

Hence, the narration carried by Bukhārī has the reliable background of revelation of these verses.¹¹⁶

- 3: Sometimes both the narrations are based on authentic precedents but there may exist a reason to prefer one of them. For example, the precedents of one of them may be more authentic than of the other, or the narrator of one was a witness of that incident while the other was not. In such a situation the narration having stronger reason for preference will be adopted. For example the verse of Surah Al-Isrā, says.

وَيَسْأَلُونَكَ عَنِ الرُّوحِ قُلِ الرُّوحُ مِنْ أَمْرِ رَبِّي وَمَا أُوتِيتُمْ مِنَ الْعِلْمِ إِلَّا قَلِيلًا ۝ and they ask you (O Prophet) concerning the Spirit, say, “The spirit is by the command of my Lord, and you have not been given of knowledge except a little.”

(Al-Isrā, 17:85)

Imām Bukhārī carries a Ḥadīth about the background of revelation of this verse from ‘Abdullah bin Mas‘ūd. He said, “I was going with the Prophet in Madinah and he walked with the support of a date-stick, we passed by some Jews. They said to each other that they should ask him some questions. Accordingly, they asked him to tell them about the Spirit. On this he stopped and after some moments raised his head and I knew that he was receiving a Wahy. Then he recited the verse قل الروح من امر ربي - الخ (say, the spirit...)”

The other version is quoted by Imām Tirmizi from Ibn ‘Abbās ؓ that the Quraysh of Makkah once asked the 116: Al-Itqān v.1 p.33 where more examples may be found.

Jews to advise them what they may ask the Prophet ﷺ. The Jews suggested that they ask him about the Spirit and then this verse was revealed.

The first version denotes that this verse was revealed in Madinah while the second one suggests that it was revealed in Makkah. The precedents of both are correct, but preference will be in favour of the first because its narrator ‘Abdullah bin Mas‘ūd ؓ was himself present when the incident occurred, but it is not clear from the second narration whether the narrator was himself present when the incident occurred.¹¹⁷

- 4: Sometimes there are more causes of revelation of a verse than one. Several identical incidents occur one after the other and the verse is revealed concerning them. Now, one narrator cites one incident while another other incident as its background. Apparently, they seem to be contradictory but in fact there is no contradiction because both of them are causes of revelation. For example, regarding the verses of Suarah An-Nūr about Li‘ān (oath of condemnation) Imām Bukhārī has quoted ‘Abdullah Ibn ‘Abbās رضى الله عنه as saying that Hilāl bin Umaiyyah ؓ in the presence of the Prophet ﷺ accused his wife of committing adultery. On that, these verses were revealed... {والذين يرمون ازواجهم - الخ.} And those who accuse their wives...an-Nūr, 24:6} Again, Bukhārī has quoted another narration by Sahl bin Sa‘ād ؓ that ‘Uwaimir ؓ had asked the Prophet ﷺ whether a man will be liable for indemnity of blood if he kills the man whom he finds having sex with his wife.

What should he do in such a situation. The Prophet ﷺ said, “Qurānic verses have been revealed about you,” and then he recited these very verses. There is yet another narration in Musnad Bazzāz citing Ḥuzayfah ؓ that the verses were revealed after Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه and 'Umar رضي الله عنه had been discussing the subject.'

The fact is that all these three incidents had already occurred before the verses were revealed and each of them can be said to be the cause or background of their revelation.

5: Sometimes it happens the other way round. Several verses are revealed in the background of a single incident. Now, one narrator cites the incident relating to one of those verses, while another cites the same incident in relation to another verse. This gives an impression of an apparent contradiction but in fact no contradiction exists.

For example, Imām Tirmizi and Ḥākim have quoted Umm Salamah رضي الله تعالى عنها that she once said to the Prophet that she did not find any mention of women in the Qurān in relation to migration etc, and the following verse was revealed after that;

فَاسْتَجَابَ لَهُمْ رَبُّهُمْ أَنِّي لَا أُضِيعُ عَمَلَ عَامِلٍ مِّنْكُمْ مِّنْ ذَكَرٍ أَوْ أُنْثَىٰ

So their Lord accepted their prayer, (saying), "Never will I waste the work of any worker among you, be he male or female." (Al-'Imrān, 3:195)

Imām Ḥākim has also quoted Umm Salamah رضي الله عنها that she once said to the Prophet that Qurān mentions only males while there is no mention of women anywhere. On this, the following verses were revealed ان المسلمين والمسلمت {Surely, the Muslim men and the Muslim women...}¹¹⁸ and {Never will I waste} انى لا اضيع عمل عامل منكم من ذكر او انثى¹¹⁹

118: This is a verse from surah Al-Ahzāb (33:35) in which men and women are named against several righteous deeds.

119: Al-Itqān v.1 p 35.

REPETITION OF REVELATIONS AND ITS REALITY

The sixth form is repetition of a verse.

- 6: Sometimes the same verse has been revealed more than once and every time its revelation had a different background. As a result, some narrators described the other background. Here also there is no contradiction because the verse has been revealed separately on both the occasions.

For example, Imām Bukhārī and Imām Muslim have quoted that at the time of Abu Ṭālib's death the Prophet ﷺ said to him, "O my uncle, just say 'There is no God but Allah' then I shall intercede for you."

Abu Jahl and 'Abdullah bin Umaiyah were also present there and, when they found him inclined to believe, they at once said to Abu Ṭālib, "Do you want to give up the religion of 'Abdul Muṭṭalib?" And they kept on speaking until Abu Ṭālib came out with the words, "I persist on the religion of 'Abdul Muṭṭalib." The Prophet ﷺ then said, "I will keep on begging forgiveness for you until I am stopped from doing so." The following verse was then revealed,

مَا كَانَ لِلنَّبِيِّ وَالَّذِينَ آمَنُوا أَنْ يَسْتَغْفِرُوا لِلْمُشْرِكِينَ

It is not for the Prophet, and those who believe to ask forgiveness for the associators... (Al-Tawbah. 9:113)

On the other hand, Imām Tirmizi has quoted Sayyidina 'Ali ؑ with a sound line of transmission as saying, "I heard a man begging forgiveness for his polytheist parents. I asked him why he did that for his polytheist parents. He told me that Prophet Ibrahim ؑ had also begged forgiveness for his father who was an idolater. When I told this to our Prophet ﷺ this verse was revealed to him.”

Yet another incident has been cited by Hākīm from ‘Abdullah bin Mas‘ūd رضي الله عنه that once the Holy Prophet ﷺ went to the graveyard and kept on praying and weeping by the side of a grave. Then he said that that was his mother’s grave, and he begged permission from Allah to pray for her forgiveness but he was not given the permission, and this verse was revealed to him. ما كان للنبي والذين آمنوا، إلخ.

This very verse has been mentioned in the background of all the three incidents. Hence the commentators have deduced that this verse was revealed separately on all the three occasions.¹²⁰

Here the question may arise when a verse was already written down and memorized by the Prophet ﷺ and a number of his companions why was it revealed repeatedly?

The question has been answered very well by Shāh Wali Ullāh Muhaddith Dehlavi that in such cases the actual revelation of the verse is made just once. However, when an incident, similar to the one that was the cause of its first revelation, occurs again the same verse is recalled as a reminder in the heart of the Prophet ﷺ. It then serves as a guidance in that situation too. This reminder from Allah is infused in the heart of the Prophet ﷺ and is, therefore, the same as ‘Inspiration in the Heart’ which is one of the kinds of Wahy described in detail earlier. The exegetists liken it to 'Repeated Revelation.' Everytime it was inspired in the heart of the Prophet ﷺ it was like a fresh revelation.¹²¹

120: This example has been taken from Al-Itqān v1, p34 but it is subject to assumption that all the three narrations are authentic while in fact the authenticity of the third narration is doubtful. Hāfiẓ Zahabi censors it (Mustadrak v1.2, p.336) and Ibn Hajar has cited different views of the ‘Ulamā on Ayyub bin Hānī (Tahzib at Tahzib v1.1, p.414) It can neither be considered as forged nor can it form the basis for a delicate maxim concerning belief. Thus a large group of the ‘Ulamā of Ahl-us Sunnah believe, on the basis of several arguments, that the parents of the Prophet ﷺ were believers by virtue of their Faith on the religion of Ibrāhim. ‘Allāma Suyuṭī himself has written a resolute treatise on this subject.

The doubts or differences that are created in connection with the causes of revelation through Aḥādith can be removed if the above six principles are kept in view.

121: Al-Fawzul Kabīr p22, (Ma'rifah Asbāb-un-Nuzūl).

CHAPTER 3

THE SEVEN READINGS OF THE QURĀN

According to an authentic Hadith, the Holy Prophet ﷺ has said,

ان هذا القرآن أنزل على سبعة احرف فاقرأوا ما تيسر منه -

Qurān has been revealed covering seven versions. So recite it in a way that is easy for you from out of these.¹²²

What is meant by revelation of the Qurān on seven letters? This is a very momentous and lengthy subject and, indeed, one of the most complicated discussions on the sciences of the Qurān. It is very difficult to discuss it in full details in this work but the important things about it are being presented below.

The Hadith quoted above is uninterrupted as far as its meanings are concerned, so that the renowned Muhaddith Imām Abu ‘Ubayd Qāsim bin Salām رحمه الله عليه has affirmed its continuity. The well-known Imām of Hadith and Qir’at ‘Allāmah Ibnul-Jazari has stated that he has put together all the variations of this Tradition in a separate chapter. According to him, this Hadith has been narrated by ‘Umar bin Khattāb, Hishām bin Ḥākim bin Hizam, ‘Abdur Raḥmān bin ‘Auf, Ubayy bin Ka‘b, ‘Abdullah bin Mas‘ūd, Mu‘āz ibn Jabal, Abu Hurayrah, ‘Abdullah bin 122: Sahih Bukhārī, Kitāb Fadail ul Qurān.

‘Abbās, Abu Sa‘īd Khudri, Ḥuzaifah bin Yamān, Abu Bakr, ‘Amr bin ‘Āas, Zayd bin Arqam, Anas bin Mālīk, Samurah bin Jundub, ‘Umar bin Abi Salmah, Abu Jaham, Abu Talhā and Umm Ayyub Ansariyah رضى الله تعالى عنهم اجمعين.¹²³

In addition, several others have referred to the incident that while addressing a congregation, Sayyidina Uthmān رضى الله تعالى عنه the third Caliph, proclaimed that all those who had heard the tradition that the Qurān was revealed on seven letters each of which was effectual, should stand up. In response to this the number of companions who stood up was so large that they could not be counted.¹²⁴

MEANING OF SEVEN LETTERS

The first problem we face with this Ḥadith is what is meant by the revelation of Qurān on “Seven Readings?” We find a great deal of difference of opinion on this subject. Upto 35 different views have been quoted by ‘Allāma Ibn-ul-‘Arabi and others. Some of the popular views are quoted below.

- 1: Some people think that “Seven Readings” refers to the recitals of the seven well-known Qāris (Recitors of Qurān). But this view is unfounded and wrong, because the recitals *mutawātir*¹²⁵ of the Qurān are not limited to seven. Rather, many other recitals are confirmed through Tawātir narrations. The “Seven” became popular because ‘Allāmah Ibn Mujāhid had compiled a selection of seven of them in a book. He neither meant that recitation of the Qurān was limited to those variations nor did he intend to elucidate the seven readings through the seven recitals.

- 2: On the same basis some scholars have opined that 'readings' include all the different recitals, but the word 'seven' does not specify the number seven. It means 'many'. The word 'seven' is very often used in Arabic language to denote excess of something. Here also the Hadith does not intend that the 'Readings' on which the Qurān is revealed are specifically seven, but it denotes that the Qurān is revealed in 'many' readings. Of the earlier scholars, Qaḍī 'Ayāḍ رحمه الله held the same view,¹²⁶ and in the latest period Shāh Wali-ullāh upheld the same opinion.¹²⁷

But this view does not seem to be correct because Bukhārī and Muslim have quoted Ibn 'Abbās رضي الله عنه saying that he heard the Prophet ﷺ say:

اقرأني جبريلُ على حرف فراجعتهُ، فلم ازل استزیده و يزیدنی
حتى انتهی الى سبعة احرف۔

Jibrīl taught me the Qurān in one reading but I turned to him and did not cease asking him to allow more until he ended up at seven readings.¹²⁸

The tradition is reported in detail in Muslim on the authority of Ubayy bin Ka'b رضي الله عنه that the Prophet ﷺ was sitting by the pond of Banu Ghifār.

فأتاه جبرئيل عليه السلام فقال ان الله يأمرک ان تقرأ امتک القرآن

So Jibril عليه السلام came to the Prophet ﷺ and said, “Allah has commanded you that all your people should recite the Qurān following one method of reading.” On that he said, “I seek the forgiveness of Allah, my people do not have the ability to do so.” Then Jibril came to him again and said, “Allah has commanded that your people recite the Qurān following two readings.” He said, “I seek the forgiveness of Allah, my people do not have the ability to do even that” then he came a third time and said, “Allah has commanded you that your people should read the Qurān following three readings.” The Prophet ﷺ again said, “I seek forgiveness from Allah, my people have no ability for that too.” Then Jibril عليه السلام came a fourth time and said, “Allah has commanded you to let your people recite the Qurān following seven readings.” Hence whichever recital they would follow will be correct.¹²⁹ that the word 'seven' does not denote an unspecified large number but it denotes the exact quantity 'seven'. Hence, in the light of these narrations this view (that seven means more than that) does not hold good and the majority of scholars reject it.

Some other scholars, including Ḥāfiz Ibn Jarīr Tabarī and others have stated that, in this Tradition, the seven readings indicate the seven dialects of the Tribes of Arabia. The Arabs belonged to different tribes and the language of each tribe, in spite of being Arabic, had a slightly different dialect. It was as usually occurs with a major language that several dialects naturally evolve on regional basis. Hence, for the convenience of different tribes, Allah revealed the Qurān on seven dialects so that every tribe may read it according to its own dialect.¹³⁰ Imām Abu Ḥātim Sijistānī رحمه الله عليه has even enumerated the names of these tribes and has stated that the Qurān was revealed in the dialects of these seven tribes. They are: Quraysh, Ḥuzayl, Taymur Rabāb, Azd, Rabī'ah, Hawāzin and S'ad bin Bakr. And Ḥāfiz Ibn Abdul Barr has relied upon some authorities to name the tribes thus: Ḥuzayl, Kinānah, Dabbah, Taymur Rabāb Asad bin Khuzaimah and Quraysh.¹³¹

However, many researchers, such as Ḥāfiz Ibn 'Abdul Barr, 'Allāmah Suyūṭī and 'Allāmah Ibnul Jazarī have refuted this view due to certain reasons.

First, the number of Arabian tribes was quite large, why should seven be selected? Secondly, there was a disagreement between Sayyidina Umar ؓ and Sayyidina Hishām bin Hakīm ؓ on the correct recital of the Qurān. This is reported in Saḥīḥ Bukhārī in detail, although both of them were of the Quraysh and the Prophet ﷺ confirmed that both were correct and said that the Qurān had been revealed on seven readings. If seven readings were meant to denote dialects of the seven different tribes there should have been no difference in the views of 'Umar رضي الله عنه Hishām.¹³² 'Allāmah Ālūsī has, however, stated that it was possible that the Prophet ﷺ might have taught the Qurān to one of them on a dialect different from the Quraysh dialect.¹³³ But this argument is weak because the purpose of revelation of the Qurān in different dialects was to make its recital easy for every tribe, hence it does not conform to the Prophetic wisdom to teach the Qurān to a Quraysh in a different dialect.

Apart from this, Imām Ṭaḥāwī has raised another objection that, if the seven readings corresponded to tribes, then it is in contradiction to the Qurānic proclamation.

And We have sent no Messenger but with the language of his people. (Surah Ibrahim, 14:4)

There is no doubt that the Prophet's people were the Quraysh, hence it is apparant that the Qurān was revealed in the dialect of the Quraysh only.¹³⁴ This view of Imām Ṭaḥāwī is supported by the fact that when Sayyidina Uthmān رضي الله عنه intended to gather the Qurān a second time and formed a committee comprising the Companions headed by Zayd bin Thābit رضي الله عنه for this purpose, he instructed them, 132: An-Nashr fil Qirā' ul-'Ashr v1, p.25 and Fathul Bārī v9, p23.

إِذَا اخْتَلَفْتُمْ فِي شَيْءٍ مِّنَ الْقُرْآنِ فَاصْلُحُوا بِلِسَانِ
قُرَيْشٍ فَإِنَّمَا نَزَلَ بِلِسَانِهِمْ -

“If you differ about any point of dialect in Qurān you should adopt the dialect of Quraysh because the Qurān has been revealed in their language.”¹³⁵

Sayyidina ‘Uthmān رضي الله عنه made it clear that the Qurān has been revealed only in the language of Quraysh. The question then arises why should there be a difference among them? This would be discussed in detail further on.

Apart from this, the proponents of this view hold that “Seven” and “Recital” are two separate things. The variations in its recital which exist even today belong to one dialect only, which is the language of the Quraysh. The other dialects were either abrogated or eliminated for some valid reason. On this question, among the several doubts one observes that in the entire collection of Aḥādith, we do not find any proof that there were two kinds of differences in the recital of the Qurān, one pertaining to ‘Seven Dialects and the other pertaining to the words of ‘Recital’. In fact wherever a difference in the words of the Qurān has been mentioned it is referred to as dialect difference. Difference in recital is not mentioned as a separate difference. For these reasons this view also serves as a weak argument.

- 4: The fourth popular view is that of Imām Ṭaḥāvi. According to him, the Qurān was revealed only in the dialect of Quraysh but because the people of Arabia belonged to different regions and different tribes and it was very difficult for all of them to recite it in one dialect, hence in the beginning they were permitted to recite it in synonymous words of their language. Thus the Prophet ﷺ had himself suggested synonymous for those people who could not recite the Qurān in the original words correctly. These synonyms were chosen from the dialects of both, the Quraysh and non-Quraysh. Such as, instead of تعال words like ادن ، اقبل ، هلم could be read because they had the same meaning. But this permission was given in the early days of Islam when all Arabs were not fully acquainted with the language of the Qurān. But gradually, this language gained more circulation and the people of Arabia got used to it. They found it easy to recite in the original diction of Qurān. In the month of Ramadan before his death, the Prophet ﷺ sat with Jibril (عليه السلام) for the final Revision of the Qurān. This is known as Ardul Akhīrah (the Final Revision). The use of synonyms was thereafter disallowed and only the original diction of the Qurān remained.¹³⁶

According to this view the tradition relating to “Seven Dialects” pertained only to the period when the use of synonyms was permissible in the recitation of the Qurān, and it did not mean that the Qurān was revealed in seven dialects. But that it has been revealed with a flexibility that for a certain period it could be recited in seven dialects and even that did not mean that they were permitted to use seven synonyms with every word of the Qurān, but that the maximum number of synonyms that could be used was seven. Further, this relaxation did not mean that everybody was free to choose the synonyms of his own choice, but the words were chosen by the Prophet ﷺ himself, and he taught the Qurān to everyone in the diction that was easy for him. Hence only those synonyms were permitted that were proved from Prophet ﷺ.¹³⁷

137: Fathul Bārī, v9, pp22, 23.

Apart from Imām Ṭaḥāvi, Sufyan bin ‘Uyainah رحمه الله and Ibn Wahb رحمه الله also subscribe to this view. Hāfīz Ibn ‘Abdul Barr رحمه الله goes on to attribute the view to most scholars.¹³⁸

This view appears to be more logical than all the other views and its advocates present as an argument the following narration of Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه as quoted in Musnad Ahmed.

ان جبرئيل قال يا محمد (صلى الله عليه وسلم) اقرأ القرآن على حرف، قال ميكائيل استزده حتى بلغ سبعة احرف، قال كل شاف كاف ما لم تخط اية عذاب برحمة او رحمة بعذاب، نحو قولك تعال و اقبل و هلم و اذهب و اسرع و عجل.

Jibril رضي الله عنه said to the Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم “O Muḥammad read the Qurān on one diction.” Mika-il رضي الله عنه said to the Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم to get the number increased, till the matter reached upto seven. Jibril رضي الله عنه then said, “Each of these is sufficient unless you mix the verses of punishment with those of rewards and vice versa. It will be the same as you express the meaning of تعال (come) with اسرع, عجل and اذهب, هلم, اقبل.

There may not be doubt on this view any more but a confusion exists and it does not explain the position of different recitals of the Qurān which continue to this day. Even this theory does not account for it. If these recitals are treated as something different from “Seven Dialects” solid arguments will be needed to prove it. In the vast collection of Aḥādith, we do not find any mention of difference in the Qurān other than in the Reading. How then may we explain differences in Reading and Dialect. I have not been able to find a satisfactory answer to this confusion with the advocates of this theory.

MOST ACCEPTABLE EXPLANATION OF SEVEN READINGS

In our view the best explanation and interpretation of the Seven Dialects of Qurān is that it means "Variation in Recital". The seven dialects refer to variations in the recital of the Qurān of seven kinds. Hence although the recitals are more than seven yet the variations found in them evolve around seven basic points. (We will explain that later on.)

To the best of our knowledge this view was first propounded by Imām Mālik. The renowned commentator of the Qurān Nizamuddin Qummi Nishapuri has written in his Tafsīr Gharā'ib ul-Qurān that Imām Mālik believed that the seven Readings denoted the following seven variations in the recital of the Qurān:

- 1: Variation in numbers, so that one word is read as singular in one recital and plural in another recital, for example, ¹³⁹كلمات ربك and وتمت كلمة ربك
- 2: Variation in gender, that is a masculine word in one recital becomes feminine in the other, for example لا لا تقبل becomes لا تقبل ¹⁴⁰
- 3: Variations in placement of diacritical marks, the Kasrah and fathah are changed, e.g. هل من خالق غير الله becomes هل من خالق غير الله ¹⁴¹
- 4: Variations in verb for example يعرشون becomes يُعرشون ¹⁴²
- 5: Variations in syntax, for example لكن الشياطين becomes لكن الشياطين ¹⁴³
- 6: Variations caused by transposition, for example,

139: Kalimatu Rabbik (The word of your Lord), and Kalimātu Rabbik (The words of your Lord.)

140: La yuq-balu and Lā-tuqbalu.

141: Ghayrullāhi and Ghayrillāhi.

142: Ya'ar ri-shūn and Yu'ar ri-shūn.

143: Lākin-nash-shayātīn and Lakīnash-shayātīnu.

144. نَنْشُرُهَا becomes نُشِرُهَا and يَعْلَمُونَ becomes تَعْلَمُونَ

- 7: Variations of pronunciation or accent.¹⁴⁵ Variations in tafkhīm, tarqīq, imalah, madd, qasr, izhār, idghām rendering sound heavy, soft, inclining it, prolonging, shortening, expressing clearly and assimilating).

Further, the same view has been adopted by ‘Allāmah Ibn Qutaybah, Imām Abul Faḍl Rāzī, Qaḍī Abu Bakr bin At-Ṭayyib Bāqillānī, Ibn Jazarī.¹⁴⁶ Ibnul Jazarī, the renowned scholar of Recital of the Qurān, has also stated in connection with this Hadith “I remained in doubt about this tradition and pondered over it for more than thirty years till Allah, the Almighty, uncovered for me its explanation that will be correct, if Allah wills it”.¹⁴⁷

All these scholars are in agreement that by seven Dialects in this Hadith is meant the seven forms of the variations in recital, but there is some difference in the formulation of those variations because each of them has arranged them independently. Of these the one whose enlistment is the most concise, well arranged and firmly established is Imām Abul-Faḍl Rāzī. According to him, Variations in Recital of the Qurān depend on seven kinds:

- 1: Variations in nouns: This includes difference in number and gender e.g. تَمَّتْ كَلِمَةُ رَبِّكَ has also been read as تَمَّتْ كَلِمَاتُ رَبِّكَ .
- 2: Variations in verbs: The same verb is read in the past present or future tense, or as an imperative, for example رَبَّنَا بَاعِدْ بَيْنَ اَسْفَارِنَا has also been read as: رَبَّنَا بَعْدَ بَيْنَ اَسْفَارِنَا 144: Y’a la mūn and t’a la mūn and Nunshuzuhā and Nanshuruḥā.

145: Gharā’i-bul Qurān wa Raghā’ibul Furqān, Al-Nishapurī Hāmish Ibn Jarīr v,1 p21.

146: The opinion of Ibn Qutaybah, Abul Faḍl Rāzī, and Ibn Jazari are found in Fath ul Bārī v9 pp 25-26 and al-Itqān v.1 p.47 and of Qaḍi Ibn Al-Ṭayyib in Tafsīr al-Qurtabi v1, p45.

147: An-Nashr fil Qir’at al-‘Ashr v1, p26.

- 3: Variations in the position of diacritical marks. There is a variance in I'rab the Kasrah, fathah, dammah:
 ذُو الْعَرْشِ الْمَجِيدُ لَا يُضَارُّ كَاتِبٌ and ذُو الْعَرْشِ الْمَجِيدُ كَاتِبٌ لَا يُضَارُّ become ذُو الْعَرْشِ الْمَجِيدُ .
- 4: Variations Caused by Omissions and additions: There is an extra word in a reading which is not found in another. For example والذكر والانثى is وما خلق الذكر والانثى in another. تجربى تحتها الانهر is تجربى من تحتها الانهار in another.
- 5: Variations of placement of words:
 A word precedes in a reading while it follows in another, e.g. جاءت سكرة الموت بالحق becomes جاءت سكرة الحق بالموت.
- 6: Variations caused by replacement of words:
 There is a word in one reading but quite another word in the other reading, e.g. فَتَبَيَّنُوا becomes فَنَشِزُّهَا and فَنَشِزُّهَا becomes فَتَبَيَّنُوا and طَلَعَ becomes فَتَبَيَّنُوا.
- 7: Variations of accent: It rests round changes in tafkhīm, tarqīq, imālah, qasr, madd, hamz, izhār and idghām (e.g. Mūsā read with Imalah becomes like mūsay)¹⁴⁸

The scheme of Imām Abul Faḍl Rāzī appears more comprehensive as compared to that of 'Allāmah Ibnul Jazarī, 'Allāmah Ibn Qutaybah and Qāḍi Abu Ṭayyib in that no variation has been left out in this. Contrary to this, the schemes of the other three scholars do not contain the last mentioned variation (of accent). In Imām Mālik's scheme we do find mention of variations of accent, but we do not find adequate clarification of variance, for example, their addition or omission, prefixing or suffixing, and replacement of words. Imām Abul Faḍl's description takes account of all these differences. Imām Jazari who spent more than thirty years pondering over the seven readings has also quoted this scheme with great emphasis and no objection has been raised by him. Rather, taking his view as a whole it appears that he prefers Imām Abul Fadl's scheme to his own¹⁴⁹ Ḥāfiz Ibn Ḥajar has also preferred this scheme, because he has reproduced the views of 'Allāmah Qutaybah and remarked, "This is good reasoning." Then he has described the seven kinds of variations of Imām Abul Fadl and remarked, قلت وقد اخذ كلام ابن قتيبة ولفظه "I think that by adopting Ibn Qutaybah's verdict Imām Abul Fadl has further polished it."¹⁵⁰ Shaikh Abdul 'Azim Zarqāni has also adopted the same view and given arguments in its support.¹⁵¹

The scholars, Imām Mālik, Ibn Qutaybah, Abul Fadl Rāzi, Ibnul Jazarī and Qaḍi Bāqillānī agree that the seven Dialects in the Ḥadith refer to the seven kinds of difference in Reading.

In my humble opinion this is the best explanation of the seven Dialects. The intention of Ḥadith also appears that the words of the Qurān may be read in different ways, and these different ways are seven in number. Since there is no specification of these seven variations in any Ḥadith it cannot be said with certainty about any scheme that it conforms to the intention of the Ḥadith, but apparently the scheme of Imām Abul Fadl Rāzi is more correct because it is applicable to the various forms of recitals current to-date.

REASONS FOR PREFERENCE

Of several explanations of the seven Dialects in Ḥadith, exegesis or Books on the sciences of the Qurān that we have come across, we prefer this opinion that the phrase refers to the seven basic points of variation in the recital of the Qurān. Our reasons for it are:

1: According to this view, we do not have to consider 149: An-nashr-fil-qirā'at 'Ashr v1, p27,28.

150: Fat-hul Bārī, v9, p24.

151: Manāhil-ul-'Irfān fī 'ulūm-il-Qurān v1, pp154 to 156.

Dialects and Recitals as two separate things. A common problem in the views of 'Allamah Ibn Jarīr and Imām Ṭaḥāvi is that we accept that two kinds of differences existed in the recital of the Qurān, one pertaining to dialect (or ahruf) and the other to recital and that the former was abrogated but the latter persists. But we do not find even a weak tradition in the vast collection of Aḥādith to show that Dialects and Recital are two separate things. The Aḥādith mention only variation in dialect. (ahruf) and it is for this word that the term "Recital" has been extensively used. If the Recital were something different from these there must have been some indication in the Traditions.

Why is it that Tawātur Aḥādith pertaining to variations in Dialect may be found, but there is no mention of variation in Recital as distinguished from those Aḥādith?

How can it be possible to say, just on conjecture, that apart from the variations of dialect there was yet another type of variation in the words of the Qurān?

In the foregoing proposition this difficulty is totally eliminated because it uses the terms Dialect and Recitals as one and the same thing, say synonymously.

2: If we accept the view of 'Allamah Ibn Jarīr then we have to assume that six out of seven renderings have been abrogated or have become obsolete and only the Quraysh version continues. The present recitals are variations of that. The difficulties in accepting this view shall be discussed in detail subsequently. In the preferred view, however, there are no such defects because, according to it, all the seven renderings remain safe and existent even today.

3: According to the preferred view the meaning of Seven Dialects is undisputed while we have to resort to conjectures in the meaning of 'ahruf' or in the numerical value of Seven in the other propositions.

- 4: Of the views of all the scholars that have come before us, the most renowned person and in proximity to the Prophetic era is that of Imām Mālik, and according to 'Allāmah Nīshāpūrī رحمه الله عليه shares the same view.
- 5: 'Allāmah Ibn Qutaydah رحمه الله عليه and Ibn ul Jazari رحمه الله عليه are both well recognised authorities on the subject of Qir'āt (Recitals), and both of them uphold the same view. It has already been mentioned that the latter came to this conclusion after giving it due thought and consideration for thirty years.

OBJECTIONS TO THIS VIEW AND THEIR REPLIES

Let us now see what objections may be raised on this view and what have been raised.

The first objection raised against this view is that all the variations described under this depend on grammatical classification, but at the time when the Prophet ﷺ pronounced this Ḥadīth, such grammatical classifications and phrases were not known, and most people did not even know reading and writing. Under the circumstances it is difficult to cite these variations as the seven Dialects.

Ḥāfiz Ibn Ḥajar has replied to this objection in the following words:

ولا يلزم من ذلك توهين ما ذهب اليه ابن قتيبة لا حتمال ان يكون
الانحصار المذكور في ذلك وقع اتفاقاً و انما اطلع عليه
بالاستقراء وفي ذلك من الحكمة البالغة مالا يخفى -

From this the weakness of Ibn Qutaybah's view does not necessarily arise, because it is possible that the said reliance may have occurred by chance and became known through reasoning for induction, and the prudence therein is not a secret.

In our humble comprehension, it is true that these grammatical terms were not in usage during the Prophetic era, and perhaps that was the reason why the Prophet ﷺ did not elaborate the meaning of Seven Dialects. But this is obvious that the basis did exist even at that time although they may not have been given grammatical terms. One should not wonder if the Prophet ﷺ himself had recognised the terms and divided the variation into seven basic points. If the details of the seven reasons for variations were described at that time it might have been beyond common comprehension. Hence, rather than go into details he explained that the reasons for variations were seven. Later on when these terms came into use, the learned scholars described the causes of variations in relevant words and phrases. As we have already said, it is difficult to define any one proposition as the one that conforms to the intentions of the Prophet ﷺ. However different people conclude that the reasons for variations even though their details may not exactly be the same as established by these scholars, particularly when no other rational explanation of the 'Seven Dialects' can be reasonably given.

WHAT IS THE EASE CREATED BY SEVEN RENDERINGS

- 2: The second objection to this view can be that since the Qur̄an was revealed on seven recitations to make its recital easy for the people this would hold true with the view of 'Allāmah Ibn Jarīr. There were people belonging to different tribes in Arabia and it was difficult for one tribe to read according to the dialect of the other. But according to Imām Mālik, Rāzī and Ibnul Jazari all seven letters belonged to the Quraysh dialect and it remains ambiguous as to why the variations of recital were allowed to continue when the Qurān was meant to be revealed in only one dialect?

This objection is based on the idea that the Prophet ﷺ asked for the facility of reciting the Qurān on seven letters in view of the variations in the dialects of various tribes, and it was for this reason that Ibn Jarīr termed the Seven Dialects as "Seven Dialects of Arabia". But this is a thing that is not supported by any Hadith. On the other hand, in one of his narrations the Prophet ﷺ has clearly elucidated what was in his mind when seeking the facility of seven letters. Imām Tirmizī has quoted Ubayy bin Ka'b with authentic evidences:

فقال رسول الله صلى الله عليه و سلم لجبريل:
الى
انى بعثت امة اميين فيهم الشيخ الفانى والعجوز الكبيرة والغلام،
قال فمرهم فليقرؤا القرآن على سبعة احرف -

(النشر فى القراءات، ص ٢٠، ج ١)

The Holy Prophet ﷺ met Jibril عليه السلام near the rocks of Marwah. He said to Jibril عليه السلام, "I have been sent to an unlettered nation which comprises the aged nearing their graves, elderly women and also children." Jibril عليه السلام said, "Ask them to recite the Qurān on seven ahruf."¹⁵²

In another tradition of Tirmizī again, the Prophet ﷺ is reported to have said to Jibril عليه السلام:

152. An Nashr-fil-qirāatul 'ashr, v1, p20.

انى بعثت الى امة اميين منهم العجوز والشيخ والكبير والغلام
والجارية والذي لم يقرأ كتاباً قط (جامع الترمذی، ص ۱۳۸، قرآن محل کراچی)

"I have been sent to an unlettered nation wherein there are elderly women, old men and aged people, and also boys and girls and also people who have never read a book."¹⁵³

The words of this Hadith explain very clearly that the Prophet ﷺ had in view that he was sent to an unlettered and illiterate people who included different age groups and types. If only one method of recital was fixed it could have created problems for them. On the other hand, if several alternatives were available it would become possible that a person not being able to recite with one method may utter the same words in a different style. This will enable them to perform their Salah correctly. Often it happens that aged men or elderly women or illiterate persons get used to a word in a particular accent or phonation, and for them even a minor variation of a diacritical mark may be a difficulty. That is why the Prophet ﷺ sought this facility, for example, if a person cannot easily express it in the unfamiliar form of another dialect, or if somebody is unable to recite singular easily he may read it as plural, if somebody finds one accent difficult he may use the other accent available. In this way the reader will have seven options available to him.

You might have noted that in this Hadith the Prophet ﷺ while seeking the facility of seven readings, did not request it to facilitate different tribes but he had age groups and illiteracy in mind, but contrary to this he expressed his concern on differences in their ages and their being illiterate. This clearly proves that the basic reason of giving the facility of seven readings was not the dialectical differences of the various tribes but it was illiteracy among the people in general so that they could benefit from it.

3. The third objection could be that the seven variations of the recital of Qurān, are in any case conjectural and hypothetical. This can be said of the opinions of all of them including Mālik, Abul Faḍl Rāzī, ‘Allāmah Ibn Qutaybah, Ibnul Jazari or Qaḍi Ibn ut-Ṭayyib. That is why each of them has described the details of the seven causes of variations separately. How then can we say about any of them that they conformed to the Prophet’s ﷺ sayings?

The answer to this objection is that we do not find an explicit clarification of “Seven Dialects” in any Ḥadith or narration of the Companions. Hence, the inference has been drawn from a collective study of all the narrations available. Thus, as an accepted thing this view seems to be nearer to reality than others because no basic objection arises out of this. Judging from this standard, we feel almost certain that the phrase “Seven Aḥruf” in this Tradition means the seven forms of variations in recital of the Qurān. As for specifying and determining these forms, we have already stated that there is no other way of doing it except reasoning through induction. That deduced by Imām Abul Faḍl Rāzī appears to us as comprehensive but we cannot say with certainty that the Prophet ﷺ meant exactly the same thing, but this does not deny that by “Seven Aḥruf” Prophet ﷺ meant the seven variations in recital. We have neither the means to gain the exact cognizance of its details nor is it necessary.

4. The fourth objection to this view may be raised that it takes into consideration only the words and differences in the variations in their expressions, Their meanings have not been dealt with, even though there is a narration according to which "Seven Dialects" mean "Seven kinds of meanings." Imām Ṭaḥāvi has quoted 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd as saying that the Prophet ﷺ said:

كان الكتاب الاول ينزل من باب واحد على حرف واحد ونزل
القران من سبعة ابواب على سبعة احرف زاجر وامر وحلال و
حرام ومحكم ومتشابه وامثال.....الخ

Formerly the Book used to be revealed in one chapter on one letter and the Qurān has been revealed in seven chapters on seven letters. The seven letters are Zājir (that which restricts), Āmir (that which commands), Ḥalāl (permissible), Ḥarām (Prohibited), Muḥkam (Established), Muta-shābeh (Exact meaning not known), and Amthāl (Examples).

It is on this evidence that certain scholars have attributed the Seven Letters to seven kinds of meanings.

But the above Tradition is based on weak precedents. Imām Ṭaḥāvi has stated about this Tradition that it is reported by Abu Salamah as a narration from 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd, but Abu Salamah never met 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd.¹⁵⁴

Apart from this, explaining all such views attributed to earlier scholars Ḥāfiz Ibn Jarīr Ṭabarī says that these expressions were not made as an interpretation of the Ḥadith on "Seven dialects" but they meant to say that the Qurān consisted of this type of subjects.

As for those who have commented on the Ḥadith itself, their opinion is patently wrong. Anyone with a rudiment of understanding will know on casting a superficial glance on the other Aḥādith that various words do not amount to change in meanings and subjects. They are only variations of words in the recital. That is why none of the scholars on this subject accept this interpretation, rather they have rebutted it.¹⁵⁵

ARE THE SEVEN LETTERS STILL PRESERVED OR ARE THEY OBSOLETE?

After having established the meanings of the “Seven Readings” the important thing to know is whether they still exist or not? For this there are three views among the earlier scholars.

IBN JARĪR’S VIEW:

The first view is that of Ḥāfiz Ibn Jarīr Ṭabri and his followers.

We have already stated that according to him “Seven Dialects” mean the seven dialects of the tribes of Arabia. On this basis they say that the Qurān was being recited on these seven letters until the time of Sayyidina Uthman رضي الله عنه. But when Islam spread far and wide disputes arose among the people due to their ignorance about the reality of seven versions. Everyone recited the Qurān on different rendering and found fault in the recitals of the other. In order to overcome the problem, Sayyidina Uthmān رضي الله عنه consulted the other companions and compiled seven copies of the Qurān only on one version, that is, the language of Quraysh and sent them to the different provinces of the State, and burnt all other copies, so that no dispute might arise. Hence, only the version on the dialect of Quraysh remained and the other six are non-existent. The variations in the recitals which we find today are in fact the different ways of expression of the same Qurayish letter.¹⁵⁶

155: For details see Al-Itqān v1, p49, Edn. 16, and An-Nasr-fi-qirā’at tūl-‘ashr, by Ibnul Jazari v1, p25.

156: Tafsīr Ibn-e-Jarīr, v1, p15.

IBN JARĪR'S POINT OF VIEW AND ITS WEAKNESS

Ḥāfiz Ibn Jarīr Ṭabarī رحمه الله عليه has elaborated upon his view with firm assurance in the preface of his Tafsīr. Therefore, it has become very popular and the term 'Seven dialects' is interpreted in context with this view. But the fact is that most of the research Scholars¹⁵⁷ have not adopted it and have firmly refuted this view, because it involves several complications for which there is no solution.

The first objection to this view is the one that has already been described, that in this the "Letters" and "Recitals" have been treated as two separate things, but this is not supported by any Ḥadith.

The second objection is that on the one hand Ḥāfiz Ibn Jarīr admits that all the seven dialects were divine revelations but, on the other hand, he says that Sayyidina Uthman رضي الله عنه abolished the recital of six letters with the consent of the companions. But it is very difficult to believe that the companions of the Prophet ﷺ would agree to abolish six versions that were revealed by Allah on the request of the Prophet ﷺ for the convenience of people. A consensus of the Companions is, indeed, conclusive in religious doctrines, but it is not imaginable that they would unite to abrogate versions that were part of the Qurān.

Ḥāfiz Ibn Jarīr has replied to this objection that while the Ummah رضي الله عنه was ordained to guard the Qurān they were given an option that they may adopt whichever of the seven dialects they like. Hence the people took advantage of this option and, for the sake of unanimity, gave up six versions and united on one. These steps were neither meant to abrogate the versions nor to prohibit their recital but to select one only for collective good and unity.

157: The names of the scholars are given in the following lines.

But this argument is also weak because even though the people as a whole might have adopted one version for its practical purposes they may have let the others remain in records alone. The Qurān says:

إِنَّا نَحْنُ نَزَّلْنَا الذِّكْرَ وَإِنَّا لَهُ لَحَافِظُونَ

Surely We have revealed Admonition (The Qurān), and surely We are its Guardian. (Al-Hijr, 15:9)

If all the seven were letters of the Qurān, this verse would clearly mean that they would be preserved to the Day of Resurrection. Even if someone gives up their recital, they would continue to exist. Ḥāfiz Ibn Jarīr has advanced the argument that the Qurān has given three options as expiation for making a false vow, namely, free a slave or feed ten poor people or clothe ten poor people. So if the Ummah adopts one of them without making other options unlawful, they are allowed to do so. Likewise, the Ummah has collectively chosen one version out of seven. But this example cannot hold, because if the people adopt one of the three options of expiation in a manner that although they do not consider the other two as unlawful yet they cast them into extinction so that while it is known that there existed two more options, but with the passage of time they have forgotten what these two options were. Certainly, the Ummah would not be entitled to do such a thing.

Further, the question arises as to what was the need to abandon the remaining six versions. Ibn Jarīr has stated that severe disputes were erupting due to the variations of these letters, hence Sayyidina Uthmān رضي الله عنه with consent of the Companions, thought it proper that the whole nation should unite on one version. But this argument is also unacceptable. Differences among the Muslims due to these variations had come up even during the time of the Prophet ﷺ. The Aḥādith recount several instances of one companion arguing with another who recited the Qurān with a reading different from his own. So much so that Bukhārī carries a Ḥadith that Sayyidina Umar رضي الله عنه dragged Sayyidina Hishām bin Ḥakīm bin Hizām with a sheet round his neck and took him to the Prophet ﷺ (due to similar difference in recital). And Sayyidina Ubayy bin Ka‘ab states that he entertained serious doubts on account of variations in Readings. But on such occasions the Prophet ﷺ did not abrogate the seven versions; rather, he informed them of the concession allowed in recital so that no mischief or unrest arose. It cannot be said of the Companions that instead of following the Tradition of the Prophet ﷺ they would have abrogated six letters.

Further, what is strange is that according to Ibn Jarīr the Companions abolished six dialects for fear of disputes but retained the recitals which, according to him, were different from dialects and they are still preserved although sometimes one word could be rendered in several ways. The question arises that if the disputes and wranglings were anticipated due to variations of dialect, could they not be anticipated also due to variations of recital? If the intention behind abolishing six dialects was only to create unity among Muslims and that they all read the Qurān in one manner, why were the variations of recitals not removed? When disruption among Muslims could be checked despite different recitals and they could be persuaded that recital of the Qurān was permissible in all these manners, why the same policy was not adopted for variations in Dialect? If we accept the view of Ibn Jarīr we would have to accuse the Companions for adopting a double standard, for seven Dialects and Recitals. And this cannot be justified.

Then, the attribution of such a step to Sayyidina Uthmān رضي الله عنه and other Companions is not based on any authentic Tradition. But, it is deduced through ambiguous words. The narratives that describe the incident of compilation of the Qurān by Sayyidina Uthmān ؓ do not say that he had abrogated six dialects. In fact, there are evidences against it which we will see later. So, how may we infer that the Companions tolerated the abrogation and wiping out of the six dialects that Prophet ﷺ had repeatedly requested and was allowed, particularly when we have no Hadith to support the inference.

Surely, the Companions were hesitant even to undertake the noble task of compilation of the Qurān just because this was not done by the Prophet ﷺ, and they had spent their lives in safeguarding every word of the Qurān, and had preserved even the abrogated verses separately for the Ummah for their historical importance. These Companions could not be expected to unite to eradicate the six dialects in a manner that they become quite extinct. What reason could there be that we do not find a single example even in the weak Traditions about the "Letters" which Ibn Jarīr himself admits, were not abrogated but only their recital and writing was abolished as an expedient measure?

That is why most research scholars have refuted the view of Hāfiz Ibn Jarīr Tabarī.

IMĀM ṬAḤĀVĪ'S VIEW

2. The other view is that of Imām Ṭaḥāvī رحمه الله عليه that has been discussed earlier. According to this view the Qurān was revealed in only the dialect of the Quraysh but to facilitate its recital, people were permitted to use synonyms not exceeding seven in number. Even these synonyms were specified by the Prophet ﷺ and it is this relaxation that has been described in Hadith as revelation of the Qurān on "Seven Ahrūf." But this was permitted only in the early days of Islam and later on when people were used to the language of Qurān, it was abrogated by the Prophet ﷺ himself. This was done after the Prophet ﷺ revised the Qurān with Jibril عليه السلام in the last Ramaḍān of his life. Now only the original language exists, that is the dialect of the Quraysh in which the Qurān was revealed.

This view seems better than that of Ḥāfiz Ibn Jarīr in that the abolition of six dialects has not been attributed to the Companions but to the Prophet ﷺ. However, the difficulty arises that according to this view the six dialects were not revealed by Allah, although there is the incident when there was a dispute between Sayyidina Hishām and Sayyidina Umar رضي الله عنه, the former recited Surah Al-Furqān on a dialect before the Prophet ﷺ and he said هكذا انزلت (This Surah has been revealed as recited). Then Sayyidina Umar رضي الله عنه recited it in another dialect and the Prophet ﷺ said again هكذا انزلت (This Surah has been revealed as recited). This proves that both the dialects were parts of Divine revelations.

Besides, as has been stated earlier this view also does not state clearly what the status of recitals is: whether they form part of the seven dialects or not. If they were included in them it will be like saying that like the six letters they were not Divine revelations, but this is preposterous. If they were not included therein, then we have no proof to identify them as distinct from the seven dialects. Hence this view also does not appeal.

MOST ACCEPTABLE VIEW

3: The third and the most satisfactory and unstained view is nothing but that the 'Seven ahruf' distinction is the same as different causes of the various Readings, which have been mentioned in the preceding pages. Therefore, the seven dialects are preserved even today and continue to be recited. However in the early days of Islam the varieties of Recital were many more as was the use of synonymous words. This was allowed to accommodate those who found difficulty with the language of the Qurān. As people became used to it, the different synonyms were withdrawn. So that many of the Readings stood abrogated by the time the Prophet ﷺ recited the Qurān for the last time before Jibril عليه السلام (known as the Final Recital or Review) as we will see later. However, the Readings that were not abrogated continue to this day. They are recital even today.

In the complex discussion of the "Seven Dialects" this is the clear approach that allows all narrations in Prophetic traditions to fit in their places nicely. There remains no objection or difference and there is no confusion either. In the subsequent pages we shall present answers to possible doubts so that the truth will become clear. But let us first see the names and references of those scholars who have adopted this view that has refuted the view of Ibn Jarīr.

SUPPORTERS OF THIS VIEW

Hāfiz Abul Khair Muḥammad Ibn al-Jazarī (died 833 A.H.), who is known as the Great Imām of Qira'at (Recital) and was a student of Hāfiz Ibn Kathīr in Hadīth and Fiqh (Jurisprudence), and was a teacher of Hāfiz Ibn Hajar, has written in his book 'An-Nashr-fil-Qirā'at il 'Ashr'.

”اما كون المصاحف العثمانية مشتملة على جميع

الاحرف السبعة فان هذه مسألة كبيرة اختلف العلماء فيها فذهب

جماعات من الفقهاء والقراء والمتكلمين الى ان المصاحف

العثمانية مشتملة على جميع الأحرف السبعة وبنوا ذلك على انه

"As far the question whether the Qurān and its copies that were compiled by Sayyidina Uthman ^{رضي} comprised all the seven versions or not, is a great problem on which there are differences among the scholars. The view of jurists among Reciters is that they consisted of all seven letters. They base their opinion on the premise that it would be unlawful to give up reproducing any of the seven Readings on which the Qurān was revealed, and the companions had collectively copied them from those written by Abu Bakr and 'Umar ^{رضي الله تعالى عنهما}, and one copy each of it was sent to different cities of the Muslim world. Simultaneously, they arrived at a consensus to disregard all the other scattered material. They assert that neither is it lawful that the recital of any letter out of the seven be abolished nor that the Companions decide to give up any part of the Qurān. The majority of earlier scholars and their successors hold the same view that the compilations by Sayyidina Uthmān رضي الله عنه consisted of all those letters that could merge in their script. And all the letters of the last revision of the Qurān by the Prophet ﷺ with Jibril عليه السلام are included in these Books, and no letter has been left out. I think that this view is authentic and in conformity with accepted traditions.¹⁵⁸

And 'Allāma Badruddin 'Aynī has said:

واختلف الاصوليون هل يُقرأ اليوم على سبعة أحرف فمنعه
الطبري وغيره و قال انما يجوز بحرف واحد اليوم وهو حرف
زيد و نحى اليه القاضي ابوبكر، و قال ابو الحسن الاشعري اجمع
المسلمون على انه لا يجوز حظر ما وسعه الله تعالى من القراءة
بالاحرف التي انزلها الله تعالى ولا يسوغ للامة ان تمنع ما يطلقه

معلومة فيجوز على هذا، و به قال القاضي ان يقرأ بكل ما نقله
اهل التواتر من غير تمييز حرف من حرف فيحفظ حرف نافع
بحرف الكسائي و حمزة ولا حرج في ذلك.

And¹⁵⁹ there is a difference of opinion among the 158. Ibn Jazari: An-Nashr fil-qira'at-ul'ashr, v1, p31.

159: 'Umdat ul-Qārī, Kitābul Khusumāt v2, p258.

scholars whether the Qurān can now be recited on seven letters or not? ‘Allāmah Ibn Jarir Ṭabarī has denied it and states that the recital of Qurān today is lawful only on one letter which is the letter of Zayd bin Thābit. And Qadi Abu Bakr is also inclined to the same view. But Imām Abul Ḥasan Ash‘arī states that there is a consensus among Muslims that it would not be lawful for anyone to abolish or eradicate the facility provided by Allah by revealing these letters, and the Ummah is not authorised to stop a thing that has been permitted by Allah. But the fact is that all the seven letters are included in our present recitals and are included in the Qurān in varied forms, yet specifically they are not known, Thus, their recital is lawful even today, and the same is the view of the Qadī.¹⁶⁰ All the readings that have come down to us through an authentic line of transmission are permitted for recital and even discriminating one from the other is not necessary. Hence, there is no harm if the recital of Nāfe‘ can be memorised by mixing with that of Kasaī and Ḥamzah.¹⁶¹

And ‘Allāmah Badruddīn Zarkashī رحمه الله has quoted Qadi Abu Bakr رحمه الله as under:

والسابع اختاره القاضي ابو بكر، و قال: الصحيح ان هذه
الاحرف السبعة ظهرت واستفاضت عن رسول الله صلى الله
عليه وسلم و ضبطها عنه الائمة واثبتها عثمان والصحابة في
المصحف-

“The seventh view has been adopted by Qadi

Abu-Bakr¹⁶² And he has stated: It is correct that these seven Readings have been reported from the Prophet ﷺ and the Imāms ahve preserved them, and Sayyidina Uthmān and companions ﷺ have included them in the Qurān.”¹⁶³

And ‘Allāmah Ibn Ḥazm has also refuted the view of Ḥāfiẓ Ibn Jarīr in very strong words. He has stated that the views about abolishing six Dialects is totally wrong, and Sayyidina Uthmān ﷺ could not have done it even if he had so desired, because the Ḥāfiẓs were spread to every nook and corner of the Islamic world, Ḥāfiẓ who had committed the seven readings to memory. He writes:

”واما قول من قال ابطل الأحرف الستة فقد كذب من قال ذلك
ولو فعل عثمان ذلك او اراده لخرج عن الاسلام ولما مطل ساعة
بل الاحرف السبعة كلها موجودة عندنا قائمة كما كانت مثبوتة
في القراءات المشهورة المأثورة“

“As for the view that Uthmān abrogated six letters, whoever said it was wrong. If he had done it or intended to do it, he would have been out of the fold of Islam without the delay of a single moment.”¹⁶⁴ The fact is that all the seven Readings are fully preserved with us and still used in popular recitals.”¹⁶⁵

And the well-known commentator of Muwattā ‘Allāmah Abul Walīd Bājī Mālīki رحمه الله عليه (Died 494 A.H.) has 162: Ref. Perhaps to Qadi Abu Bakr Baqillani.

163: Al-Burhān fī ‘Ulūmil Qurān v.p.223.

164: That would have been in case he had abrogated the six Readings. According to Ḥāfiẓ Ibn Jarīr he had only given us reading of the six Dialects and he is not worthy of the strong words used.

165: Ibn Hazm: Al fasl fil Malal walhawa wan Nahl v2, p77-78.

explained the "Seven Versions to be the seven variations of recitals and written as under:"

فان قيل هل تقولون ان جميع هذه السبعة الاحرف ثابتة في المصحف فان القراءة بجميعها جائزة قيل لهم كذلك نقول، والدليل على صحة ذلك قوله عز وجل إِنَّا نَحْنُ نَزَّلْنَا الذِّكْرَ وَإِنَّا لَهُ لَحَافِظُونَ، ولا يصح انفصال الذكر المنزل من قراءته فيمكن حفظه دونها ومما يدل على صحة ما ذهبنا اليه ان ظاهر قول النبي صلى الله عليه وسلم يدل على ان القرآن انزل على سبعة احرف تيسيراً على من اراد قراءته ليقرأ كل رجل منهم بما تيسر عليه و بما هو اخف على طبعه و اقرب الى لغته لما يلحق من المشقة بذلك المالوف من العادة في النطق و نحن اليوم مع عجمة السنتنا و بعدنا عن فصاحة العرب أحوج-

We are asked if it is our view that all the seven Readings exist even today and hence their recital (according to you) is permissible, then we would emphatically say 'Yes! This is our view, and the proof of its truth is the Word of Allah in the Qurān. انا نحن نزلنا الذكر و انا له لحافظون (Surely We have revealed the Admonition (the Qurān) and surely We are its Guardian Al Hijr 15:9) And the Qurān cannot be separated from its recital in a manner that itself remaining safeguarded its recitals are abolished or become extinct. Another proof of the validity of our view is that the tradition of the Holy Prophet ﷺ clearly affirms that the Qurān was revealed in seven Readings in order that it be easy for its readers, best conforming to his nature and be nearest to his dialect. This is because it is difficult to give up or change one's style of conversation of which one has become used to. And today we are more in need of this facility due to the 'Ajmi influence on our language and our alienation from Arabic eloquence."¹⁶⁶

And Imām Ghazzālī has defined the Qurān in his book "Al-Mustafā" as under.

"ما نقل الينا بين دفتي المصحف على الاحرف السبعة المشهورة نقلًا متواترًا"

(The discourse that has reached us uninterrupted in accordance with the popular seven Readings bound in two cardboards as the Book.)¹⁶⁷

It is evident from this that Imām Ghazālī also believed in the perpetual existence of the seven Readings.

And Mulla 'Ali Qārī رحمه الله عليه (died 1014 AH) has written,

"وكانه عليه الصلوة والسلام كشف له ان القراءة المتواترة تستقر
في امته على سبع و هي الموجودة الآن المتفق على تواترها
والجمهور على ان ما فوقها شاذ لا يحل القراءة به"

And it seems that it was inspired to the Prophet ﷺ that ultimately seven recitals (of the Qurān) will be left among his people. Hence the same are existing today and there is a consensus on their being continuous. And the majority believes that recitals other than these are very rare and thus not permissible.”

Here, Mulla ‘Ali Qārī is not right in saying that all the recitals other than the seven are rare or extinct, because this has been strongly rebutted by the scholars of Qirā‘at,¹⁶⁸ but one thing is evident that according to him the seven versions exist even today.

The view of Shāh Waliullah Muḥaddith Dehlavi has been described earlier, that he attributes the ‘seven’ to ‘many’. In explaining it he has written as under.

And the argument on the fact that the number ‘seven’ used in the Ḥadith stands for excess and not limitation is that the Imāms have unanimity on ten recitals and of the ten each has two narrations different from each other. In this way the number of recitals has reached up to twenty.¹⁶⁹

In this phrase although Shāh Waliullah has attributed the number ‘seven’ to mean an abundance against the views of the majority of scholars (perhaps the dependence of twenty recitals on seven reasons of variations was not clear to him) but one thing is clear that in his view the Ahruf mentioned in the Ḥadith are “Recitals” and they have neither been abrogated nor given up, exist even today.

In the latest era, the Imām of Religious Learnings, great Research Scholar of the age and Ḥāfiẓ of Ḥadith (knowing Ḥadith by heart), ‘Allama Anwar Shāh Kashmiri رحمه الله عليه has probed into the details of this Ḥadith and brought forth in a nutshell the results of his research which may be considered as the last word in this matter.

We are reproducing the full text of his study in the following lines:

168: An-Nashra fil Qirāt-il-‘Ashr, v1, p33

“know it well that all the scholars have a consensus on the fact that “Seven Dialects” does not mean the popular seven recitals, and also it is not true that every letter be one of the seven Recitals. This means that “Seven Recitals” and “Seven Dialects” are not the same thing as may be mistaken from the word “Seven” in the first sight. But there is a relation in the generalisation and specification¹⁷⁰ between these Dialects and “Seven Recitals,” and how can they be the same when the recitals are not limited to seven as has been explained by ‘Allāmah Ibn-Jazari in his An Nashr fil Qirā’atil-‘Ashr. However, the word of “Seven Recitals” has become popular because ‘Allāmah Shāṭbi had compiled these very “Seven Recitals.” Know it further that some people think that there is a total alienation between the seven letters and there is no link among them. In fact it is not so, but sometimes the difference between two letters pertains only to solitary phrase or additional phrase, and sometimes that of conjugation, sometimes that of past and present tenses, and sometimes only that of retaining the (Ḥamzah) and simplifying it. Thus, all

170. Faḍl ul-Bārī v.3 pp321-322. Some of the recitals are of the ‘Seven Dialects’ for instance, all the contriving Readings and some are not from it as the rare ones or the ones without dispute. Some of the differences of the ‘Seven Dialects’ are not part of the Seven Readings. e.g. the recitals of Imām Ya’qūb, Imām Abu Ja’far and their successors although of the seven Dialects they are not of the seven Readings. (Muḥammad Taqī.)

these variations, big or small, are constant letters, and they are wrong who think that there is a total alienation among the letters and it is impossible for them to be united in one word or sense. As for the question as to what is meant by the number 'Seven' in the Hadith this has been answered by Ibn Jazari and he has deduced that this denotes the number of variations. In this matter Qasṭalāni and Zarqāni may also be seen. The only thing now remains is whether all these letters still exist or some of them have been abrogated and only some are existing. So, know it that all such letters exist in the Book compiled by Sayyidina Uthmān رضي الله عنه as Jibril عليه السلام had recited with the Prophet ﷺ during the revision of the Qurān, and since the meanings of the "Letters" could not be well conceived by Ibn Jaṅīr he adopted the view that six letters were abolished and only one remains.

Similarly, the well known Researcher of Egypt in the recent times 'Allāmah Zahid-ul-Kauthari (D.1371 AH) writes as under:

والاول رأى القائلين بان الاحرف السبعة كانت فى مبدء الامر ثم
نسخت بالعرضة الاخيرة فى عهد النبى صلى الله عليه وسلم فلم
يبق الا حرف واحد و رأى القائلين بان عثمان رضى الله تعالى

خطير قام ابن حزم باشد النكير عليه فى الفصل و فى الاحكام وله

الحق في ذلك، و الثاني رأى القائلين بانها هي الاحرف السبعة
المحفوظة كما هي في العرضة الاخيرة، الخ-¹⁷¹

“The first opinion (that the present recital is in fact a composite of different forms of a single letter) is held by those who say that the seven letters existed in the early days of Islam and then they were abolished in the time of the Prophet ﷺ.

Just after the last revision of the Qurān by him with Jibril عليه السلام and only one letter was left. The same is the opinion of those who say that Sayyidina Uthmān رضي الله عنه had obtained a consensus on one letter and due to some expedient reason abolished the recital of other six letters. Ibn Jarīr holds this view and many a people overawed by him have followed him, but in fact this is a very audacious and dangerous view, which Ibn Hazm has very forcefully refuted in his “Al-Faṣl” and “Al-Eḥkām.” He had every authority for this. The second opinion (that the present recital itself is the “Seven Letters”) is held by those who say that these are letters which are being preserved safely since the last revision of the Prophet ﷺ with Jibril عليه السلام.

We have quoted all these views in detail because now the view of ‘Allāmah Ibn Jarīr Ṭabarī alone has gained popularity, and because of his exalted stature it is regarded as free from all doubts and suspicions. It is for this reason that the transparent and doubtless view of Ibn-ul-Jazari is either not known to people or it is regarded as a weak argument, while our earlier discussion has made it clear that scholars like Imām Mālik, ‘Allāmah Ibn Qutaybah 171: Al-Kautharī: Maqālāt ul Kautharī, pp20,21 Cairo 1372 AH.

'Allāmah Abul Faḍl Rāzi, Qaḍi Abu Bakr Ibn Ṭayyib, 'Imām Abul Ḥasan Ash'ari, Qaḍi Ayyād, 'Allāmah Ibn Ḥazm, 'Allāmah Abul Walīd Bajī, Imām Ghazzālī and Mullah 'Alī Qārī are all agreed that the seven letters are preserved and exist even today. None of the versions remaining at the time of the Final Review ('Ardatul Ākhirah)' of the Prophet ﷺ has been abrogated or given up. In fact Ibnul Jazari has stated that his view had obtained a consensus of the majority of scholars even before him. Scholars of the latest era, namely Shāh Waliullāh, Anwar Shāh Kashmirī and 'Allāmah Zāhid Kauthari hold the same view. Also, the popular scholars of Egypt, 'Allāmah Muḥammad Najīṭ Muṭy'ī 'Allāmah Khudrī Damyāṭi and Shaikh 'Abdul 'Azīm Zarqānī also adopted the same view. Hence, arguments apart, simply by virtue of the personalities this view becomes the most forceful one.¹⁷²

ARGUMENTS IN FAVOUR OF THIS VIEW

We present the reasoning behind this view. Some of the arguments have already been mentioned while some more are presented below.

1: The Qurānic verse

إِنَّا نَحْنُ نَزَّلْنَا الذِّكْرَ وَإِنَّا لَهُ لَحَافِظُونَ

Surely We have revealed the Admonition (the Qurān) and surely We are its Guardian. (Al-Hijr, 15:9)

"We Alone would safeguard" clearly denotes that the verses of the Qurān are not abrogated by Allah Himself and would exist till the Day of Resurrection. Several traditions have already been quoted that signify the Seven Dialects of the Qurān were Divine Revelations. Hence, the verse implies that the Seven Dialects shall remain preserved till the Day of Ressurrection.

- 2: If Sayyidina Uthmān رضي الله عنه had compiled the Qurān on one letter after abolishing six letters there must have been some mention of it in the vast treasure of Aḥādith. But it is not so. On the contrary, there are clear indications that all Seven Dialects were included in scripture prepared by him, further that he had got this scripture prepared in accordance with the parchments collected by Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه and the two were matched together after it was written. Sayyidina Zayd bin Thābit رضي الله عنه has stated....

“I compared the scripture with these parts and there was no difference in them.” Ḥāfiz Ibn Jarīr also concedes that the seven Dialects were extant in the times of Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه so his copies should have had these included in them. So, if Uthman رضي الله عنه had removed them Zayd bin Thābit رضي الله عنه could not have said as he did,

فعرضت المصحف عليها فلم يختلفا في شيء -

“There was no difference in them.”¹⁷³

- 3: ‘Allāmah Ibnul Anbarī has quoted the famous Tabai'i (successor) ‘Ubaydah Salmāni in Kitab-ul-Masāhif as under قرأتني التي جمع الناس عثمان عليها هي العرصة الاخرى -

Our recital on which Uthman رضي الله عنه collected the people was that of ‘Last Revision’ of the Qurān by the Prophet ﷺ.¹⁷⁴

This statement of ‘Ubaydah رحمه الله عليه clearly indicates ¹⁷³: Mushkil ul Āthār v4, p193.

¹⁷⁴: Kanzul ‘Ummāl, Hadith No. 4840 v1, Dairatul Ma‘ārif, Daccan 1312 AH. The same tradition has been reported by Ibn Hajar in Musnad Ahmad, Abu Dawod and Ṭabari Fataḥ al Bārī v9, p36.

that Sayyidina Uthmān رضي الله عنه had not omitted any of those letters that existed at the time of Last Revision (of the Prophet ﷺ with Jibril عليه السلام).

Some people have inferred from this that the Last Revision was done on one letter (of Quraysh) only and Uthmān رضي الله عنه had a consensus on this same letter. But this is extremely unlikely that letters that were not abrogated would have remained excluded from this Revision.

- 4: Muhammad bin Sirīn رحمة الله عليه is also a famous Tabai'ī (successor). 'Allāmah Ibn Sa'd رحمة الله عليه has quoted him as under:

”كان جبرئيل يعرض القرآن على النبي صلى الله عليه وسلم كل عام مرة في رمضان فلما كان العام الذي توفي فيه عرضه عليه مرتين، قال محمد، فأنا أرجو أن تكون قراءتنا العرضة الأخيرة“.

“Jib'rīl عليه السلام used to present (for revision) the Qurān before the Holy Prophet ﷺ once every year in the month of Ramadān. In the year in which the Prophet ﷺ died, Jibril عليه السلام presented it (for revision) twice. Thus, I hope that our present recital is in accordance with this Last Revision.¹⁷⁵

- 5: Sayyidina 'Amir Sha'bī رحمة الله عليه is also a famous Tabai'ī and he had taken lessons from seven hundred Companions. Ibn ul Jazari رحمة الله عليه has quoted similar statement from him also.

These three personalities were the successors of the Companions and had lived just after the era of Sayyidina Uthman رضي الله عنه. Therefore their opinion on this subject has the seal of authority.

175: Ibn Sa'd: at-Tabqāt ul Kubrā, v2, p195 Part 6 Dārasādar Beirut 1376 AH.

- 6: In the vast collection of Ahadith we could not find a single example that could prove that there were two kinds of differences in the recital of the Qurān, one pertaining to Seven Dialects and the other to Recitals. On the contrary, we learn from many narrations that the two were one and the same thing, because the terms "Difference in Recitals" and "Difference in Letters or Dialects" have been used for one and the same difference. For example, Ubayy bin Ka'ab has stated as under:

كنت بالمسجد فدخل رجل يصلى فقراءة انكرتها عليه
ودخل اخر فقراءة سوى قراءة صاحبه فلما قضينا الصلوة دخلنا
جميعا على رسول الله صلى الله عليه وسلم فقلت ان هذا
قراءة انكرتها عليه و دخل اخر فقراءة سوى قراءة صاحبه
فامرهما رسول الله صلى الله عليه وسلم فقرا فحسن النبي صلى
الله على هو سلم شأنهما فسقط في نفسي من التكذيب ولا
اذ كنت في الجاهلية فلما رأى رسول الله صلى الله عليه وسلم ما
قد غشيني ضرب في صدري ففضت عرقا و كأنما انظر الى الله
فرقا فقال لى يا أبى ان ربي عزوجل ارسل الي ان اقرأ القرآن الى
حرف فرددت اليه ان هون على امتي فردالى الثانية اقرأه على
حرفين فرددت اليه ان هون على امتي فرد الي الثالثة اقرأه على سبعة احرف -

"I was in the mosque when a man entered and started offering Salah. He recited the Qurān in a way that appeared unfamiliar to me. Then another man came and he made a recital that was different from that of the first man. So when we finished our Salah we all went to the Prophet ﷺ. I said to him, "This man made a recital that was unfamiliar to me, then another man came and he read a recital different from the first one." He asked both of them to recite. When they recited, the Prophet ﷺ commended both of them. On this my heart was filled with such doubts about him as had not entered my mind even in my pre-Islamic days. When the Prophet sensed my feelings he struck at my chest due to which I sweated heavily and in a state of fear I felt as if I was seeing Allah before me. Then he said, "O Ubayy, my Lord had sent me the message to recite the Qurān on one Letter. In response to this I requested for facility for my Ummah and He sent me message to recite it on two Letters. Again I requested for further facility for my Ummah then He sent me the third message that I should read it on Seven Letters. "176

According to this narrative Ubayy bin Ka'ab رضي الله عنه repeatedly referred to the difference in reading of the two persons as difference in recital, and this is what the Prophet ﷺ has called the variation of Seven Letters. It becomes obvious that in the Prophetic era the difference in recital and difference of letters was regarded as one and the same thing. There is no proof against this, supporting the idea of these two things being separate entities. And this proves that both are one and the same thing. So, when the preservation of recitals is proved through consensus and continuity, it follows automatically that the Seven Letters (or, Dialects), too, are preserved even to this day.

176: Sahih Muslim v1p.273. Asah-ul-Mutab'i: Delhi 1349 AH.

Last Revision had all been incorporated in the copy prepared by Sayyidina Uthman رضي الله عنه and it is preserved and safeguarded till today. It has neither been abrogated nor was recital prohibited by anyone. However, it appears essential that for a complete clarification all such questions be answered as may be raised on this view.

POSSIBLE QUESTIONS AND THEIR ANSWERS

- 1: The first question that can be raised on this view is that if Sayyidina Uthmān رضي الله عنه has retained and preserved the Seven Letters what is his exclusive achievement that gave him the title "Compiler of the Qurān?"

The answer is that although innumerable Companions had learnt the Qurān by heart yet there existed only one standard copy of the Qurān that was collected by Sayyidina Abu Bakr Ṣiddīq رضي الله عنه. This was not in the form a Book, but every Surah was written on separate parchments. Some Companions had, however kept their books individually. There was in them no unanimity of script or sequence of the Surahs, nor the Seven Letters were incorporated in them. Everyone had written and compiled it in version he had learnt from the Prophet ﷺ. Thus, one Book was written on one letter while the other was written on a different letter. As long as the Prophetic era was close and the link of Muslims with the centre (Madina) was firm and strong such differences did not create any notable problem because the Qurān actually rested in the memory of the Companions rather than on these books and parchments, and the majority of Companions knew that the Qurān was revealed on seven letters. But when Islam spread far and wide and new persons entered its fold, they learnt the Qurān on one letter each, and the fact that the Qurān was revealed on Seven Letters was not known to all of them. Hence differences arose among them. Everyone then thought his own recital to be authentic and that of others as spurious. But since the individual copies were also different in Letters and scripts, with no provision to incorporate all the Seven Letters in them, there was no standard copy of the Qurān available to them to which they could refer to remove their differences.

In these circumstances Sayyidina Uthman رضي الله عنه felt that if this state of affairs continued and standard copies of the Qurān were not provided all over the Islamic world, and personal copies not withdrawn, it would lead to great mischief. Hence he took the following steps:

- i) He prepared seven standard copies of the Qurān and sent them to different areas.
- ii) The script was such that all Seven Letters were incorporated in it. Hence words were without dots and diacritical marks and they could be read according to every Letter.
- iii) All the personal copies which were possessed individually were burnt and buried.
- iv) He imposed a restriction that, in future, all copies of the Qurān should be written in conformity with these seven originals.
- v) The collection of Sayyidina Abū Bakr رضي الله عنه was in the form of script comprising separate Surahs. Sayyidina Uthmān رضي الله عنه compiled them into one book.

Sayyidina Uthmān's رضي الله عنه purpose in initiating these measures was to bring about a uniformity, throughout the world of Islam, in the script and in the sequence of the Surahs in the scriptures and to incorporate in them all the Seven Letters, leaving no room for anybody to reject a correct recital or insist on a wrong one, and making it possible for them to resolve their difference in recital through reference to the standard scriptures.

This is evident from a statement of Sayyidina Ali رضي الله عنه that has been reported by Imām Abu Dāwood in his book

قال علي لا تقولوا في عثمان الا خيرا فوالله ما فعل الذي فعل في المصاحف الا عن ملائمنا، قال، ما تقولون في هذه القراءة فقد بلغني ان بعضهم يقول ان قراءة تى خير من قرائتك، وهذا يكاد ان يكون كفرا، قلنا فما ترى؟ قال ارى ان نجتمع الناس على مصحف واحد فلا تكون فرقة ولا اختلاف، قلنا فنعيم ما رأيت.

Sayyidina Ali عليه السلام said, “Say nothing about Uthmān عليه السلام except what is good for him, because, by Allah! Whatever he did about the scriptures was done in our presence. He had consulted us and enquired our view about these recitals and said, I am receiving information that some people say to others that their recital was better than that of others, although this is an utterance very close to disbelief. On this we asked Uthmān عليه السلام what is your opinion? He said, I propose that we unite all people on one scripture so that there remain no differences or anomalies. We all said, you have brought a very good proposal”.¹⁷⁷

This Hadith is manifestly clear about the undertaking of Sayyidina Uthmān عليه السلام. It clearly states that he wanted to compile a scripture the recital of which could be universally adopted and thereafter no room be left for calling a particular rendering to be wrong or rare or to be the only correct recital.¹⁷⁸

Further, Ibn Ashtah رحمة الله عليه has quoted Sayyidina Anas عليه السلام as under:

177: Kitāb-ul-Maṣāḥif -Abu-Dāwūd pp22. Rahmania Press. Egypt 1355 AH and Fataḥ al-Bārī v9, p15

178: Al-Itqān v1, p61.

اختلفوا فى القرآن على عهد عثمان حتى اقتتل الغلمان
والمعلمون فبلغ ذلك عثمان بن عفان فقال عندى تكذيبون و
تلحنون فيه فمن نأى عنى كان اشد تكذيباً واكثر لحناً يا
اصحاب محمد ﷺ اجتمعوا فاكتبوا للناس اماماً۔

Differences arose about the Qurān in the time of Sayyidina Uthmān رضي الله عنه so much that young students quarreled with their teachers. When the news reached 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه he said, you are disavowing (the correct recitals) and making mistakes although you are close to me. So, those who are living far away from me must be doing so in a greater measure. So, O Companions of Muḥammad ﷺ come together and prepare a Scripture for the people that may be followed. "This clearly indicates that the purpose of Sayyidina Uthmān رضي الله عنه behind it was not to abolish any Letter of the Qurān. Rather, he was grieved that some people denied the existence of correct Letters, and some people insisted on wrong method of recital. Hence, he wanted to compile a standard copy of the Qurān for the entire Islamic world."¹⁷⁹

MEANING OF WRITING IN THE LANGUAGE OF QURAYSH

- 2: The second question that arises is that Sayyidina Uthman رضي الله عنه instructed the committee under Zayd bin Thābit رضي الله عنه to compile the Qurān that:

اذا اختلفتم انتم وزيد بن ثابت في شىء من القرآن فاكتبوه بلسان

قریش فانما نزل بلسانهم۔

If there be a difference among you and Zayd bin Thābit about any part of the Qurān then write it in the language of Quraysh because the Qurān has been revealed in their language."¹⁸⁰

If he had retained all the Seven Letters why had he given such instructions?

The answer to this question is that in fact this is the very sentence which led Ibn Jarīr and some other scholars to think that Sayyidina Uthmān رضی اللہ عنہ abolished six Letters and retained only the letter of Quraysh in the Qurān. But a careful examination of this instruction would reveal that a wrong inference has been drawn by these people. If we consider this instruction alongwith other traditions in this context, it becomes obvious that he only meant that in the event of any difference arising during transcription of the Qurān the script of Quraysh should be adopted. This is proved from the fact that during the transcription of the entire Qurān only one difference arose which has been described by Imām Zahrī as under:

فاختلفوا يومئذ في التابوت والتابوة فقال نفر القريشون التابوت
وقال زيد بن ثابت رضي الله عنه التابوة فرفع اختلافهم الى عثمان رضي الله عنه فقال اكتبوه
التابوت فانه بلسان قريش نزل۔

"So, there arose a difference on the writing of تابوت or تابوة. The Quraysh said it is تابوت but Zayd bin Thābit رضي الله عنه said it should be تابوة. The difference was brought to the notice of Uthmān رضي الله عنه who said, "Write it as التابوت because the Qurān has been revealed in the language of Quraysh."¹⁸¹

180: Bukhari: Fath-ul-Bārī v9, p16.

181: Fath-ul-Bārī v9, p16. Kanz ul 'Ummāl, v1, p282, Hadith 4783 on the reference of Ibn Sa'd and others and reference, Tirmizi.

It is obvious that the difference between Zayd and Quraysh Companions, as mentioned by Sayyidina Uthmān رضي الله عنه, pertained to script and not to language.

USE OF SYNONYMS IN RECITATION

3: The third question that can be raised is that the explanation for differences of Seven Letters given by Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه apparently denotes that these Seven Letters could not be incorporated in the Book prepared by Sayyidina Uthmān رضي الله عنه because he says:

ان جبريل قال يا محمد اقرأ القرآن على حرف، قال ميكائيل
استزده حتى بلغ سبعة احرف، قال كل شاف كاف ما لم تخط
اية عذاب برحمة أو رحمة بعذاب نحو قولك تعال وأقبل وهلم و
اذهب وأسرع وعجل.

Jibrīl عليه السلام said, "O Muḥammad, Read the Qurān on one Letter." Mika'īl said to the Prophet to ask for addition to it, until they reached Seven Letters and Jibrīl عليه السلام said each one of them would be sufficient unless you change the verse of mercy with that of torment or vice versa. It will be as if you substitute the meaning of تعال (come) with words like,.... عجل, اقبل, هلم, اذهب, اسرع. 182

It is evident from this Hadith that the difference of Seven Letters was in fact the difference of synonyms, that is, one word is used in one rendering while in the other a synonym is used although the recitals incorporated in the collection of Sayyidina Uthmān رضي الله عنه have very few such difference. In these recitals the differences mostly pertain to sound, grammar, gender and dialects.

182: These words are found in Musnad Aḥmad with a proper line of transmission. (Aujaz ul-Masālik v 2, p357)

The answer to this question is that in the definition of "Seven Letters" that we have adopted, seven variations of recitals have been described one of which is the use of synonyms. Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه has not given a full explanation of "Seven Letters" but has given only one example of it and only one kind of variation, that is the use of synonyms.

Such use of synonyms was very common in the early days of Islam because all Arabs were not fully conversant with the Quraysh dialect. Hence greater flexibility was allowed in the beginning that they could read the Quran with any of the synonyms they had heard from the Prophet ﷺ. Hence in the beginning quite frequently one recital had one word and another had its synonyms. When people became familiar with the Qurānic language this type of variation in recitals was gradually minimized. When the Prophet ﷺ revised the Qurān twice with Jibril عليه السلام, most of these synonyms were abrogated and thus the difference in synonyms was brought down to a bare minimum.

Sayyidina Uthmān رضي الله عنه did not incorporate such synonyms in his scripture as were abrogated in the "Last Revision" because their state had now become like the abrogated verses. However, the variations of recitals that were retained in the "Last Revision" were also retained by him. Thus the variation quoted by Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه in the above Hadith is just an example, most of which were abrogated in the "Last Revision" and hence could not be incorporated in the 'Uthmāni scripture, nor the present recitals include them.

The foregoing conclusions are summarised in three points:

- 1: Several recitals of the Qurān were abrogated during the "Last Revision" of the Qurān by the Prophet ﷺ with Jibril عليه السلام.
- 2: Sayyidina Uthman رضي الله عنه got his scripture compiled according to this "Last Revision".

- 3: The variation of synonyms as described by Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه is not present in the 'Uthmāni scripture. The third conclusion is obvious and arguments about the second have been given earlier, of which the most apt statement is the one of 'Ubaydah Salmāni رحمة الله عليه that the recital on which Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه united us was in accordance with the "Last Revision".¹⁸³

Now remains the first conclusion that several recitals were abrogated at the time of "Last Revision". The argument for this is provided by the view of Research Scholar Ibnul Jazarī quoted below.

ولا شك ان القرآن نسخ منه و غير فيه في العرصة الا خيرة فقد
صح النص بذلك عن غير واحد من الصحابة وروينا باسناد
صحيح عن زر ابن حبيش قال قال لي ابن عباس اي القراءتين
تقرأ قلت الاخيرة قال فان النبي صلى الله عليه وسلم كان يعرض
القرآن على جبرئيل عليه السلام في كل عام مرة قال فعرض عليه
القرآن في العام الذي قبض فيه النبي صلى الله عليه وسلم مرتين
فشهد عبد الله يعني ابن مسعود ما نسخ منه وما بدل -¹⁸⁴

And there is no doubt that a good deal in the Qurān was abrogated and altered at the time of "Last Revision", because it has been clarified by several Companions رضي الله عنهم. We have received the narration of Zirr ibn Hubaysh رضي الله عنه with authentic sources that Ibn 'Abbās رضي الله عنه asked him which recital he followed. He replied "The last recital". Ibn 'Abbas said, "The Prophet used to revise the Qurān 183: Kanzul 'Ummāl, Ḥadīth #484, v1, p286.

184: An-Nashr fīl-Qirāt-ūl 'Ashr v1, p32.

with Jibril ﷺ once every year, so in the year of his death he revised it twice. Whatever was abrogated or changed on this occasion, ‘Abdullah bin Mas‘ud was witness to that.”¹⁸⁵

It is obvious that on the occasion of “Last Revision” many of the recitals were abrogated by Allah Himself. The variations of synonyms described by Abu Bakr ﷺ must have been abrogated at that time because Sayyidina ‘Uthmān ﷺ has compiled the copies of the Qurān in accordance with the Last Revision and the variations of synonyms are only rarely found in them.

ABDULLAH BIN MAS‘UD AND HIS TRANSCRIPT

- 4: The fourth doubt that can be raised on the above mentioned view is that it is proved through several narrations that Sayyidina ‘Abdullah bin Mas‘ud ﷺ was not happy with the compilation of the Qurān done by Sayyidina ‘Uthmān ﷺ and he did not allow his own transcript to be burnt. So if Sayyidina ‘Uthmān ﷺ had not abolished six Letters where was the reason of the objection by ‘Abdullah bin Mas‘ud ﷺ?

The answer to this objection is that in fact ‘Abdullah bin Mas‘ud ﷺ had two objections on the work done by Sayyidina ‘Uthmān ﷺ. First, why was he not associated with task of transcription of the Qurān, and secondly, why the other transcripts were burnt?

Imām Zuhri has been quoted in a narration in Saḥīḥ Tirmizī that Sayyidina ‘Abdullah bin Mas‘ud ﷺ had a grievance as to why he was not given task when he had a longer record of the Prophet’s company than Zayd bin

185: Hāfiz Ibn Hajar has also reproduced different versions on this subject (Fath ul Bārī v9, p36)

Thābit. Sayyidina ‘Uthmān’s plea in this connection was that the task was being done in Madinah while ‘Abdullah bin Mas‘ūd was in Kufah (Iraq) at that time and a delay was not desirable. Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه had also entrusted the responsibility to Zayd bin Thābit. For this reason also he thought it proper to let Zayd continue the task. (Fathul Bārī v9 p16)

The other objection of Sayyidina ‘Abdullah bin Mas‘ūd رضي الله عنه was that Sayyidina ‘Uthmān had ordered to burn all other transcripts after those compiled by Zayd and his committee”. He was not prepared to burn the one he had with him. Abu Mūsā Ash‘arī رضي الله عنه and Ḥuzayfah bin Yamān رضي الله عنه met him to persuade him to burn that copy. But he said:

والله لا ادفعه اليهم، اقرأني رسول الله صلى الله عليه وسلم بضعاو
سبعين سورة ثم ادفعه اليهم، والله لا ادفعه اليهم-

“By Allah I would not hand over this transcript to them. The Prophet ﷺ taught me more than seventy Surahs directly. Should I still hand it over to them? By God I will not give it to them.”¹⁸⁶

Sayyidina Abdullah bin Mas‘ūd رضي الله عنه also advised others not to hand over those transcripts in their possession which they had copied from him. Sayyidina Khumayr bin Mālīk has said.

”امر بالمصاحف ان تغير، قال قال ابن مسعود من استطاع منكم
ان يغزل مصحفه فليغزله،..... ثم قال قرأت من فم رسول الله صلى
الله عليه وسلم سبعين سورة، أفأترك ما اخذت من في رسول الله

186: Mustadrak Ḥākim v2, p228, Da‘iratul Ma‘ārif Dacan 1340 AH.
Ḥākim has said that the Hadith is sound.

صلى الله عليه وسلم و على آله و صحبه و سلم -

When changes in other transcripts were ordered 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd رضي الله عنه asked the people to hide their transcripts if they can do it.... Then he said,

"I have learnt seventy Surāhs from the Prophet ﷺ. Should I then give up a thing that I have directly learnt from the holy lips of the Prophet?"¹⁸⁷

From this it appears that the transcript of 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd رضي الله عنه was slightly different from that of Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه and so he wanted to keep it safe. But what was different in it? We do not find any conclusive evidence in authentic narrations about it. Apparently it seems that they basically differed in the sequence of various Surāhs. It has been already mentioned that in the transcripts of Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه the Surahs were not arranged but every Surah was written separately. Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه, however, arranged the Surahs in particular sequence in his transcripts. Imām Hākim states.

ان جمع القرآن لم يكن مرة واحدة فقد جمع بعضه بحضرة رسول الله صلى الله عليه وسلم ثم جمع بعضه بحضرة ابي بكر الصديق، والجمع الثالث هو في ترتيب السور، كان في خلافة امير المؤمنين عثمان بن عفان، رضى الله عنهم -

The compilation of the Qurān was not completed at one time. Some of it had been complied during the presence of the Prophet ﷺ, then some of it was compiled at the time of Sayyidina Abu Bakr Ṣiddiq رضي الله عنه, and the third stage of its compilation was when its Surahs were arranged. This task was done during the time of Sayyidina 'Uthmān bin 'Affān رضي الله عنه, the thrid caliph.¹⁸⁸

The transcript of Sayyidina 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd رضي الله عنه was quite different in the sequence of Surah's. For example, it had Surah-an-Nisā before Surah Aal 'Imrān.¹⁸⁹ Probably Ibn Mas'ud had learnt the Qurān from the Prophet ﷺ in the sequence adopted in his transcript, and he wished that this transcript should exist in that sequence. This is supported by a narration of 'Sahīḥ Bukhārī' that a person from Iraq once came to Sayyidah 'Aishah رضي الله تعالى عنها:

قال يا ام المؤمنين اريني مصحفك، قالت لم؟ قال لعلّى أوّلف القرآن عليه، فانه يُقرأ غير مؤلف، قالت وما يضرّك آية قرأت قبل.

He said, "Ummul Mu'minīn! Show me your transcript." She asked, "Why?" He said, 'So that I arrange my Qurānic transcript according to yours because in our land it is recited without any regard to its sequential order." She said, "Whichever part of the Qurān you read first will not do you any harm."¹⁹⁰

Explaining this tradition Ḥafīz Ibn Hajar رحمة الله عليه has written that the Iraqi was following the recitals of Ibn Mas'ūd and since he had not changed or destroyed his transcript, the sequence of the Surahs was different from those of Sayyidina 'Uthmān's transcripts, and the latter sequence was better in order. That is why the Iraqi considered his transcript as disarranged in comparison to the transcriptions of Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه.¹⁹¹

188: Al-Mustadrak, Ḥakīm, v2, p229.

189: 'Allāmah Suyūṭī has reporduced the entire sequence of Surahs of Ibn Mas'ūd with reference to Ibn Ashta. This sequence is very much different from the trascripts of Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه.

190: Sahīḥ Bukhārī: Chapter Tālīful Qurān.

191: Fath ul-Bārī, v9, p32.

It appears from this tradition that the transcript of Ibn Mas'ūd رضي الله عنه was basically different in the sequence of Surahs. In addition, there may have been a difference in the script also, and possibly it was written in a script that did not incorporate all the recitals as against the transcripts of Sayyidina Uthman رضي الله عنه.

Otherwise, if we go by what Ḥāfiz Ibn Jarīr says that 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه had got the Qurān transcribed on one single Letter after abolishing six Letters, and the transcription of 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd was written in one of the six, the following objections can be raised:

- i) In the above mentioned tradition of Saḥīḥ Bukhārī the Iraqi mentioned the difference of sequence only. If there was a difference of Letters as well, he should have mentioned them in view of greater importance attached to it.
- ii) According to the view of Ḥāfiz Ibn Jarīr and others, the Seven Letters stand for Seven Dialects of different tribes. If that were true, there should have been no difference in the transcription of 'Abdullah bin -Mas'ūd رضي الله عنه and that of 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه because this view also holds that Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه had got them written on the Letter of Quraysh, and Sayyidina Abdullah bin Mas'ūd رضي الله عنه was also a Qurayshī.
- iii) The strongest argument offered by Ḥāfiz Bin Jarīr and his followers about the abrogation of six Letters is that there was a consensus of the Companions on this action. If Ibn Mas'ūd رضي الله عنه used to recite the Qurān on a different letter and validated its transcription as such, how can it be considered to be a consensus which must include a companion of his stature. Some scholars have claimed that Sayyidina 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd رضي الله عنه had later accepted the opinion held by Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه, but there is no definite evidence available to support this view. Hāfiz Ibn Hajar has written,

"Ibn Abi Dāwood has included a chapter under the heading 'Agreement of Ibn Mas'ūd رضي الله عنه on the action of Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه, but he could not produce any relevant tradition to support this claim."¹⁹²

We do not get an answer to these objections in the statements of Hāfiz Ibn Jarīr رحمة الله عليه. Hence it is concluded that Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه had retained all the Seven Letters in his Transcripts and Sayyidina Ibn Mas'ūd's رضي الله عنه objection did not show that the six Letters were abolished.¹⁹³ In fact nothing like that had happened and his objection pertained to why the transcripts other than those compiled by Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه were being destroyed while they were also correct only because they differed in sequence of Surahs and script.

CONCLUSIONS OF DISCUSSION

The discussion on "Seven Letters" has become rather lengthy. We may sum up the conclusions drawn so that they are easily digested.

- a) For the convenience of his people the Prophet ﷺ begged from Allah that the recital of the Qurān may not be limited to one system, but permission be granted to recite it in different ways. Hence the Qurān was revealed on Seven Letters.
- b) The correct meaning of revelation on Seven Letters is that Seven variations were allowed in recital. As a result several recitals came to be used.

192: Fathul Bārī v9, p40.

193: There is only one narration in Musnad Ahmad from which it appears that Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه had abolished six Letters and Sayyidina Ibn Mas'ūd had objection to that (Al-Fath-ur-Rabbānī v18, p369) but the narration is weak because an ignorant person has reported it.

- c) In the beginning, of the seven basic points of differences in recital, differences in words and use of synonyms was very common. It was quite frequent that a word used in one recital was replaced by its synonym in another recital. But gradually, as the people of Arabia became more and more acquainted with the Qurānic language such variations were reduced, and by the time of 'Last Revision' of the Qurān by the Prophet ﷺ with Jibril ﷺ this type of differences had become negligible, and only the differences that concerned composition of tenses, genders, singular and plural, active and passive tenses and variations of accent had remained.
- d) All the variations that remained at the time of the Last Revision, were incorporated by Sayyidina 'Uthmān ؓ in his transcripts. Words were left free of dots and vowel marks to accommodate variation in recital. Hence most of the variations of recitals were merged in it, and those recitals that could not be merged into one transcript were shown in other transcripts. Thus, occasionally there occurred a difference of one or two words in the several transcripts of Sayyidina 'Uthmān ؓ.
- e) In this manner Sayyidina 'Uthmān ؓ got seven transcripts written, and also arranged the Surahs in a sequence while these Surahs were not arranged in the Transcripts of Sayyidina Abu Bakr ؓ. Further, he prescribed a script for the Qurān, and all those transcripts that were different from this sequence and script were burnt.
- f) Sayyidina Abdullah bin Mas'ūd ؓ retained his transcript whose sequence was different from the 'Uthmānic Transcripts. He wanted to preserve this sequence, hence he did not hand over his Transcript to Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه to be burnt.

TRUTH ABOUT THE DIFFERENCE IN OPINION ON SEVEN LETTERS

A misunderstanding removed:

In the end, it seems essential to remove another basic misunderstanding that a cursory reader of the foregoing discussion may get into. He may fall into doubt as to how such big differences of opinion occurred in a Fundamental Book like the Qurān which, under the Divine Protection, has remained preserved in the original form without the slightest change in it.

A thoughtful study of the views that we have mentioned in the discussion of "Seven Letters" easily provides the answer to this doubt. Anybody who concentrates on the basic reality of this difference of opinion would easily know that it is entirely theoretical in nature, and from the practical standpoint this difference has not the slightest effect on the Truth and Reality and absolute preservation of Qurān. It is agreed by everyone without exception that the Qurān is being read continuously without any break in the same form in which it exists today. There has not occurred even an iota of change in it. It is also agreed by all the scholars that all the recitals that have reached us in a continuous chain of narrations are correct and the Qurān can be read according to any one of them. There is also a consensus of the entire Ummah that rare recitals described by some do not form part of the Qurān. This is also an agreed fact that the recitals that were abrogated before or during the 'Last Revision' do not remain part of the Qurān on the instruction of the Prophet ﷺ himself. This is also an undisputed and undoubted fact that the difference in the "Seven Letters" of the Qurān was only literal in nature, meaningwise all these letters were the same. Thus, if someone has read the Qurān only one recital (Letter) he would learn the subject of the Qurān and he would not be in need of another recital to acquire due guidance from the Qurān. There is also no difference of opinion, not even the slightest, that the Transcripts of Sayyidina 'Uthmān ؓ were prepared with utmost care with full endorsement and affirmation of hundreds of Companions and the entire Muslim world and the Qurān was transcribed in them exactly as it was revealed to the Holy Prophet ﷺ and not a single soul objected to it.¹⁹⁴

Hence, the difference that has been discussed in the preceding pages pertained only to the questions, "What was meant by 'Seven Letters' in the Hadith? Do the continuous recitals prevalent today comprise "Seven Letters" or only one Letter?" This is purely a theoretical difference. Hence it is wrong to assume, God forbid, that the Qurān has become a disputed entity on account of these differences. This can be understood from the following example.

Suppose the entire world agrees about a certain book that it was written by such and such author. The attribution of this book to that author is authentic and he himself confirmed that by publishing it that the book was written by him and this could be published ever afterwards in accordance with that transcription. But later on the people differ on the point whether the author had made any literal change in the script before its publication or published it in its original form. Obviously, this theoretical difference does not make the transparent reality a point of dispute about which every one is agreed that the book was published by the same author at his own responsibility and he has attributed it to himself and allowed it to be published with this attribution ever afterwards. Likewise, when the entire Muslim Ummah is united in the opinion that the Qurān was transcribed by Sayyidina ‘Uthmān رضي الله عنه exactly as it was revealed and all its continuous recitals are correct and revealed as such, then these facts cannot become a matter to be disputed due to the theoretical differences that have been discussed during the explanation of “Seven Letters”.

ABROGATOR & ABROGATED

MEANING OF ABROGATION

Another important subject of Sciences of the Qurān is the discussion on “Abrogator ناسخ” and Abrogated منسوخ. This is a very lengthy and multidimensional discussion. But instead of going into all its details only the basic points are being presented here.

Abrogation is translated from the Arabic word Naskh نسخ which literally means “To erase, to compensate”, and its technical definition is:

رفع الحكم الشرعي بدليل شرعي

To repeal a legal order through legal argument.

That is to say that sometimes Allah enforces a legal order relevant to a particular time. Then at a later time, in His Infinite Wisdom, He cancels this order and enforces a new one in its place. This action is known as “Abrogation نسخ” and thus the old cancelled order is known as “Abrogated” منسوخ and the newly replaced order as “Abrogator” ناسخ.

PRUDENT AND CONVENTIONAL PROOF OF ABROGATION

The Jews think that there can be no Abrogation in the Commands of Allah, because if they accept Abrogation it would imply that Allah also changes His views (God forbid). They state that this would mean that once Allah thought one Commandment as proper but later on (God forbid) He realised His mistake and withdrew it which is commonly known as بداء (Budā).

But the objection raised by the Jews is quite superficial and if we ponder a little we can see the mistake. "Abrogation" does not mean a change in views, but it implies issuing orders according to the needs of another time. It is not for the Abrogator to declare the Abrogated as wrong but it is to fix the time limit for the enforcement of the first order and to tell that the first order was just and proper for the time it remained in force. But now a new order is being enforced according to the changed circumstances. Whoever would think over it in a reasonable frame of mind would have no difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that this change is exactly in keeping with the infinite wisdom of Allah. It cannot be questioned in any way. He would not be a doctor in the true sense if he uses the same prescription under all the circumstances and for every disease. An adept would make necessary changes in his prescriptions according to the changing condition of the patient.

This rule applies not only to religious injunctions but the entire universe works on this principle. Through His expedience Allah makes changes in the weather conditions. We get winter, summer, spring, autumn, rainy season or drought. All these changes are exactly in conformity with the expedient measure of Allah. He must be a witless person, indeed, who terms it Budā and contends that and argues it amounts to mutation in the Judgement of Allah. He says that He once preferred winter then discovered His mistake and replaced it with summer. That exactly is the case with the abrogation of religious injunctions and considering it a fault by calling it Budā would be an extreme degree of short sightedness and ignorance of facts.

“Abrogation” is not a trait specific only to the followers of the Holy Prophet ﷺ but it has remained a regular feature in the religious orders of other Prophets عليهم السلام as well. We find several examples in the present day Bible. For example it has occurred in the Bible that “In the religious system of Sayyidina Ya‘qūb ﷺ a man could have two real sisters as his wives at the same time, and he himself had two wives at one time, Liyyah and Rāhīl who were real sisters.¹⁹⁵ But this was forbidden in the religious dispensation of Sayyidina Musa ﷺ.¹⁹⁶ Every moving animal was permissible as food in the dispensation of Sayyidina Nuh ﷺ¹⁹⁷ but many of them were prohibited in that of Sayyidina Musa ﷺ.¹⁹⁸ Also, divorce was permissible freely in the dispensation of Sayyidina Musa ﷺ but in that of Sayyidina Isa ﷺ divorce was allowed only¹⁹⁹ if a woman committed adultery. In short there are several such examples in the New and Old Testaments of the Bible wherein an existing order had been abrogated through a new order.²⁰⁰

DIFFERENCE SEEN IN THE TECHNICAL MEANING OF ABROGATION BY THE EARLIER AND LATER SCHOLARS

There has been a difference in the meaning of abrogation as understood by the earlier scholars and the later scholars. We must look at that first. In the phraseology of earlier scholars the word ‘Abrogation’ had a very wide scope of application, and it included many such possibilities that were not regarded as Abrogation by the later scholars. For example, if the general scope of a verse 195: Bible, Book of Genesis 29;23to30.

196: Aḥbār 18:18.

197: Genesis 9:3.

198: Aḥbār 11:7 14:7.

199: Istāṭhnā’ 24: 1,2.

200: Bible Muttā 19:15.

was limited by another they regarded the first as abrogated. Hence if common words are used in one verse and they have been specified in a particular manner in another verse, the earlier scholars used to term the former as 'Abrogated' and the latter as "Abrogator". This did not mean that the first commandment has been totally abolished but that the generalisation created by the first verse has been removed by the second verse, for example, the Qurān says.

وَلَا تَنْكِحُوا الْمُشْرِكَاتِ حَتَّى يُؤْمِنَ

And marry not the mushrikāt until they believe.

(Al-Baqarah, 2:221)

Here the phrase mushrikāt polytheist women is general which apparently means that marriage is disallowed with all kinds of polytheist women be they idolatress or of the people of Book. But in another verse it says.

وَالْمُحْصَنَاتُ مِنَ الَّذِينَ أُوتُوا الْكِتَابَ and (lawful to you is to marry) the chaste from among those who were given the Book... (Al-Ma'idah, 5:5)

This indicates that in the first verse "polytheist women" meant those polytheists that were not from the people of the Book. Thus the second verse has limited the universal character of the first verse, and it tells us that this phrase refers to the particular type of polytheist women. The earlier scholars regard this also an abrogation and the first verse as abrogated and the second as abrogator.

Contrary to this, the scope of Abrogation with the later scholars is not so wide. They consider only such state as "Abrogated" in which the previous order is totally abolished. They do not consider limitation of a universal command as abrogation. Thus, in the above example there has been no abrogation according to later scholars, because the real order of prohibition of marrying a polytheist woman exists as such. The second verse has clarified only that the meaning of the first verse were not so generalised as to include the women of the people of Book, but was limited and specific to women other than women of the people of Book.

Because of this difference in the scope of application the number of abrogated verses, according to earlier scholars, was very large, and they used to term one verse as abrogated and the other as abrogator due to minor differences in them. But according to later scholars the number of abrogated verses is very limited.²⁰¹

DISCUSSION ON ABROGATION IN THE QURĀN

Abrogation of religious injunctions is not new but was also done in earlier times of the previous Ummahs, and this fact is undisputed by all.

Several such orders have been abrogated for the people of Muḥammad ﷺ too. For example, the injunction was to face towards Baytal Maqdis during Salāh, but later on this was abrogated and Muslims were ordained to face towards Ka'bah. There is no dispute about it among the Muslims.²⁰²

But there is a difference of opinion about whether there had been any abrogation in the Qurān. In other words, it is disputed if there is yet any verse in the Qurān that is recited although its command is abrogated. The majority of traditionalists believe that the Qurān does contain such verses whose injunctions are abrogated. But of the

202: Tafsīr Qasmi v1, p32. Jamaluddin al-Qasim. 'Eisa al-bābi al-Ḥalbs̄ Egypt 1376 AH.

M'utazilah, Abu Muslim Isfahāni maintains that no verse of the Qurān has been abrogated but all the verses of the Qurān continue to be obligatory.

Some other scholars have also expressed the same opinion. A number of modernists of our time also hold the same view. Hence, the verses in which abrogation is obvious, they explain them in a manner that abrogation may not have to be accepted. But, the fact is that this viewpoint is very weak and to adopt it one would have to draw far fetched meanings while explaining the relative verses. These would not conform to the principles of exegesis.

In fact, those who do not believe in abrogation in the Qurān suppose that abrogation is a defect of which the Qurān should be free. But as already stated, it is an extremely short sighted view to consider abrogation as wrong. It is surprising that, unlike the Jews and Christians, Abu Muslim Isfahāni and his followers do not deny that there had been abrogation in many of the Commandments of Allah, but only say that there is no abrogation in the Qurān. Now, if abrogation is a vice, why did it occur in the non-Qurānic injunctions as they are also from Allah? And if something was not a vice for non-Qurānic injunctions how could it be so for Qurānic injunctions. It is argued that it appears against the Divine Expediency that a verse of the Qurān should remain only as a sacred relic for recital yet not to be practised.²⁰³

We fail to understand on what grounds this has been considered against the Divine Expediency, while there could be several expedient reasons in retaining the verses whose commands are abrogated. For example, we come to know of the prudence behind gradual imposition of religious doctrines, and also of the prudential manner adopted to bind human beings to follow His doctrine. Further, it also serves as history of these doctrines and their backgrounds. Allah has Himself revealed in the Qurān at several places the doctrines and Commandments of the previous nations that were abrogated for the people of Muḥammad ﷺ. For example,

Majils Ma'ariful Qurān, Deoband 1386 AH.

وَعَلَى الَّذِينَ هَادُوا حَرَّمْنَا كُلَّ ذِي ظُفْرٍ وَمِنَ الْبَقَرِ وَالْغَنَمِ
حَرَّمْنَا عَلَيْهِمْ شُحُومَهُمَا إِلَّا مَا حَمَلَتْ ظُهُورُهُمَا أَوْ
الْحَوَايَا أَوْ مَا اخْتَلَطَ بِعَظْمٍ

And those who became Jews, We forbade them every animal with claws, and of oxen and sheep we forbade them the fat thereof except such as their backs carry or the entrails or what is mixed with the bones.

(Al-An'ām: 6:146)

Obviously Allah has described an abrogated order an admonishment for the Muslims. Thus, if some abrogated Qurānic verses are retained for this purpose what is there in it against the Divine Expediency? Moreover, can anyone claim that he knows the wisdom behind all actions of Allah, or that he understands the expediency behind every Qurānic verse and its revelation? If such a claim is not true, and it certainly is not true, how can one deny an order of Allah simply because one does not know the expediency behind it while its enforcement has been justified on religious principles.

Thus the fact is that those who do not believe in abrogation in the Qurān have based their opinion on a misconceived idea. They have given far-fetched meanings to some Qurānic verses because they think that abrogation is a fault and they want to see and Qurān is free of it. If it becomes clear to them that it is not a fault but conforms to the Will of Allah, they would also give the same meanings to such verses as are obvious and commonly adopted.

The Qurān says:

مَا نَنْسَخْ مِنْ آيَةٍ أَوْ نُنسِهَا نَأْتِ بِخَيْرٍ مِنْهَا أَوْ مِثْلَهَا أَلَمْ تَعْلَمْ أَنَّ اللَّهَ عَلَى كُلِّ شَيْءٍ قَدِيرٌ ○

Whichever revelation We abrogate or cause to be forgotten, We bring one better than it or similar to it. Know you not that Allah has power over everything?

(Al-Baqarah, 2:106)

Whoever studies this verse with an unbiased mind shall deduce that abrogation had continued according to clear injunctions of the Qurān itself. But Abu Muslim Iṣfahānī and his associates who willingly or unwillingly consider abrogation a fault, interpret this verse in a far-fetched manner. They say that this verse deals only with a hypothetical situation. They argue that it implies, "If we were to abrogate a verse, we would reveal a like or a better verse" and it does not follow that any verse would actually be abrogated. In proof of this they present another verse

إِنْ كَانَ لِلرَّحْمَنِ وَلَدٌ فَأَنَا أَوَّلُ الْعَابِدِينَ ○

If the Compassionate had a son, I would be the first of worshippers. (Az-Zukhruf, 43:81)

Those who reject possibility of abrogation say that just as this verse speaks of a hypothetical situation which does not mean that Allah really has a son, so too the former verse (of Surah Al-Baqarah) raises a hypothetical situation not necessitating abrogation of a verse.²⁰⁴

But this interpretation is not correct because if there were to be no abrogation Allah would not have mentioned it even as a hypothetical possibility. The Qurān does not place a command over anything that may never happen. As for this verse about a son, there is a world of a difference between it and the verse of abrogation.

Hence any reader of this verse would know that this is merely a hypothetical proposition, which means that if at all Allah would bear a son I would have worshipped him before anybody else but since this is an impossible thing to happen, the question of worshipping anybody other than Allah does not arise. Contrary to this the occurrence of "Abrogation" is not logically impossible even according to Abū Muslim Iṣfahāni himself, hence calling it a hypothetical situation is a meaningless proposition.

This becomes all the more apparent from looking at the background of revelation of the verse of abrogation. Some unbelievers had commented that the Prophet ﷺ first orders his followers to follow one thing and later on instructs them against it and introduces a new order in place of it. This verse was revealed in answer to their comments. It is clear now that the revelation of this verse describes the purpose of abrogation rather than negate its occurrence.²⁰⁵

NUMBER OF ABROGATED VERSES OF THE QURĀN

As already mentioned, the scope of Abrogation was very wide in its interpretation by earlier scholars, and hence they have mentioned a large number of abrogated verses. But 'Allāmah Jalāluddīn Suyūṭī has written that there are only nineteen abrogated verses in the whole of Qurān according to the definition of the later day scholars.²⁰⁶

Then, the latest of the scholars Shāh Wali-Ullah, made a detailed analysis of all the nineteen verses and accepted only five of them to be the abrogated ones. As for the rest of them, he has preferred the commentaries according to which these verses need not be considered as Abrogated. The arguments given by Shāh Waliullah about many of these verses are most appropriate and acceptable but some of them may be disputed. However, the five verses that he considers to be abrogated are as follows:

205: Ruḥ ul-Ma'ānī, by 'Allāmah Ālūsī v1, p351.

206: Al-Itqān by Allāmah Suyūṭī v2, p22.

كُتِبَ عَلَيْكُمْ إِذَا حَضَرَ أَحَدُكُمُ الْمَوْتُ إِن تَرَكَ خَيْرًا الْوَصِيَّةُ
لِلْوَالِدَيْنِ وَالْأَقْرَبِينَ بِالْمَعْرُوفِ حَقًّا عَلَى الْمُتَّقِينَ ○

It is prescribed for you, when death approaches anyone of you and if he leaves behind some wealth, to make a bequest to parents and near kindreds in an equitable way, it is an obligation on the God fearing.

(Al-Baqarah, 2:180)

This verse was revealed when Laws of Inheritance were not revealed and according to it every person was bound to make will before he died about the distribution of his assets among his parents and other relatives. Thereafter the revelation of the verse of Inheritance:

يُوصِيكُمُ اللَّهُ فِي أَوْلَادِكُمْ.....الخ

Allah enjoins you concerning your children

(Al-Baqarah, 2:11)

— abrogated this verse, and Allah Himself fixed a schedule of the distribution of inherited assets, and it is no more obligatory on anyone to make a will before his death.

In Surah Al-Anfal it is stated...

إِنْ يَكُنْ مِنْكُمْ عِشْرُونَ صَابِرُونَ يَغْلِبُوا مِائَتِينَ وَإِنْ يَكُنْ
مِنْكُمْ مِائَةٌ يَغْلِبُوا أَلْفًا مِنَ الَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا بِأَنَّهُمْ قَوْمٌ لَا
يَفْقَهُونَ ○

If there be of you twenty persevering they shall overcome two hundred; and if there be of you a hundred, they will overcome a thousand of those who disbelieve, because they are a people who do not understand. (Al-Anf'āl, 8:65)

This verse although it is a piece of information but essentially it is a command that it is not allowed to Muslims to show their backs while in combat with an enemy ten times their number. This was later on abrogated through the following verse:

الآن خَفَّفَ اللَّهُ عَنْكُمْ وَعَلِمَ أَنَّ فِيكُمْ ضَعْفًا فَإِنْ يَكُنْ
مِنْكُمْ مِائَةٌ صَابِرَةٌ يَغْلِبُوا مِائَتَيْنِ وَإِنْ يَكُنْ مِنْكُمْ أَلْفٌ يَغْلِبُوا
أَلْفَيْنِ بِإِذْنِ اللَّهِ وَاللَّهُ مَعَ الصَّابِرِينَ

(O believers) Now Allah has lightened it for you, for He knew that there is weakness in you. So if there be of you a hundred persevering they will overcome two hundred, and if there be of you a thousand, they will overcome two thousand by Allah's leave. And Allah is with the persevering. (Al-Anf'āl, 8:66)

This verse has lightened the burden imposed by the first command and the limit of tenfold enemies has been reduced to twofold. Thus a retreat up to double the strength of enemy is not permissible now.

The third verse considered abrogated by Shāh Waliullah is the following verse of Surah Al-Ahzāb:

لَا يَحِلُّ لَكَ النِّسَاءُ مِنْ بَعْدُ وَلَا أَنْ تَبَدَّلَ بِهِنَّ مِنْ أَزْوَاجٍ
وَلَوْ أَعْجَبَكَ حُسْنُهُنَّ ۖ

(Besides these), it is not lawful for you to take (more) wives after this nor that you should exchange them for other wives even though their beauty may please you.....(Al-Ahzāb, 33:52)

According to this verse it was not lawful for the Prophet ﷺ to marry any more women.

Later, this was abrogated through a verse that occurs before it in the present sequence of Qurānic surāhs and verses. It is:

يَا أَيُّهَا النَّبِيُّ إِنَّا أَحْلَلْنَا لَكَ أَزْوَاجَكَ اللَّاتِي آتَيْتَ
أُجُورَهُنَّ ۖ

O Prophet! We have made lawful for you your wives whom you have given their dower..... (Al-Ahzāb, 33:50)

Shāh Waliullah and others say that the earlier restriction was abrogated through this verse, but in fact abrogation in this verse is not definite. Its explanation as given by Ḥāfīz Ibn Jarīr is to a great extent straightforward and simple. He has said that the two verses were revealed in their present order; in verse fifteen O Prophet, we.... Allah has named some particular categories of women as being lawful for the Prophet ﷺ and then in verse 51, (Besides these), it is not lawful..... it has been specified that women belonging to categories other than these were not lawful for him.²⁰⁷

4: The fourth verse that is abrogated according to Shah Waliullah is:

يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا إِذَا نَاجَيْتُمُ الرَّسُولَ فَقَدِّمُوا بَيْنَ يَدَيْ
نَجْوَاكُمْ صَدَقَةٌ ذَلِكَ خَيْرٌ لَّكُمْ وَأَطْهَرُ فَإِنْ لَمْ تَجِدُوا فَإِنَّ
اللَّهَ غَفُورٌ رَحِيمٌ ۝

207: Tafsīr Ibn Jarīr.

O you who believe, when you counsel in private with the Messenger give alms before your counseling. That is better for you and purer. But if you cannot find (the means), then surely Allah is Forgiving, Merciful.

(Al-Mujādilah, 58:12)

This verse was abrogated by the next verse:

أَشْفَقْتُمْ أَنْ تُقَدِّمُوا بَيْنَ يَدَيْ نَجْوَاكُمْ صَدَقَاتٍ فَإِذْ لَمْ
تَفْعَلُوا وَتَابَ اللَّهُ عَلَيْكُمْ فَأَقِيمُوا الصَّلَاةَ وَآتُوا الزَّكَاةَ
وَأَطِيعُوا اللَّهَ وَرَسُولَهُ ۝

Do you fear to give alms before your counseling? So when you did it not, and Allah has relented towards you, then establish the Ṣalāh and pay the Zakah and obey Allah and His Messenger..... (Al-Mujādilah, 58:13)

In this way the Command to give alms before counseling stands abrogated.

5: The fifth verse is the following verse of Surah al-Muzzammil:

يَا أَيُّهَا الْمُزَّمِّلُ ۝ قُمْ اللَّيْلَ إِلَّا قَلِيلًا ۝ نِصْفَهُ أَوْ انْقُصْ مِنْهُ
قَلِيلًا ۝

O you (Muhammad) enfolded in your robes, keep vigil by night, except a little, half of it, or diminish a little.

This verse had ordained for worship for at least half of the night, but later on this was abrogated by a flexibility provided in the verses that follow it.

عَلِمَ أَنْ لَنْ تُحْصَوْهُ فَتَابَ عَلَيْكُمْ فَاقْرَءُوا مَا تَيَسَّرَ مِنَ
الْقُرْآنِ ۝

And He knows that (all of) you cannot keep it up (like that), so He has relented towards you; so recite so much of the Qurān as may be easy (for you).

(Al-Muzzammil, 73:20)

Shāh Waliullah has stated that although Tahajjud (late night Salah) was not obligatory even before, but there was a greater emphasis on it and its duration was also longer, yet later both, the emphasis on it and the binding about timing, were relaxed.

These are the five verses in which abrogation had occurred. But it must be understood that these five examples are only those wherein the abrogator and abrogated verses can both be found in the Qurān. There are many such examples where abrogator verses are not, such as those related to change of Qiblah etc.

CONCLUSION

The above discussion was aimed at clarifying that, God forbid, "Abrogation" in the Qurānic verses is not a defect for which efforts should be made to show Qurān free from it. Rather it is exactly in keeping with the Divine Scheme of things. Hence the meanings of any verse should not be rejected simply because that affirms "Abrogation" in the Qurān. Nothing stands in the way of adopting the meanings or explanations of a verse if they conform to principles of 'Exegesis' even if that would mean classifying the verse as abrogated.

CHAPTER: 5

HISTORY OF PRESERVATION OF THE QURĀN

After having dealt with the history of revelation of the Qurān and gone through its relevant discussions, we now present the history of preservation of the Qurān. We will see how the Qurān was preserved at the time of the Prophet ﷺ and the times that followed, how it was written, and through how many stages these attempts passed. Also, we will discuss and answer the doubts being created by non-Muslim and atheists.

WRITING OF THE QURĀN DURING THE DAYS OF THE PROPHET ﷺ

Since the Qurān was not revealed all at one time but its various verses were revealed in piecemeal according to the needs and circumstances of the time it was not possible to preserve it as a written Book during the lifetime of the Prophet ﷺ. Also, Allah had granted a distinction to the Qurān against other Divine Scriptures. Its preservation was done more through memory than pen and paper. According to Saḥīḥ Muslim, Allah assured the Prophet ﷺ:

ومنزل عليك كتاباً لا يغسله الماء

I am going to reveal to you a Book which water cannot wash.

Meaning thereby that other books in the world will perish due to worldly calamities, as happened in the case of Torah, Injeel and other Divine Scriptures but the Qurān will be so preserved in the hearts (memory) of men that there will be no danger of its getting perished.²⁰⁸ Hence, greater emphasis was placed on memory for the preservation of the Qurān in the early days of Islam. In the beginning, when revelations came to the Prophet ﷺ he used to repeat its words at the same time so as to memorise them well. On this, the following verse was revealed:

لَا تُحَرِّكْ بِهِ لِسَانَكَ لِتَعْجَلَ بِهِ ۚ إِنَّ عَلَيْنَا جَمْعَهُ وَقُرْآنَهُ ۝

(O Prophet) Move not your tongue therewith to make haste with it (the learning of the Qurān), Surely upon Us rests the collecting thereof, and the reciting thereof.

(Al-Qiyāmah, 75:16-17)

This verse assured the Prophet ﷺ that he need not repeat the words hurriedly right at the moment of revelation itself because Allah Himself would confer upon him a memory that he would not forget a revelation after having heard it once. And that is how it happened. The verses were committed to the Prophet's memory as soon as they were revealed. Thus the Prophet's heart itself was the safest repository of the Qurān wherein there was not the slightest chance of any mistake or alteration. Moreover, as an additional precaution he used to repeat the Qurān before Jibril عليه السلام in the month of Ramaḍān every year, and on the year of his death he did it twice.²⁰⁹

Further, he did not teach the Companions only the meanings of the Qurān but had them memorise its words as well. The Companions were themselves so keen to learn and memorise the Qurān that everyone of them wanted to excel the other. There were women who demanded nothing else as mahr (dower) from their husbands except that they should teach them the Qurān. Hundreds of Companions, ridding themselves of all worldly cares, had devoted their entire lives for this purpose. Not only did they memorise it but also revised it in their nightly Salah. Sayyidina ‘Ubadah bin Ṣāmit رضي الله عنه has stated that whenever some one migrated from Makkah to Madinah, the Holy Prophet ﷺ entrusted him to the care of one of the Ansars so that he could teach the Qurān to the newcomer. So much noise was created in Masjid Nabawī by the voices of the learners and teachers of the Qurān that the Prophet ﷺ had to tell them to lower their voices so that there was no confusion.²¹⁰

208: An-Nashr fil Qir'at il, 'Ashr: Ibn ul Jazarī v1, p6.

Arabs were distinguished all over the world for their amazing power of memory, and after groping for centuries in the darkness of ignorance they had received the guidance of the Holy Qurān which they considered to be the most cherished possession of their lives. Anybody with an understanding of their character and bent of mind can very well visualise what pains they must have taken to commit it to their memory. Hence, within a fairly short time, there were on hand a large group of the pious Companions who had the entire Qurān committed flawlessly to their memory. Traditions denote that this group had included Sayyidina Abu Bakr, ‘Umar, ‘Uthmān, Ali, Ṭalhah, Sa‘ad, ‘Abdullah bin Mas‘ūd, Ḥuzayfah bin Yamān, Ṣālim Maula Abi Ḥuzayfah, Abu Hurayrah, ‘Abdullah bin ‘Umar’ ‘Abdullah bin ‘Abbās, Amr bin ‘Aas, Mu‘āwiyah, ‘Abdullah bin Zubayr, ‘Abdullah bin Ṣā‘ib, Sayyidah ‘Āishah, Sayyidah Ḥafṣah, Sayyidah Umm Salamah, Sayyidah Umm Warqah,

210: Manāhil-ul-‘Irfān v1, p 4

Ubayy bin Ka'b, Mu'āz bin Jabal, Abu Ḥalīmah Mu'az Zayd bin Thābit, Abu Dardā, Mujamma' bin Jāriyah, Muslimah bin Mukhallad, Anas bin Malik, Aqabah bin 'Āmir, Tamīm Dāramī, Abu Mūsa Ash 'arī and Abu Zayd (رضى الله تعالى عنهم اجمعين).²¹¹

These are the names of only some of those Companions whose names have been preserved as "Ḥāfiẓ of Qurān" (one who has committed the Qurān to memory) in various traditions. Otherwise, there must be numerous others who had memorised the whole Qurān but their names could not be preserved in the traditions in that capacity. This is corroborated by the fact that there had been times when the Holy Prophet ﷺ had sent up to seventy recitors for teaching the Qurān only to one tribe. There are traditions mentioning the martyrdom of seventy recitors from among his Companions in the battle of Bī'y'r Ma'ūnah, and an equal number of Ḥāfiẓ Companions was martyred in the battle of Yamamah after the death of the Prophet ﷺ.²¹² Actually, another account places the number of martyred Companions at Yamamah at 700 Recitors.²¹³

These facts relate only to the Companions who knew the entire Qurān by heart whereas the number of those who had memorised different portions of the Qurān is countless.²¹⁴

In short, the preservation of the Qurān in the early days of Islam was based on committing it to the memory. This was the safest and most reliable method in view of the circumstances of that time because the number of literate persons in those days was very small, and printing press and other means of publication were unknown. Hence, if reliance was placed on pen and paper, neither a wide publicity was possible nor a reliable preservation would have been practical. Instead, Allah had endowed the people of Arabia with such a prodigious memory that many among them had thousands of couplets at their finger tips. The common run of men would remember by heart not only their own genealogies and those of their families but even those of their horses. Therefore, this power of memory was well utilised for the preservation of the Holy Qur̄an, and it was through this means that the verse and chapters of the Qur̄an reached every nook and corner of Arabia.

How rapidly the knowledge of Qur̄an spread in this way can be judged from the incident of 'Amr ibn Salamah, a seven year old child living on the bank of a natural spring where the travellers used to rest for a while. He had not yet accepted Islam but simply by listening from the passers-by he had memorised a good deal of the Qur̄an before entering the fold of Islam.²¹⁵

WRITING OF THE QUR̄AN IN THE PROPHETIC ERA

THE FIRST STAGE

Although the preservation of the Qur̄an had rested mainly upon the memory of the Companions, the Holy Prophet ﷺ had made special arrangements to have it written as well. The method used for this purpose has been described by Sayyidina Zayd bin Thābit رضي الله عنه in a tradition as under:

كنت اكتب الوحي لرسول الله صلى الله عليه وسلم وكان اذا

215: Saḥiḥ Bukhārī.

نزل عليه الوحي اخذته برجاء شديدة و عرقا مثل الجمان ثم
سرى عنه ، فكنت ادخل عليه بقطعة الكتف او كسوة فاكتب
وهو يُملى عليّ فما افرغ حتى تكاد رجلى تنكسر من نقل القرآن
حتى اقول لا امشى على رجلى ابداً فاذا فرغت قال اقرأ فأقره فان
كان فيه سقط اقامه ثم اخرج به الى الناس

[رواه الطبراني في الاوسط و رجاله موثقون الدّان فيه وجدت في كتاب خالي فهو رجاله (مجمع الزوائد:
نورالدين الهيثمي، ص ١٥٢، ج ١، باب عرض الكتاب بعد املائه، دارلكتاب العربي، بيروت ١٩٦٧ء)]

I used to write down the revelations (Wahy) for the Prophet ﷺ. When the revelation came to him he felt intense heat and drops of perspiration used to roll down on his body like pearls. When this state was over I used to fetch a shoulder bone or a piece of something else. He used to go on dictating and I used to write it down.

When I finished writing the sheer weight of transcription gave me the feeling that my leg would break and I would not be able to walk any more. Anyhow, when I had finished writing. He would say, "Read", and I would read it back to him. If there was an omission or error he used to correct it and then let it be brought before the people.²¹⁶

The transcription of revelations was not assigned to Zayd bin Thābit alone but other Companions were appointed for this purpose who used to do the task as and when required. The number of these writers has been counted up to forty^{217(a)}, but more wellknown among them are the following;

216: Ṭabarānī: Al-Awsaṭ (Majma'az-zawā'id, Nuruddin Al-Haythmī v1. p152, Darul. Kitāb il 'Arabi, Bairut, 1967.

Sayyidina Abu Bakr, 'Umar, 'Uthmān, Ali, Ubayy bin Ka'ab, Abdullah bin Abi Sarh, Zubayr bin 'Awwām, Khālid bin Sa'īd bin Al-'Aas, Abān bin Sa'īd bin Al-'Aas, Aban ibn Sa'id ibn al-Aas, Hanzalah Ibn ur Rab'ī, Mu'qīb bin Abi Faṭimah, Abdullah bin Arqam Az-Zuhri, Shurahbeel bin Hasnah, Abdullah bin Rawahah,^{217(b)} 'Āmir bin Fuhayrah, 'Amr bin Al 'Aās. Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه has stated that it was the practice of the Prophet ﷺ apart from dictating a Wahy he also instructed the scribe to write it after such and such verses in such and such Surah. Hence it was being written accordingly.²¹⁹

As paper was a scarce commodity in Arabia, the Qurānic revelations were written mostly on tablets of stone, parchments of leather, branches of date-trees, pieces of bamboos, leaves of trees and animal bones. But at times pieces of paper were also used.²²⁰

Thus, in the days of the Prophet ﷺ one copy of the Qurān consisted of that which he had got written under his personal supervision, though it was not in a book form but in the shape of different parchments. Alongwith this, some Companions also used to write down the Qurānic verses for their personal record. This was being practised from the very beginning of Islam, as is evidenced by the fact that Sayyidah Fātimah bint al-Khattāb رضي الله تعالى عنها the sister of Sayyidina 'Umar رضي الله عنه and her husband Sa'īd bin Zayd رضي الله عنه had accepted Islam before Sayyidina 'Umar

ﷺ, and on hearing that when he entered their house in a rage he found a parchment on which the verses of Surah Tāhā were written and Sayyidina Khabbāb Bin Aratt ﷺ was teaching them.²²¹

In addition to this, there are several traditions which indicate that the Companions had with them individually written copies of complete or incomplete Qurān. For example, Bukhārī has quoted Ibn 'Umar as saying:

ان رسول الله صلى الله عليه وسلم نهى ان يسافر بالقران الى
ارض العدو-

The Prophet ﷺ has disallowed the carrying along of the Qurān in enemy land.

(Bukhārī, Book of Jihad v.1. Pp419,420.)

Also, there occurs a tradition in Mu'ajjam Tabrānī that the Prophet ﷺ said:

قراءة الرجل في غير المصحف ألف درجة وقرأته في المصحف
تضاعف على ذلك ألفي درجة

[مجمع الزوائد، ص ١٦٥، ج ١، مطبوعه بيروت (قال الهيثمي رواه الطبراني وفيه ابو سعيد بن عون وثقة ابن معبد في رواية وضعفه في رواية أخرى وبقية رجاله ثقات)]

If anyone recites the Qurān without seeing the transcription the reward is one thousand times, and if he reads it from the transcription the reward is two thousand times.²²²

The above two traditions clearly indicate that the Companions did possess written copies of the Qurān during the lifetime of the Prophet ﷺ. If it were not so, the question of reading from the transcription or carrying it to enemy land does not arise. (Bukhārī, Book of Jihad, v 1)

COLLECTION OF THE QURĀN DURING THE PERIOD OF SAYYIDINA ABU BAKR رضي الله عنه

SECOND STAGE

The copies of Qurān prepared during the time of the Holy Prophet ﷺ were written on different kinds of materials. Some verses were written on leather, some on leaves of trees, some on bones etc. Copies of the whole Qurān were very few. Some Companions had with them only one Surah, some had five or ten and some had only a few verses. Some of them had verses with explanatory notes also written with them.

It was for this reason that Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه thought it necessary during his period of caliphate that all the scattered portions of the Holy Qurān should be collected and preserved. What motivated him to take this step has been described by Zayd bin Thābit, "Immediately after the battle of Yamamah, Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه one day sent for me, and when I went to him, Sayyidina Umar رضي الله عنه was also present there, Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه said to me, Umar has just now told me that a large number of Huffāz (those who had learnt the Qurān by heart) have been martyred in the battle of Yamamah. If we go on losing them in different places like that, I fear that a large portion of the Qurān may become extinct, hence I propose that you undertake the task of collection of the Qurān from different places. I told Umar, How can I do a thing which the Prophet ﷺ himself did not do? Umar said, and he kept on repeating, 'By God! This work is all good and nothing but good, until the light of its truth dawned on me too, and now my opinion is the same as Umar's. After that Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه said to me, you are young and sensible. We have no lack of trust in you. You had also been a regular scribe of the Wahy during the time of the Holy Prophet ﷺ. So, you search for all the verses of the Qurān and collect them together."

Zay'd bin Thābit says "By God! Carrying a mountain on their orders would have been a lighter burden for me than was collecting the Qurān. I asked him, 'How is it that you have undertaken the task that was not done by the Holy Prophet ﷺ himself?' Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه said:

'By God! this is all good', and he kept on repeating these words till Allah gave me insight for adopting the same opinion that was held by Abu Bakr, and Umar رضي الله عنهما. Consequently, I started searching for the verses of the Qurān and it was from the branches of date-palms, slabs of stones and memory of people that I finally collected the Holy Qurān."²²³

At this point, while we are dealing with the process of collection of the Qurān, we should have a clear perception of the method used by Sayyidina Zayd bin Thābit رضي الله عنه. He himself was a Ḥāfiẓ of the Qurān and, therefore, he could have written down the whole Qurān from his memory. In addition to that, there were hundreds of Companions present at that time who had memorised the whole of Qurān who could still have been written down by entrusting this duty to a group of them. Also, the copies of the Qurān that had been written down during the time of the Holy Prophet ﷺ could have been used by Sayyidina Zayd رضي الله عنه to make his copy of the Qurān. But as a precaution he did not limit himself to any of these methods. He used all these methods simultaneously, but even then he did not include any verse in his transcription unless he had received written and oral testimonies proving its uninterrupted succession. In addition, the verses that the Prophet ﷺ had got written under his personal supervision, were still preserved by different Companions. Sayyidina Zayd ؓ collected them together so that the new copy be made from them. Consequently, a public proclamation was made that anyone possessing any written verses of the Holy Qurān should bring them over to Sayyidina Zayd²²⁴ and when anyone brought a written verse to him he used to verify its authenticity by the following four methods.

1. To begin with, he verified it from his own memory.
2. When someone came forward with a verse, he and Sayyidina 'Umar ؓ used to receive it jointly, because, as narratives confirm, the latter was also deputed by Abu Bakr to work with Sayyidina Zayd, and he was also a Ḥāfiẓ.²²⁵ Hence he too, used to verify it from his memory.
3. No written verse was accepted until two reliable witnesses had testified that it was written in the presence of the Holy Prophet ﷺ. 'Allāmah Suyūṭī has stated that apparently the witnesses also testified that those written verses were presented before the Prophet ﷺ in the year of his death and he had affirmed that they were in accordance with the "Seven Letters" on which the Qurān was revealed.²²⁶ This statement of 'Allāmah Suyūṭī has been supported by several traditions.
4. After that, these written verses were collated with the collections that different Companions had prepared for themselves.²²⁷ According to Imām Abu Shāmah the purpose of this method was that utmost care be taken in the transcription of the Qurān, and rather than rely on memory, it should be transcribed exactly from the verses that were written in the presence of the Holy Prophet ﷺ.²²⁸

If this functional methodology behind the collection of the Qurān during the period of Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه is kept in mind, it would become very easy to understand what Sayyidina Zayd bin Thābit meant, "I found the last verses of Surah Al-Barā'ah starting with:

لَقَدْ جَاءَكُمْ رَسُولٌ مِّنْ أَنفُسِكُمْ.....الخ

certainly, there has come to you a Messenger from among yourselves... (9:128.129)

—with Sayyidina Abu Khuzaymah only. They were not found with anyone else except him." This never means that no person other than Abu Khuzaymah remembered these verses, or nobody else had them in writing, or anyone other than him did not know of their being part of the Qurān. But it means that with the exception of Abu Khuzaymah these verses were not found with anyone of those who were coming with different written verses as they were dictated by the Holy Prophet ﷺ. Otherwise, as far as the fact of these verses being part of the Qurān is concerned, it was known to every one through uninterrupted succession. There were hundreds of Companions who knew the whole Qurān by heart and, hence, they also knew these verses. Further, these were also present in written form on the complete collections of the Qurānic verses preserved by various Companions. Because he had taken the foregoing precautions he waited for confirmation through the third

method. As for the other verses they were verified in all the methods set by Sayyidina Zayd عليه السلام and were found written with many Companions, many of whom brought each verse. But, among those written separately under the supervision of the Prophet ﷺ these verses were found only with Sayyidina Abu Khuzaymah عليه السلام and not with anyone else.²²⁹

So, in every way possible, it was with utmost care that Zayd bin Thābit عليه السلام collected the Qurānic verses and transcribed them in the proper order on sheets of paper.²³⁰ However, every Surah was written separately. Hence, this consisted of a number of transcripts and in the terminology of the Qurān it was called "Umm", and it had the following features:

- (1) In this copy, the Qurānic verses were arranged in accordance with the order fixed by the Holy Prophet ﷺ but the Surahs were not arranged, and every Surah was written and kept separately.²³¹
- (2) All the "Seven Letters" were incorporated in this copy.²³²
- (3) This copy was written in Hīrī script.²³³
- (4) Only those verses were included whose recital was not abrogated.
- (5) The purpose of this transcription was to prepare an organised document with the collective endorsement of the entire Ummah, so that reference can be made to it when required.

If the above details regarding the compilation of the Qurān are kept in mind, it will be easy to comprehend the meaning of the tradition which states that Sayyidina 'Ali عليه السلام had compiled the Qurān immediately after the death of the Holy Prophet ﷺ.

In fact it was not only Sayyidina 'Ali عليه السلام but many other Companions had also compiled their individual copies. But a standard copy compiled with the collective endorsement of the entire Ummah, was first prepared by Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه.

The transcripts written on the orders of Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه remained with him during his lifetime. Then they remained with Sayyidina 'Umar رضي الله عنه and on his martyrdom they were transferred to the custody of Sayyidah Hafṣah²³⁴ in accordance with his instructions. Then Marwān bin Hākam asked for them from Sayyidah Hafṣah رضي الله عنها but she refused to give them to him. After her death Marwān sent for them and had them burnt because a consensus had been reached by then that with regard to the script and arrangement of Surahs it was obligatory to follow the transcripts of Surahs prepared by Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه only, and no such copy should exist that was at variance with them.²³⁵

COLLECTION OF THE QURĀN IN THE PERIOD OF SAYYIDINA 'UTHMĀN' ﷺ

THRID STAGE

When Sayyidina 'Uthmān ﷺ became the Caliph, Islam had already spread to the far-flung areas of Byzantine and Iran. People embracing Islam in the new areas used to learn the Qurān from the Muslim soldiers or from the traders from whom they got the blessing of Islam. Also, as has already been described, the Qurān was revealed on "Seven Letters" and different Companions had learnt it from the Holy Prophet ﷺ according to different recitals. Hence, every Companion taught the Qurān to his disciples in accordance with the particular reading he had learnt from the Prophet ﷺ. In this manner variations in recital reached distant countries. As long as the people were aware that the Qurān was revealed on "Seven Letters", these variations caused no harm. But when these variations reached far-out countries and the fact that the Qurān was revealed on "Seven Letters" could not gain due publicity, disputes among people started growing up. Some people insisted that their own reading was correct and that of others incorrect. These disputes gave rise to the danger on the one hand, that the people might fall into the grave error of declaring as incorrect the recitals of the Qurān that had been transmitted through uninterrupted succession. On the other hand, there was no standard copy of the Qurān anywhere in the world, except the one in Madina that was transcribed by Zayd bin Thābit ﷺ, that could be the rallying authority for the entire Ummah. Since other copies were written individually, and in them, there was no provision to incorporate all the seven versions of recital, the only reliable method to resolve these disputes was that transcripts incorporating all the valid recitals be disseminated throughout the Islamic world, and through them it could be decided as to which recital is correct? Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه accomplished this remarkable feat during the period of his Caliphate.

We learn the details of this achievement through an account that Ḥuzayfah bin Yamān رضي الله عنه who was engaged in Jihad on the Armenian-Azerbaijan front noticed that differences were arising among people about the correct recital of the Qurān. So, on his return to Madinah he went straight to Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه and said, "O Amir-al-Mu'minīn (Leader of the Believers)! Before this nation falls a prey to dissensions about the Book of Allah like the Jews and Christians you must do something about it." Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه asked, "What is the matter"? He said, "I was on the Jihad mission at the Armenian front where I saw that the recital by the people of Syria following that of Ubayy bin Ka'ab was never heard by the people of Iraq, while the people of Iraq, who follow the recital of 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd, have never heard the recital made by the people of Syria. As a result they call each other unbelievers."

Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه had himself sensed this danger much earlier. He was informed that even in Madinah such incidents had occurred wherein someone taught the Qurān according to one recital while another teacher taught it according to a second recital; and when the students of different teachers met together there arose differences among them and sometimes it embroiled the teachers as well, and they too declared each other's reading to be incorrect. When Ḥuzayfah bin Yamān رضي الله عنه drew his attention to this danger, Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه convened a meeting of some esteemed Companions and consulted them. He said, "I have been informed that there are people who say to each other. 'My recital is better than yours', and this may be carried to the limits of blasphemy (unbelief). So, what is your opinion in this matter?" The Companions asked Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه himself as to what were his own thoughts about it. He said,

"My opinion is that we should unite every one on one transcription so that no difference or division may occur."

The Companions approved and supported his view.

Consequently, Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه gathered people together and addressed them, "You are living so close to me in Madinah yet you falsify each other and differ with each other in respect of the recitals of the Qurān. It is obvious that those who are far away from me must be falsifying and disapproving each other more vehemently. Therefore, let everyone join together to prepare a copy of the Qurān to follow which should be obligatory for all."

For this purpose, Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه sent a message to Sayyidah Hafṣah رضي الله تعالى عنها requesting her to let him have the holy transcripts of the Qurānic text (prepared during the time of Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه and which she had in her custody). He promised that these would be returned to her after they had been copied down. She sent them to him. He then formed a group of four Companions comprising Sayyidina Zayd bin Thabit, 'Abdullah ibn Zubayr, Sa'eed ibn al-'Aas and Abdur Raḥmān bin Hārith bin Hishām. This group was entrusted with the task of making several transcripts from the original copy compiled by Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه, with the Surahs also arranged in sequence. One of these four Sayyidina Zayd, was an Ansar while the three were Quraysh. Therefore, Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه said to them,

"If you and Zayd differ anywhere in the Qurān (that is, differ as to how a certain letter should be written) you would write it in the language of the Quraysh because the Holy Qurān has been revealed in their language."

Basically, this task was entrusted to the above named four distinguished persons, but subsequently other Companions also were called upon to assist them so that, according to Ibn Abi Dāwood رحمہ اللہ their number had risen to twelve. These included Ubayy bin Ka'ab, Sayyidina Kathīr bin Aflah, Sayyidina Mālīk bin Abi 'Āmir, Sayyidina Anas bin Mālīk and Sayyidina 'Abdullah bin Abbās رحمہ اللہ. This group of Companions performed the following functions in connection with the transcription of Holy Qurān:²³⁶

1. In the transcript prepared during the period of Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضی اللہ عنہ Surahs were not arranged in a sequence, but each of them was written separately. They arranged them in their proper sequence as part of a single transcript.²³⁷
2. The verses of the Qurān were written to accommodate all the successive un-interrupted recitals in the script. Therefore, no dots or diacritical marks were placed on them so that they could be read in accordance with all the valid recitals. For instance, they wrote ننشرها in order that it could be read both as ننشرها (Nanshuruhā) and ننشرها, (Nunshizuhā) because both these recitals were correct.²³⁸
3. Upto that time there existed only one single copy of the Holy Qurān that was complete, authentic, standard and collectively attested by the entire Ummah. They prepared several transcripts of this freshly written copy of the Qurān. It is generally believed that Sayyidina

236: Fataḥ al Bārī v9, p13-15.

237: Mustadrak Ḥākim, v2, p229.

238: Manāhil-ul-'Irfān. v1, p253, 254.

'Uthmān رضي الله عنه got five transcripts prepared, but Abu Hātim Sajistāni has stated that a total of seven transcripts were prepared. Of those, one was sent to Makkah and one each to Syria, Yaman, Baḥrain, Baṣra and Kufah, and one was preserved in Madinah.²³⁹

4. In order to accomplish the task cited above these eminent Companions basically kept before them the transcripts that were written during the time of Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه. But as an added precaution they adopted the same method that was employed during the time of Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه. Consequently, individual transcripts preserved by different Companions were once again brought together and it was, yet another collation with these, that the new transcripts were prepared. This time a verse of Surah Al-Aḥzab,

مِنَ الْمُؤْمِنِينَ رِجَالٌ صَدَقُوا مَا عَاهَدُوا اللَّهَ عَلَيْهِ

Among the Believers are men..... (33:23)

separately written was found only with Sayyidina Khuzaymah bin Thābit Ansari. As we have explained earlier, it does not mean that nobody else had remembered this verse, because Sayyidina Zayd bin Thābit has said..

فقدت آية من الأحزاب حين نسخنا المصحف قد كنت اسمع
رسول الله صلى الله عليه وسلم يقرأ بها فالتمسناها فوجدناها مع
خزيمة بن ثابت الأنصاري-

"While writing the transcription I did not find the verse of Surah Al-Aḥzāb which I used to hear from the Prophet ﷺ when we searched for it we found it with 239: Ṣaḥīḥ Bukhārī, Fath-ul-Bārī v9, p17.

Khuzaymah bin Thābit Ansari.²⁴⁰

It is quite apparent from the above narration that this verse was the one which Zayd and other Companions remembered very well. Similarly, it also does not mean that this verse was not written anywhere else, because it was present in the transcripts written during the time of Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه, and was also included in the individual manuscripts preserved by various Companions. But as was done in the days of Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه, this time also, all those scattered documents, written by the Companions individually, were collected together. Therefore, Zayd رضي الله عنه and his associates did not transcribe any verse in those copies until they found it in those manuscripts as well. As such, other verses were found written separately with several Companions, but this verse from Surah Al-Aḥzab could not be obtained as a separate manuscript from anyone except Khuzaymah bin Thābit.

5. After having several of these standard transcripts of the Holy Qurān prepared, Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه got all the other manuscripts individually prepared by Companions burnt, so that all transcripts of the Qurān become uniform in terms of script, incorporation of accepted recitals and the sequence of Surah, leaving no room for any differences.

The entire Ummah acknowledged this achievement of Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه with admiration, and all the Companions extended their full support in this venture. Only Sayyidina 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd was somewhat unhappy about it, the reasons of which have been mentioned in the discussion on "Seven Letters". Sayyidina 'Ali bin Abu Tālib رضي الله عنه remarked:

240: Bukhārī, Fath-ul-Bārī v9, p17

لا تقولوا في عثمان ^{رضي الله عنه} إلا خيراً فوالله ما فعل الذي فعل في
المصاحف إلا عن مَلَأَ مِنَّا (فتح الباری، ص ۱۵، ج ۹، بحواله ابن ابی داؤد بسند صحيح)

"Say nothing about 'Uthmān ^{رضي الله عنه} except what is good for him. By God! whatever he did in connection with the transcription of the Qurān was done in the presence of all of us and with our advice and counsel."²⁴¹

STEPS TAKEN TO FACILITATE RECITATION OF THE QURĀN

FOURTH STAGE

After the afore-mentioned achievement of Sayyidina 'Uthmān  the Ummah has reached a consensus that it is not permissible to write the text of the Holy Qurān in any manner other than the one adopted by him. Consequently, thence on, all the transcripts of the Qurān were written in accordance with this script and the Companions and their successors prepared and circulated more and more copies of the Qurān on this script.

But the script of these Qurānic transcriptions was still without dots and diacritical marks that made it difficult for the non-Arabs to recite them freely. As Islam spread far and wide in non-Arab countries, it was felt that dots and diacritical marks must be put so that the people may recite it easily. Several steps were taken to achieve this purpose, a short history of which is given below.

DOTS

It was not customary with the early Arabs to put dots on letters, and scribes used to write blank letters. The readers were so used to this style that they had practically no difficulty in reading the dot-less writings and they could easily distinguish between doubtful letters by reference to the context. Rather, it was very often considered to be an insult to put dots. Historian Maḏā'inī has quoted an author as under:

كثرة النقط في الكتاب سوء ظن بالمكتوب اليه -

(صبح الاعشى للقلقشندی، ص ۱۵۴، ج ۳، مطبعة اميريه، ۱۶۵۴/۱۶۵۸ قاهره ۱۳۳۲هـ)

To put too many dots in a letter amounts to suspicion about (the comprehension of) the addressee.²⁴²

Hence transcripts of Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه were devoid of any dots, and apart from the prevalent custom its major purpose was that all the successive uninterrupted recitals may be incorporated in that script. But later on, dots were placed on letters for the convenience of non-Arabs and less educated Muslims.

Reports differ as to who was the first to place dots on the Qurānic transcript. Some reports say that this feat was first of all accomplished by Abul Aswad Du'īlī.²⁴³ Some say that he did it on the instructions of Sayyidina Ali رضي الله عنه.²³⁷ Still others say that the Governor of Kufah, Ziyad bin Abi Sufyān asked him to do this task²⁴⁴. There are reports too that Abdul Mālīk bin Marwān asked him to do it.²⁴⁶ There is yet another report that Ḥajjāj bin Yusuf²⁴⁵ got it done with the help of Ḥasan Al-Baṣrī, Yaḥyā bin Ya'mūr and Naṣr bin 'Āsim Laythi²⁴⁷. Some scholars think that the inventor of these dots had himself placed them in the Qurānic script, and no conception of dots existed before this. But 'Allāmah Qalqashandī (who was the most renowned researcher in the art of script and writings) has refuted it and proved that dots had been invented long before that. According to one report, the inventors of Arabic writing script were Murāmar bin Murrah, Aslam bin Sidrah and 'Āmir bin Jadarah of the tribe of Bolān. Murāmar invented the shapes of the letters, Aslam laid down the methods for breaking and combining the words and letters and 'Āmir founded the dots²⁴⁸. Yet another report says that the credit for the first use of dots goes to Abu Sufyān bin Umaiyyah, the grandfather of Abu Sufyan bin Ḥarb, who had learnt them from the people of Ambar²⁴⁹. Thus, the dots were invented much earlier but the Qurānic transcripts were kept free of them for various reasons. Whoever placed dots on the Qurānic letters was not the inventor of dots, but he was the first person to use them in the Qurānic script.²⁵⁰

DIACRITICAL MARKS

In the beginning, like dots, the Qurān was devoid of diacritical marks (the fatha, kasrah and damma) and likewise. There are varying reports as to who put these marks first? Some say this was first done by Abul Aswad Du'ili. Some say that Hajjāj bin Yūsuf got this done by Yahya bin Ya'mur and Nasr bin 'Āsim al-Laythi²⁵¹. Keeping in view all the reports in this connection, it appears that diacritical marks were first invented by Abul Aswad Du'ili but they were different from what they are today. Instead, for short vowel 'a' (fat-ḥa) he placed a dot over the letter (.), for short vowel 'i' (Kasrah) a dot under the letter (.) for short vowel 'u' (dhammah) a dot in front of the letter (.) and for nunation (Tanwīn) two dots (.; .. —) ²⁵². Later on, Khalīl bin Aḥmad founded the signs of (glottal stop, Ḥamzah) and doubling (Tashdīd)²⁵³. After that Hajjāj bin Yūsuf requested Yahya bin Ya'mur, Naṣr bin Āṣim Al-Laythī and Hasan Al-Basri to put both the dots and diacritical marks on the Qurānic letters. On this occasion the present forms of diacritical marks were chosen rather than the use of dots so that they may not be confused with the intrinsic dots of the letters. Allah knows best.

STAGES (AHZĀB & MANĀZIL)

It was customary with the Companions and their successors that they would complete the recital of the entire Qurān in one week. For this purpose, they had fixed portions for their daily recitation. Each such portion is known as 'Hizb' or 'Manzil'. In this way the Qurān has been divided into seven stages of recitation. Sayyidina Aws bin Ḥuzayfah states that he asked the Companions as to how many stages of recital they had divided the Qurān into. They replied the first Hizb consists of three surahs the second of five, the third of seven, the fourth of nine, the fifth of eleven, the sixth of thirteen and the final Hizb from Surah Qāf to the end of the Qurān.²⁵⁴

PARTS (AJZĀ)

Today, the Qurān is divided into thirty parts (AJZĀ-plural of JUZ). This division in parts has nothing to do with the meaning of the Qurān, but has been done as a teaching aid for children, in thirty equal parts. Thus, we see that there are places where a part ends with an unfinished statement. It is difficult to say with certainty as to who made this division in thirty parts? Some people think that during the transcription of the Qurān Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه had got it written in thirty parts and hence this division dates back to his time²⁵⁵. But I could not find any 254: Al-burhān fi 'Ulūmil Qurān. v1, p250.

255: Tarīkh-ul-Qurān by Abduṣ Ṣamad Ṣārim.

proof of this theory in the works of earlier scholars. However, 'Allāmah Badruddin Zarkashi has written that the thirty parts of the Qurān have been in popular use and they customarily appear in the Qurānic transcripts used in schools. It appears that this division was made after the period of the Companions to facilitate teaching of the Qurān. Allah knows best.

FIVES & TENS (AKHMĀS AND A'SHĀR)

Another sign used in the Qurānic transcriptions in early centuries was the placing of the sign خ or خمس after every five verses, and ع or عشر after every ten verses, in the margin. The former kind of signs were called 'Akhmās' five and the latter *A'shār*²⁵⁶. Holding divergent views, some of the early scholars, considered these signs permissible while others held them to be reprehensible²⁵⁷. It is difficult to say with any degree of certainty as to who put these signs first? One report says that the 'Abbāsi Caliph Ma'mūn first ordered that they be marked²⁵⁸. But both these reports do not appear to be correct since the idea of A'shār appears to be present in the days of the Companions as well. Ibn Abi Shaybah, narrates in his book (Musannaf) that:

عن مسروق عن عبد الله رض انه كره التعشير في المصحف

(مصنف ابن أبي شيبة، ص ٤٩٧، ج ٢، كتاب الصلوة، مطبعة العلوم الشرقية، دكن ١٣٨٧هـ)

Masrūq says that 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd considered the putting of sign of A'shar in Qurānic script as detestable²⁵⁹.

From this it appears that the concept of "A'shar" was present during the days of the Companions.

SECTION (RUKŪ')

Another sign that came into use later on and is still prevalent is the sign of RUKŪ', and its placement depends on the meanings whereby a sign ع is placed on the conclusion of a statement in the margin. Despite all efforts I could not locate anything authentic to tell us who originated this sign and in what period it was done. Some people think that "Rukū'at" were also determined during the time of Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه²⁶⁰ but no authentic proof to this claim is traceable in the traditions. However, one thing is certain that the purpose of this sign is to determine an average portion of the verses which could be recited in one unit (Raka'ah) of Salah. It is called Ruku' (bending) so as to indicate bowing (going into semi prostration) during Salah at this point. It is stated in Faṭawā 'Ālamgīriyah:

ان المشائخ رحمهم الله جعلوا القرآن على خمس مائة واربعين
ركوعاً واعلموا ذلك في المصاحف حتى يحصل الختم في ليلة

السابع والعشرين (فتاوى عالمگیری، فصل التراویح، ص ۹۴، ج ۱، مطبوعه نولکشور)

The Shaykhs have divided the Qurān into 540 'Rukū'at' (sections) and placed its signs on the transcriptions so that the Qurān may be completed on the 27th night (of Ramadan in Salāt-tut-Tarāvih.)²⁶¹

SIGNS TO STOP (RUMŪZ-E-AWQĀF)

Rumūz ul-awqāf (signs to pause). Another useful step taken to facilitate recitation of the Qurān was to provide the verse with signs to indicate pauses. They are called Rumuz ul-Awqāf. Their purpose is to help a person who does not know Arabic to stop at the appropriate place during his recitation, and thus avoid any change in the meaning by stopping at the wrong place. Most of these signs were first introduced by 'Allāmah Abu 'Abdullah Muḥammad bin Tyfūr Sajāwandī.²⁶²

260: Tarīkh-ul-Qurān by Abduṣ Ṣamad Ṣarīm. p81.

261: Fatawa 'Ālamgīriyah v1, p 94.

These signs are explained below:

- ط (ṭa). It is an abbreviation for al-waqful mutlaq, it indicates that the statement stands completed at this point. Therefore it is better to stop here.
- ج (jīm) It is an abbreviation for al-waqful-jāiz. It means that it is permissible to stop here.
- ز . Stopping here is correct but it is better not to stop. It is the short form for al-waqf al-mujawwaz.
- (Ṣād) ص It stands for al-waqf al-murakhkhas. It means that the statement continues further but, because the sentence became too long, the reader may take a stop to breathe at this point rather than elsewhere in the sentences.²⁶³
- (mīm) م It stands for al-Waqf al-lāzim. This sign denotes that there is a chance of grave error in the meaning if a stop is not made here, hence it is better to stop here. Some people call it "Obligatory stop" but not in the juristic sense that non-compliance would be sinful. In fact the purpose is to stress that making a stop here is the most preferable of all stops.²⁶⁴
- (lām) لا It is an abbreviation for la taqif (do not stop here) but this does not mean that a stop here is unlawful. Rather, it is used at places where there is no harm in stopping, and starting with the next word is also permissible. So, it actually means that if a stop is made here, it is better to go back and read over again²⁶⁵ —rather than continuing on the next words.

As far as the origin of the above signs is concerned, it is conclusively proved that they were invented by 'Allāmah Sajāwandī. However, some other signs are also found in the transcriptions of the Qurān, for example:

مع This is an abbreviation of معانقه. This sign is inserted where two explanations of a single verse are possible. According to one explanation, the stop will be made at one given place, while according to another explanation this will be made at another place. Thus, a stop can be made at either of the two places but not at both places. For example:

ذَلِكَ مَثَلُهُمْ فِي التَّوْرَةِ ۖ وَمَثَلُهُمْ فِي الْإِنْجِيلِ ۖ كَزَرْعٍ أَخْرَجَ شَطْأَهُ.....الخـ

If a pause is made at التَّوْرَةِ then it is not proper to pause again at الْإِنْجِيلِ and if a pause will be made at الْإِنْجِيلِ then it is not correct to pause at التَّوْرَةِ. However, if a stop is not made at both places, that will be correct. It is also called al-muqābilah. It was first of all pointed out by Imām Abul Faḍl Rāzi.

سكتة This indicates Saktah. It means reader should stop here but without breaking the breath. It is generally inserted at a place where non-stop reading may convey an erroneous meaning.

وقفة At this sign, the reader should stop a little longer than saktah (سكتة) still not breaking the breath.

ق: It is the abbreviation of qīla 'alai hil waqf قيل عليه الوقف meaning thereby that some phonetists plead to stop here while other's do not.

قف: This is qif. It means 'stop here' and it is inserted where the reader may think that a stop here was not correct.

صلی: It is the abbreviation of الوصل اولی (al wasl ūla) It means that a non-stop reading is desirable here.

صل: It is the abbreviation of qad yuṣal.

Some recitors stop here while others prefer not to. These indications are quite well-known but I could not ascertain who invented them.

PRINTING OF THE HOLY QURĀN

FIFTH STAGE

Before the invention of the printing press, all copies of the Qurān were hand written by pen, and for this purpose, there always has been a large group of calligraphers who kept themselves busy in nothing but the calligraphy of the Qurān. The amount of labour put in by Muslims in writing the words of the Qurān in better and better styles, and the way they demonstrated their deep love for this exalted Book has a long and interesting history of its own which would need an independent publication. This is not the appropriate place to go into such details.

With the inventions of the printing press, the Holy Qurān was first printed at Hamburg in 1113 Hijrah, a copy of which is still preserved in Dar-ul-Kutub al Mişriyyah in Egypt. After that several orientalist got many editions of the Qurān published but they could not gain popularity in the Islamic world. After that Maula'y 'Uthmān was the first Muslim who had one transcription of the Qurān printed at St. Petersburg, a Russian city, in 1787 C.E. Similarly, another transcription was printed in Qāzān, and in 1828 C.E. the Qurān was printed by lithography on stone slabs in the Iranian city of Tehran. Thereafter, printed copies of the Qurān became common throughout the world.²⁶⁶

266. For a detailed history of printing of the Qurān see "Tarīkh-ul-Qurān" al Kurdī, p186 and 'ulūm ul Qurān by Dr. Şubhī Şaleh, Urdu translation by Ghulam Ahmad Hariri p142.

RECITATIONS AND THEIR COMPILATION

It has been mentioned in the discussion of "Seven Letters" that, in order to facilitate recitation, Allah, the Exalted, revealed the Qurān in several versions of recitation. With this difference in recitation no change occurs in the overall meanings of the verses, but modes of reading and pronunciation differ and this has resulted in facility for a large number of people.

The Muslim Ummah throughout guarded these recitations also and valuable services have been rendered by Muslims in this connection. Even a short description of these admirable efforts is not possible here. However, a few hints are necessary.

We have already stated that the Qurān depended for its dissemination primarily on memory and narration rather than on transcription. Further, it has been stated that the 'Uthmānī transcriptions were kept free of dots and diacritical marks so that all the established recitals could be incorporated in them. So, when Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه sent these transcriptions to different parts of the Islamic world, he also sent with them such recitors who could teach correct recitation to people. When these Qāris (recitors) reached their different destinations they taught the Qurān according to their own version, and different recitals spread among the people. Many devoted Muslims made it a mission of their lives to learn the different recitals and teach them to others. And in this way was founded the "Science of Recitals" and people seeking perfection in this branch of knowledge flocked from every region to the "Imāms of Qira'at" (Leading men in Recitals). Some of them learnt just one recital, some two, some three, some seven and even more. In this connection there was one fundamental rule which was universally recognised by the Ummah and acted upon everywhere. This stipulated that only such "Recital" will be accepted as Qurānic as fulfilled three conditions:

1. There should be room for it in the 'Uthmānī transcriptions.
2. It conformed to the rules of Arabic grammar.
3. It should be authentically proved to be from the Holy Prophet ﷺ, and commonly known to the "Imāms of Recitals".

Any recital falling short of even one condition was not accepted as "Qurān". In this way a large number of uninterrupted recitals kept on being transmitted from generation to generation. It also happened, that for the sake of convenience, one Imām adopted one or a few recitals and started teaching them exclusively and that particular recital was named after that particular Imām. Thereafter, scholars started writing books bringing these recitals together, Thus, Imām Abu 'Ubayd Qāsim bin Sallām, Imām Abu Hatim Sijistāni, Qadi Isma'īl and Imām Abu Ja'far Tabarī compiled books on this art in which more than twenty Recitals were collected. Then 'Allāmah Abu Bakr Aḥmad bin Mūsā bin 'Abbās bin Mujāhid (Died 324 AH) published a book in which recitals from only seven recitors were collected. This publication became so immensely popular that, compared to other recitals, these seven recitals acquired much greater popularity, so much so that some people came to believe that only these recitals are correct and uninterrupted, and the other ones are either incorrect or they are interrupted in their transmission. The fact is that Ibn Mujāhid's collection of these seven recitals was only accidental and he never intended to say that recitals other than these were incorrect and unacceptable. Another misunderstanding that was created by this work of Ibn Mujāhid was that some people began to think that it were these seven recitals that were actually meant by the "Seven Letters" whereas proper explanation of the "Seven Letters" is that which has been discussed in detail in the preceding pages.

However, the seven recitors (Qārīs) who became most famous as a result of Ibn Mujāhid's work are the following:

1. 'Abdullah bin Kathīr al-Dāri (died 120 AH). He had the opportunity to have seen the Companions Sayyidina Anas bin Mālik, 'Abdullah bin Zubayr and Abu Ayyūb Anṣārī, and his recital gained greater popularity in Makkah. Among the reporters of his recital Bazzi and Qunbul were more well-known.
2. Nāf'i bin 'Abdur Raḥmān bin Abi Nu'aim (died 169 AH). He had his lessons from seventy such followers of the Companions who were directly the pupils of Sayyidina Ubayy bin Ka'ab, 'Abdullah bin Abbās and Abu Hurayrah رضي الله تعالى عنه. His recital was more popular in Madinah and Abu Mūsā Qalūn (died 220 AH) and Abu Sa'īd Warsh (died-197 AH), were more popular among his promoters.
3. 'Abdullah Yaḥṣubi popularly known as Ibn 'Āmir (died 118 AH). He had seen the Companions Sayyidina Nu'man bin Bashir and Sayyidina Wāthilah Bin Asq'a رضي الله تعالى عنهما and learnt the art of Qir'at (Recital) from Sayyidina Mughīrah bin Shahāb Makhzūmi who was a pupil of Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله تعالى عنه. His recital was mostly prevalent in Syria, and Hishām and Dhakwān were more popular among the reporters of his recital.
4. Abu 'Amr Zabbān ibn ul-'Ala bin 'Āmmār (Died 154 AH). He has quoted Mujāhid and Sa'īd bin Jubayr to have narrated from Ibn 'Abbās and Ubayy bin Ka'ab, and his recital became very popular in Basrah. Famous among the reporters of his recital are Abu 'Umar al-Dawri (Died 246 AH) and Abu Shu'ayb Susi (Died 261 AH).
5. Ḥamzah bin Ḥabīb Al-Zayyat Mawla 'Akramah bin

Rabi Al-Ta'imī (Died 188 AH). He was a student of Sulayman A'amash who was a pupil of Yahya bin Wathāb who was the student of Zirr bin Hubaysh who had been benefited by Sayyidina 'Uthmān, 'Ali and Sayyidina Ibn Mas'ūd رضي الله عنه. Of his reporters Khalaf bin Hishām (Died 188 AH) and Khallād bin Khālīd (Died 220 AH) were more popular.

6. 'Āsim bin Abi-an-Najūd al-Asadī (Died 127 AH). He was a pupil of Sayyidina 'Abdullah bin Mas'ud through Zirr ibn Hubaysh and of Sayyidina 'Ali through Abu 'Abdur Raḥmān Salmī. Of the reporters of his recital Shu'bah bin 'Ayyāsh (Died 193 AH) and Ḥafṣ bin Sulaymān (Died 180 AH) were more popular. Nowadays the recital is made according to the report of the latter.
7. Abul Ḥasan Ali bin Ḥamzah Al-Kisāī Al-Naḥvī (Died 189 AH). Famous among his reporters are Abul Ḥārith Marūzi (Died 240 AH) and Abu 'Umar ul-Dādri (who has also reported the recital of Abu 'Amr.)

The recitals of the last three became prevalent mostly in Kūfah.

As has already been stated there are several other recitals, apart from the above Seven, which are correct and uninterrupted. So when the misconception grew that the correct recitals are limited to these seven, several scholars (namely 'Allamah Shedhāi and Abu Bakr bin Mehrān) collected ten instead of seven recitals in a book and the phrase 'Ten Recitals' became popular.²⁶⁷

The ten recitals comprised three recitals in addition to the above seven. The additional three are as under:

- 1) Ya'qūb bin Is'hāq Al-Khidramī (Died 225). He learnt from Salām bin Sulaymān Al-Tawīl who learnt from 'Āsim and Abu 'Amr His recitals gained popularity in Baṣrah.

267. An-Nashr fil-Qirāt -al-'Ashr. v1, p34.

- 2) Khalaf bin Hishām (died 205 AH). He had learnt from Salīm bin 'Isa bin Ḥamzah bin Ḥabīb Zayyāt. Hence, he also reported the recitation of Hamzah. His recitation was prevalent in Kūfah.
- 3) Abu Ja'far Yazīd ibn al-Qa'qā' (died 130 AH). He had learnt from Sayyidina 'Abdullah ibn 'Abbās, Sayyidina Abu Hurayrah and Ubayy bin K'ab رضي الله عنه and his recital was mostly recognised in Madinah.

Some people however, added another four recitors to the above ten, to make the total to fourteen. These four were

- 1) Ḥasan Baṣri (Died 110 AH). He was a renowned Tābi'ee and his recital was centered at Baṣrah.
- 2) Muḥammad bin Abdur Raḥmān Ibn Muḥaysan (D.123 AH). He was a student of Mujāhid and teacher of Abu 'Amr'. His centre was in Makkah.
- 3) Yahya bin Mubārak Yazīdi (died 202 AH). He lived in Baṣrah and learnt from Abu 'Amr and Ḥamzah.
- 4) Abul Farj Muḥammad bin Aḥmad Shambūzi (Died 388 AH). He lived in Baghdād and his teacher was Ibn Shambūz. He was thus called Shambūzi.

Some authors have mentioned the name of Sulayman A'mash in place of Shamūzi. Of the fourteen, the first ten are regarded as un-interrupted while the others are uncommon.²⁶⁸

It seems appropriate to point to the wrong interpretation given to the action of 'Allāmah Ibn Mujāhid by the well-known orientalist of our time Montgomery Watt in pursuance of his teacher, Bell. He has written that by collecting seven recitals Ibn Mujāhid has on the one hand indicated that these "Seven Recitals" correspond to the "Seven Letters", and on the other he claimed that no other recital was reliable. Hence, other scholars also adopted this view and it was on this basis that they compelled Ibn 268. Manāhil ul-'Irfān v.1, p.460. Ref: Munjidul-Muqr'īn, Ibn Jazarī v1, p46.

Miqsam and Ibn Shambūdh to retract from their views because they considered other recitals equally reliable.²⁶⁹

As it is, none of the facts in the above mentioned statement of Watt is correct. We have just explained that several scholars and recitors of that time had written down several variations of recitals in a single book. None of them had meant that other recitals were not reliable. Ibn Mujāhid himself has not hinted that his collection of seven recitals meant "Seven Letters" nor has he claimed that correct recitals are confined to these seven. Other scholars also never inferred from his work that he intended to label the other recitals as unreliable. On the contrary, all the other research scholars in this subject have constatnly refuted this idea. The most authentic scholar of the Science of Qira'at (Recitals), 'Allāma Ibn-ul-Jazari (known with the title of Muḥaqqiq and Research Scholar), strongly refuted this idea. At one place he writes.

"We have made this discussion lengthy because we have been informed that some ignorant people consider only these seven recitals as correct, and say that by the phrase Seven Letters in the Ḥadith is meant these seven recitals.... That is why many of the earlier scholars have criticised Ibn Mujāhid that instead of collecting seven recitals, he should have mentioned more or less than seven recitals or he ought to have made his purport clear so that ignorant people had not suffered from this misunderstanding."²⁷⁰

Ḥāfiẓ Ibn Ḥajar and 'Allamah Suyūṭi have quoted several Imāms of Recitals wherein it has been clarified that Ibn Mujāhid had collected "Seven Letters" only in reliance to "Seven Transcriptions", otherwise he never meant to class the other recitals as incorrect or unreliable.²⁷¹

As for the story of Ibn Miqsam and Ibn Shambūz, the scholars had not criticised them why they considered recitals other than these seven as correct. But the reason was, that three conditions must be fulfilled before calling a recital as correct (a) that it must be compatible with the 'Uthmān Transcription, (b) that it must correspond to the rules of Arabic grammar (c), that its uninterrupted transmission from the Holy Prophet ﷺ must be authentically proved, and that it be popularly known to the Imāms of Qir'at. Any recital that fulfills these conditions shall be acceptable whether it is included in the Seven recitals or not, and if even a single condition is not met, it will be not reliable even though it may be included in these seven recitals. But Ibn Miqsam and Ibn Shambūz²⁷² had violated this established rule. Ibn Miqsam held that only the first two conditions were sufficient for the "Recital" to be correct. A recital would therefore be acceptable if it is in accordance with the 'Uthmāni Transcription and happens to correspond to Arabic grammar, even if it is lacking in a proper line of transmission. As against this, Ibn Shambūz stated that a "Recital" reported through uninterrupted authentic narrations shall be acceptable even if it does not conform to the "Uthmāni script". On this basis all the scholars refuted them collectively and ultimately both of them came round to the opinion of the majority.²⁷³

CHAPTER-6

DOUBTS ABOUT PRESERVATION OF THE QURĀN AND THEIR ANSWERS

The Holy Qurān has stated:

إِنَّا نَحْنُ نَزَّلْنَا الذِّكْرَ وَإِنَّا لَهُ لَحَافِظُونَ ○

Surely We have revealed the Admonition (the Qurān), and surely We are its Guardian. (Al-Hijr, 15:9)

Through this revelation it has been prophesised that the Qurān will exist in its original form till the Last Day, and no power on earth will succeed in destroying it or causing any alteration and adulteration in it. It has been made apparent in the preceding pages how Almighty Allah has made this prophesy practically true and how the Qurān has been safeguarded in every age. Hence, today it can be said with full confidence and without any fear of contradiction that we have the Qurān in exactly the same form as it was taught by the Holy Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ and even a single dot or stroke could not be changed.

This is not only the faith of Muslims but unbiased non-Muslims have also accepted this fact and could not dare to deny it. But when one's vision is blurred by malice and prejudice even a crystal glass would appear murky to him. And this is the reason that some non-Muslim writers have raised suspicions and objections about the preservation of the Holy Qurān. We would like here to briefly discuss the truth about these suspicions.

FIRST OBJECTION:

SOME VERSES OF EARLY DAYS COULD NOT BE PRESERVED

The well-known Orientalist F. Buhl has claimed that Qurānic verses were not being written in the early days of their revelation, and their preservation depended entirely on the memory of the Prophet ﷺ and his Companions. Hence it is quite likely that the verses revealed during the period may not have been preserved. In support of his claim Buhl²⁷⁴ has presented two verses of the Holy Qurān:

سَنُقَرِّئُكَ فَلَا تَنْسَى ۝ إِلَّا مَا شَاءَ اللَّهُ

- 1: We shall make you (O Prophet) recite (our revelations) so that you shall not forget, except what Allah wills.

(Al-'Alā, 68:6)

مَا نَنْسَخْ مِنْ آيَةٍ أَوْ نُنسِهَا نَأْتِ بِخَيْرٍ مِّنْهَا أَوْ مِثْلَهَا

- 2: Whatever revelation We abrogate or cause to be forgotten, We bring one better than it or similar to it.

(Al-Baqarah, 2:106)

But anybody even with a rudimentary understanding of the Qurān and its exegesis can see the absurdity of this objection because these two verses refer only to the abrogated verses of the Qurān.

The background of revelation of the first verse is that in the beginning whenever Jibril ﷺ used to bring some verses the Prophet ﷺ used to hurriedly repeat them for fear of forgetting them and this caused him a great deal of strain. This verse comforted him by assuring him that he should not put himself to hardship of memorising the revelations because Allah has taken the responsibility of preservation of the Qurān upon Himself, hence he would not forget them. But this could have been taken amiss due to the fact that some verses of the Qurān were forgotten later on due to their abrogation. This has been explained by saying إلا ما شاء الله (except that which Allah Wills). This only means that only that verse would be forgotten that was abrogated and not otherwise. Similarly, the other verse only denotes that due to their abrogation some verses would be forgotten by the Prophet ﷺ and his Companions.²⁷⁵

Hence, the most the two verses prove is that when Allah abrogated some verses, He not only ordered their erasure from the transcriptions but simultaneously caused their obliteration from the memories of the people. As far as the non-abrogated verses are concerned, it has been categorically affirmed about them that they will never be forgotten by the Prophet ﷺ. How does it follow from this there is a possibility of forgetting the un-abrogated verses also?

The argument on the basis of these verses that the Qurān was not being recorded in the early days of Islam is utterly baseless and absurd. We have already mentioned that it is authentically proved that the Qurān existed in written form with the Companions before the acceptance of Islam by 'Umar ؓ.

Hence the mention of only "forgetfulness" in the first verse does not mean that the Qurān did not exist in written form, but its actual reason is that this verse deals with the topic of "forgetfulness". Any mention of erasure of the written verses at this point would have been out of the way and out of context. That is why the second verse deals with both abrogation ('erasure of written sentences') and forgetfulness because in this verse the subject of discussion is abrogation. The literal meaning of abrogation is erasure, or blotting out, hence this verse clearly denotes that the

Qurān was present in written form and some of its verses were erased due to their abrogation. It is surprising that the verse which is actually affirming the Qurān's existence in written form is being presented by Buhl to negate it.

SECOND OBJECTION:

THE PROPHET HAD ONCE FORGOTTEN A VERSE

Orientalist D.S. Margoliouth has tried to cast doubts about the preservation of the Qurān on the basis of a tradition reported by Bukhārī and Muslim.²⁷⁶ It has been reported by Sayyidah 'Aishah رضى الله تعالى عنها that the Holy Prophet ﷺ once heard one of his Companions reciting the Qurān, and said:

رَحِمَهُ اللَّهُ، لَقَدْ أَذْكَرَنِي آيَةً كُنْتُ أَنْسِيْتُهَا

صحيح بخارى، كتاب فضائل القرآن، ص ٧٥٣، ج ٢، و صحيح مسلم، كتاب فضائل القرآن، ص ٢٦٧، ج ١ -

Allah's mercy be on him, he made me remember a verse that I had forgotten.²⁷⁷

By quoting this narration Margoliouth intends to deduce that if the Prophet ﷺ can forget one verse at any time, it may possibly happen with other verses as well. Probably he also wants to indicate that the Qurān did not exist in writing otherwise the Prophet ﷺ would not have forgotten that verse. But this objection is so absurd and baseless that even a man with ordinary intelligence will not accept it. Sometimes it does happen that man does remember something yet due to a prolonged dissociation with it he does not have it fresh in his memory but as soon as someone mentions it, it becomes fresh in memory again. Actually this is not forgetfulness but only a temporary dissociation of thought. The same happened with the Holy Prophet ﷺ. Terming it forgetfulness on the basis of such an incident is the height of travesty which is nothing but sheer bigotry. On the contrary had Mr. Margoliouth viewed it with insight and justice he would have realised that this incident actually proves that Allah has safeguarded the Qurān in such an extraordinary manner that no possibility exists for any part of it to become lost. The incident simply proves the reality that every single verse of the Qurān was made to be memorised by so many people that if ever a verse did not remain fresh in the memory of the Prophet ﷺ for the time being there was no possibility of its getting lost.

The objection that this incident denotes that the Qurān, at that time, did not exist in written form is even more unfounded and ridiculous: We have already pointed out that the only thing this incident says is that a verse was revived in the memory of the Holy Prophet ﷺ by its recitation by a Companion. It does not prove that the Qurān was not found in written form. Does Mr. Margoliouth think that a thing once written can never become obscure from a person's mind for a short while? Further, the whole world knows that the Holy Prophet ﷺ did not know reading or writing. So, there was no connection between his remembrance of the Qurān and its transcription, hence inference that the Qurān did not exist in written form can be drawn from this incident only by a person who has closed, the doors of justice and wisdom on himself.

THIRD OBJECTION:

REFERENCE OF SURAH AL-AN'AM IN SURAH AN-NISA'

Margoliouth has advanced another very strange argument about his contention that the Qurān was not written. He points out that the Qurān states in Surah An-Nisa':

وَقَدْ نَزَّلَ عَلَيْكُمْ فِي الْكِتَابِ أَنْ إِذَا سَمِعْتُمْ آيَاتِ اللَّهِ يُكْفَرُ
بِهَا وَيُسْتَهْزَأُ بِهَا فَلَا تَقْعُدُوا مَعَهُمْ حَتَّى يَخُوضُوا فِي
حَدِيثٍ غَيْرِهِ.....○

And (O Believers!) He has indeed (already) revealed to you in the Book that when you hear the revelations of Allah being disbelieved in and mocked at, sit not with them, (who do this) until they indulge in a discourse other than that.... (An-Nisa, 4:140)

This verse is Madinian and the Makkan verse referred to in it is as under:

وَإِذَا رَأَيْتَ الَّذِينَ يَخُوضُونَ فِي آيَاتِنَا فَأَعْرِضْ عَنْهُمْ حَتَّى
يَخُوضُوا فِي حَدِيثٍ غَيْرِهِ.....○

(O Prophet) when you see those who meddle with our revelations, you withdraw from them till they meddle with some other discourse. (Al-An'am, 6:68)

The first verse refers to the second verse but their wordings are different. Margoliouth infers from this that the Qurān did not exist in written form, because if it were written down, the first verse must have used the very same words as the second verse. The difference in the wordings means that the words of the second verse were not preserved when the first verse was revealed.²⁷⁸

This argument of Margoliouth is so palpably unsound that one feels abashed even to refute it. The question here arises, "If the words of the above mentioned verse of Surah Al-An'ām were not preserved at the time of revelation of Surah An-Nisa' how were they written in the Qurān later on?" If the original words of Surah Al-An'ām were not preserved, logically the later scribes would have written there exactly the same words as in Surah An-Nisa'. The difference in words in fact denotes that the words of both the verses were fully preserved and unchanged, and there was no element of conjecture or guess. If the transcription of the Qurān had been guess-work there should have been no difference in the wordings of these two verses.

The fact is that in every language there are two ways of making reference to a preceding subject. Sometimes the exact words of the previous narration are repeated, which form of speech is known in English as Direct Narration; while sometimes the same words are not repeated but the basic meanings are described in different words, known as Indirect Narration. Of these, the former form is not commonly adopted, generally it is the latter form that is resorted to in literary phraseology. This latter form is the one adopted in Surah An-Nisa'. Another reason for this is that many a time every Surah of the Qurān has a different style in relation to the formation of its sentences. Hence if a sentence from another Surah is added in between its own phrases the sequence of the verse would break and the flow of these sentences would not be maintained. Anybody having the slightest literary taste can see that reproduction of the exact words of the Surah Al-An'ām in the verse of 278: Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics v10, p542.

Surah An-Nisa' would break the sequence and flow of the phrase. Further, it should be noted that the entire Surah Al-An'ām about which Margoliouth says that it was not written, was revealed in one instance and it contains the following verse also:²⁷⁹

وَهَذَا كِتَابٌ أَنْزَلْنَاهُ مُبَارَكٌ مُصَدِّقُ الَّذِي بَيْنَ يَدَيْهِ

And this (Qurān) is the blessed Book which We have revealed confirming that which was (revealed) before it.

(Al-An'ām, 6:92)

In the verse the word 'Book' has been used for the Qurān. If the Qurān was not being written upto the revelation of Surah Al-An'ām it could not be called a "Book" which word implies only to written materials. In short, this objection of Margoliouth, too, turns out to be unfounded, absurd and a product of animus and prejudice.

FOURTH OBJECTION:

SLANDER OF MARGOLIOUTH AGAINST IMĀM BUKHĀRĪ

Raising his fourth objection on the preservation of the Qurān Margoliouth says that Bukhari has stated that the sentence:

إِلَّا أَنْ تَصِلُوا مَا بَيْنِي وَبَيْنَكُمْ مِنَ الْقَرَابَةِ

(Except that you respect the relation that exists between me and you).

was a divine revelation through Wahy, but the commentators say that this sentence does not exist in the Qurān. Hence they consider this sentence as an explanatory note to the Qurānic verse 23 of Surah Ash-Shūrā, 42, that is:

279: Tafseer Ibn Kathīr v1, p122.

إِلَّا الْمَوَدَّةَ فِي الْقُرْبَى

.....but (I seek to guide you) in respect of love of kinship....²⁸⁰

But we wish to state with full sense of responsibility that with these words an Orientalist of the reputation of Margoliouth has made such a slanderous statement which cannot be termed as anything other than a dishonest and prejudiced bias or at the least a lamentable ignorance. With this, Mr. Margoliouth has tried to create an impression that Imām Bukhārī considered a sentence as part of the Qurān which is not found in the Qurān at present. Any unbiased and honest person may turn the pages of Ṣaḥiḥ Bukhārī and find that he has copied the verse in exactly the same words as they exist in the Qurān and the sentence إِلَّا الْمَوَدَّةَ فِي الْقُرْبَى (تصلوا) has been written as its explanation. The complete text of Imām Bukhārī's statement is as under:

(صحيح بخارى، كتاب التفسير، سورة حم عسق، ص ٧١٣، ج ٢، طبع كراچی و فتح الباری، ص ٤٥٧، ج ٨ و عمدة القاری، ص ١٥٧، ج ١٩)

CHAPTER, The statement of Allah "Except in respect of love of kinship (42:23) Narrator Muḥammad bin Bashshār..... from Ibn 'Abbās^{رض} that he was asked (regarding) "but (I seek to guide you) in respect of love of kinship" (42:23). Sa'īd bin Jubayr said: "It means here (to show what is due for) the relatives of Muḥammad ﷺ." On that Ibn 'Abbās said: You have hurried in giving the answer! There was no branch of the tribe of Quraysh but the Prophet had relatives therein. The Prophet ﷺ said "I do not want anything from (you) except to be kind to me from my kinship with you."²⁸¹

It is quite clear now that under the heading of the verse Imām Bukhārī has written exactly the same sentence of the verse that occurs in the Qurān. Then as an explanation to it Sayyidina Ibn 'Abbās رضي الله عنه was asked to comment on the verse الا ان تصلوا ما بيني و بينكم من القرابة and he said الا المودة في القربى but Mr. Margoliouth has the effrontery to state that Imām Bukhārī believes this sentence as part of Qurānic revelation. One can easily understand how deep and abiding is the prejudice which animates these so called pioneers of research and truth due to their prejudice against the Qurān, and how tightly the malice and grudge against Islam has trapped them.

فِي قُلُوبِهِمْ مَّرَضٌ فَزَادَهُمُ اللَّهُ مَرَضًا

In their hearts is a disease, so Allah has increased their disease. (Al-Baqarah. 2:10)

FIFTH OBJECTION:SOME VERSES WERE LOST BY SAYYIDAH*‘AISHAH رضى الله تعالى عنها

The fifth objection raised by Margoliouth is that according to a narration of Musnad Ahmad some verses were lost²⁸² by Sayyidah ‘Ayshah رضى الله تعالى عنها. The narration referred to by Margoliouth is as under,

عن عائشة زوج النبي صلى الله عليه وسلم قالت لقد انزلت آية
الرجم ورضعات الكبير عشرأ فكانت في ورقة تحت سرير في
بيتي فلما اشتكى رسول الله صلى الله عليه وسلم تشا غلنا بأمره
و دخلت دوية لنا فاكلتها -

Sayyida ‘Aishah رضى الله تعالى عنها stated that verses about stoning and ten ‘Rid‘at of older people were revealed. These verses were written on a paper that was kept under the bed. When the Prophet ﷺ suffered from the agony of death we got busy in looking after him. Our pet animal came and ate that paper.²⁸³

The fact is that the verses mentioned in this narration were the ones that were abrogated for recital. Sayyidah ‘Aishah رضى الله تعالى عنها herself believes on the abrogation of those verses. If she had kept them written in a paper it does not mean anything other than the preservation of a relic. She, however, remembered them and if she knew them to be a part of the Qurān she would have got them transcribed in the copies of the Qurān, but she never made any attempt all her life. It is clear that she herself considered them no more than an academic memento.

282: Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics v10, p543.

283: Musnad Ahmad; Za‘w‘id, Masnadāt ‘Aishah v6, p269. Beirut.

This incident does not cause any reproach to the preservation of the Qurān.

SIXTH OBJECTION:

NUMBER OF MEMORISERS OF THE QUR'ĀN IN THE DAYS OF THE PROPHET

Some people have doubted the preservation of the Qurān on the basis of a tradition of Sayyidina Qatādah رضي الله عنه. This tradition is quoted by Bukhārī in the following words.

سألت أنس بن مالك رضي الله تعالى عنه من جمع القرآن على
عهد النبي صلى الله عليه وسلم، قال أربعة كلهم من الانصار،
ابي بن كعب ومعاذ بن جبل وزيد بن ثابت و ابو زيد.

"I asked Sayyidina Anas bin Mālik as to who collected the Qurān in the days of the Prophet ﷺ. He said, Four persons, all from among the Ansars, Ubayy bin Ka'b, Mu'az bin Jabal, Zayd bin Thābit and Abu Zayd."

On the basis of this Hadith some people think that in the days of the Prophet ﷺ there were only four persons who had memorised the Qurān by heart. In fact this is not true. We have already given the names of those who had memorised the Qurān during the days of the Prophet ﷺ. Hence the narration of Sayyidina Anas bin Mālik certainly does not mean that there were no more than these four memorisers of the Qurān in the entire group of the Companions. But in the tradition under reference the phrase "who collected the Qurān" has been used, and the correct interpretation of this is "Who wrote the Qurān"? Sayyidina Anas رضي الله عنه in fact meant that these were the four persons who had with them the complete manuscript of the Qurān during the very days of the Prophet ﷺ,

Further, Ḥāfiz Ibn Ḥajar رحمه الله عليه has written the full sotry of the narration of Sayyidina Anas رضي الله عنه with reference to a narration from Ṭabarī as follows "Once the tribes of Aws and Khazraj each claimed supremacy over the other and boasted feats of their members."

The people of Aws enumerated the names of their tribesmen who had gained a special status in Islam. In reply to this the people of Khazraj (including Sayyidina Anas) said that there were four persons in their tribe who had collected the entire Qurān. Hence his narration could also mean that there were only these four persons in both the tribes who had collected the Qurān.²⁸⁴

SEVENTH OBJECTION:

‘ABDULLAH BIN MAS‘ŪD AND MU‘AWWADHATAYN (THE LAST TWO SURĀHS)

Some people make the most of the narration of Musnad Ahmad which states that Sayyidina ‘Abdullah bin Mas‘ūd did not consider the last two Surahs of the Qurān (Al-Falaq and An-Nās) as part of the Qurān.²⁸⁵

This is a false allegation. In fact ‘Abdullah bin Mas‘ūd, like the entire Ummah considered these two Surahs as part of the Qurān, and the traditions which are against it are not correct. It is proved from the fact that the uninterrupted recitals from him contain these Surahs. Of the ten recitals the one from ‘Āsim is quoted by Abu Abdur Raḥmān Sulmī, Zirr ibn Ḥubaysh and Abu Amr-al-Shaybāni, and all of them have reported it from Sayyidina ‘Abdullah bin Mas‘ūd.²⁸⁶ Similarly, the recital 284: For details see Fath-ul-Bārī v9, pp41,42.

285: Watt: W. Montgomery; Bell's Introduction to the Qurān p46.

286: An-Nashr fil Qir'at al 'Ashr. Ibn ul Jazarī. v1, p156.

of Hamzah is quoted by 'Alqamah, Aswad, Ibn Wahb, Masrūq, 'Āsim bin Ḍamrah and Hārith and all of them have reported it from 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd.²⁸⁷ Further, the recitals of Kisāī and Khalaf are also traced back to 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd because Kisāī learnt it from Hamzah, and Khalaf was a student of his student.

Since there is a consensus on the fact that all the reports of "The ten recitals" are the most convincing and authentic reports and are being transmitted uninterruptedly from generation to generation²⁸⁸ hence, isolated report against these must be rejected and cannot be accepted.

It is on this basis that most scholars of Hadith and researchers have termed as weak, invented or at least unacceptable reports that attribute the false belief towards 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd. These scholars include 'Allāmah Nawawī, 'Allāmah Ibn Hazm, Imām Rāzi, Qaḍi Abu Bakr bin 'Arabī, 'Allāmah Baḥr-ul-'Ulūm, and of the latest era, the renowned research scholar 'Allamah Zāhid Kautharī (رحمهم الله).²⁸⁹

One may think that since Hāfiẓ Ibn _____ Hajar and 'Allāmah Nuruddīn Haythmī (رحمهم الله) have asserted that all the narrators of these reports were reliable people,²⁹⁰ how can these reports be termed as incorrect? But the people who have a knowledge of the science of Hadith know it well that reliability of the narrators alone is not sufficient for a tradition to be correct, but it is also necessary that it should have no element of flaw and 287: Ibid p166.

288: Faḍl ul-Bārī v1, p262.

289: See in sequential order Al-Itqān v2, p.81, Al-Muḥallā, Ibn Ḥazm v1, p13, Fawātiḥ ur Raḥmūt, Sherah Muslimuth Thubut by Baḥrul 'Ulūm v2, p12, Maqālāt ul Kawtharī, p16, My own Article in Al-Balāgh, Sh'abān 1393, Sayyidina 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd and Muwadhatayn.

290: Faḥ al Bārī v8, p3, Majmu'az Zawā'id, Haythmī v7, p149.

irregularity in it. All scholars of Ḥadīth have defined "Correct Tradition" as devoid of any defect or irregularity and if a tradition contains these elements, it would not be regarded as correct despite the reliability of its narrators. In his preface Ḥafīẓ Ibn-us-Sallāh writes as under.

"Hence Ḥadīth Mu'allal (Motivated Tradition) is that wherein some defect may be suspected even though apparently it may seem to be correct. And this defect may be found even in its precedent wherein also the narrators are reliable men and in which all the conditions of authenticity seem to be present. The defect is comprehended by those having deep insight in the science of Ḥadīth through several means e.g. by finding the narrator as an isolated one, or sometimes due to his opposition to some other narrator coupled with some other indications."²⁹¹

Similarly, there is a kind of Tradition called "Shāz" (Rare). In it the narrators are reliable but because they oppose other narrators more reliable than themselves their report is not accepted. Hence, 'Allāmah Nawawī and Ibn Ḥazm regard as unacceptable those Ḥadīth that allege that 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd did not consider the last Surāhs as part of the Qurān although their narrators are reliable men. They have the following reasons for their stand:

- 1: These reports are defective because they are against such recitals of 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd as have been reported uninterruptedly.
- 2: The narration of Musnad Aḥmad that describes the saying of Ibn Mas'ūd... انهما ليستا من كتاب الله (These two are not part of the Book of Allah) is reported only by 'Abdur Rahmān bin Yazīd Nakh'ī. Nobody else has reported this sentence from him as such.²⁹² Also it is not an uninterrupted narration, hence it is classed as "Rare". According to the principles established by Scholars of Hadith "Rare reports" are not acceptable.

291: Fath-ul-Mulhim v1, p54.

292: Majma' Zaw'id, Haythmī v7, p149. and Fath ur Rabbāni v18, pp351-352.

- 3: Even if these reports are taken as correct they shall remain "Isolated News", and the Ummah has consensus that any Isolated news that does not conform to the rule of continuity is unacceptable. The recitals of Sayyidina 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd رضي الله عنه are proved through uninterrupted narrations and are doubtless authentic. Hence these isolated news against those narrations are unacceptable.

The question now remains that if these narrations are not correct then why the reliable narrators reported such a baseless thing? The answer to this question is that although he believed them to be part of the Qurān, 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd رضي الله عنه may not have written them in his manuscript for some reason. And reporter of this fact may have deduced from it that Ibn Mas'ūd did not consider them to be Qurānic revelations although it was a fact that he had not written them down in spite of believing them to be part of Qurān. There could be many reasons for not writing them in his manuscript. For example, 'Allāmah Zahid Kawtharī has stated that he had not written them down because there was no fear of their being forgotten. Every Muslim remembers them by heart.²⁹³

This argument is supported by the fact that 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd رضي الله عنه did not even write down the Surah Al-Fatiha in his manuscript. Imām Abu Bakr Al-Ambarī has reported that Ibn 'Abbās was asked about it and he replied that if he had to write Surah Al-Fatiha he would have written it with every Surah. Imām Abu Bakr says that this meant that since the Surah is recited with every 293: Maqālāt ul-Kawthari, p16.

Surah during Salah he had omitted it and relied on the memory of Muslims.²⁹⁴

Anyhow, there can be several explanations why 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd had not written surah, Al-Fatiḥa and these two Surahs in his manuscript. It cannot be concluded from it that he did not consider them to be part of the Qurān, while the entire Qurān has been reported uninterruptedly from him including these Surahs.

EIGHTH OBJECTION:

COLLECTION OF THE QURĀN DURING THE TIME OF SAYYIDINA ABU BAKR رضي الله عنه

We have already mentioned in detail about the accomplishment of the collection of the Holy Qurān during the time of Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه. Some Orientalists have outright refused to accept this fact. They maintain that no attempt was officially made to collect and compile the Qurān at that time and it was only Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه who first performed this task. They further claim that the transcription of Sayyida Ḥafṣah (رضي الله عنها) which 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه used was her personal copy and not the officially compiled Qurān. To support this claim they have raised certain objections to the tradition quoted by Bukhārī that has been reported from Zayd bin Thābit رضي الله عنه and which has described the incident of collection and compilation of the Qurān at the time of Abu Bakr Ṣiddiq.²⁹⁵ All these objections have been summerised by Montgomery Watt.²⁹⁶ It is unnecessary to mention all those objections in these pages and give an answer to them because most of them are such that anybody with 294: Tafsīr Al-Qurṭabī v1, pp114, 115.

295: This report has been described in the preceding pages.

296: Watt: Bell's Introduction to the Qurān 40, 42, Edingburgh 1970.

common sense can easily answer them. However, some important objections are answered below.

One of their objections is raised on a Hadith in Bukhārī that Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه was motivated to write down the Qurān on observing that many martyrs the Battle of Yamamah were the Ḥuffāẓ (those who had memorised the Qurān). They state that the number of Ḥuffāẓ martyred in this battle was negligible because most of the martyrs were recently converted Muslims. This objection is not only unfounded but also absurd. It was first raised by Fredrich Schwally and subsequently other Orientalists blindly followed him,²⁹⁷ and none of them bothered to have gone through the list of martyrs and see how far this objection is true? The fact is that the number of participants in the battle of Yamamah was there hundred and sixty Muhājirīn (Immigrants) and Anṣars (Helpers) of Madinah and three hundred Muhājirīn (Immigrants) from other parts around Madinah.²⁹⁸ Evidently the names of all the 660 persons could not be preserved. However, fifty eight names have been mentioned by Ibn Kathīr.²⁹⁹

Of the these 58 persons one was Sālīm Mawlā Abi Ḥuzayfah رضي الله عنه who held the most distinguished position among the Companions by virtue of being a Ḥāfiẓ and Qārī (Recitor). He was one of the four Companions who were specifically named by the Prophet ﷺ from whom the Qurān may be learnt. He was the Imām (that is, he used to lead the Salah) at the mosque of Qubā before the Hijrah and ‘Umar رضي الله عنه also used to offer Salah behind him. He often used to lead the Salah during journeys because he was regarded as the greatest scholar of the Qurān.³⁰⁰

297: Watt: Bell's Introduction to the Qurān. p192.

298: Tarīkh-al-Ṭabarī v2, p516.

299: Al-bidāyah wan-Nihāyah v6, p340.

300: Al-Istī‘yāb, Ibn ‘Abdul Barr, v2, pp28,29.

The other eminent person was Abu Ḥuzayfah رضي الله عنه and he was the forty-fourth Muslim in history of Islam.³⁰¹ His eminent place regarding the knowledge of Qurān can well be imagined from his close connection with Sayyidina Sālīm apart from his long association with the Holy Prophet ﷺ.

The third eminent person was Zayd bin Khaṭṭāb رضي الله عنه, the elder brother of Sayyidina 'Umar رضي الله عنه who had accepted Islam in its earliest days. Sayyidina 'Umar رضي الله عنه used to say about him that every gust of wind brought the memory of Zayd to him.³⁰²

The fourth of them was Sayyidina Thābit bin Qays bin Shammās رضي الله عنه who was one of the scribes of Qurānic revelations³⁰³ and his special relation to the Qurān is well-known.

Another person was 'Abbād bin Bishar رضي الله عنه who was present in the battle of Badr. Sayyida 'Āyshah رضي الله تعالى عنها has stated that three Ansār Companions were superior to other Companions by virtue of their knowledge and wisdom, and one of them was 'Abbād bin Bishār.³⁰⁴

Also, Sayyidina Tufayl bin 'Amr ad-Dausī رضي الله عنه was martyred in the Battle of Yamāmah. He was a distinguished Companion who had learnt the Qurān from Ubayy bin Ka'b رضي الله عنه, who was known to be the greatest scholar of Qir at.³⁰⁵ Also included in the list are brother of Zayd bin Thābit, Yazīd bin Thābit, Uncle of Barā' bin 'Āzib, Qays bin Ḥārith, brother of Sayyidina Mu'āz, 'Āiz bin Mā'iz, brother of Zubayr Sā'ib bin 'Awwām and the son of Sayyidina 'Uthmān bin Maz'ūn Sā'id bin 'Uthmān.

In addition to the above named there were 18 from among the immigrants, and about 20 from the Helpers (Anṣār) who had accepted Islam before the battle of Badr. There were another 10 who were present in the battle of Uhud.³⁰⁶ This list of the martyrs at Yamāmah includes only names such as could be preserved in the history. How many more Ḥuffāz (recitors who had memorised the Qurān) were among the unnamed martyrs is very difficult to estimate. But Fredrick Schwally, George Bell and Montgomery Watt see no recitor among them. And not only that, they want to impress the world of their research by calling them the recent converts and deny the authenticity of the tradition of Bukhārī on the basis of this assumption. This is the height of treachery with the principles of learning and research, and an extremely deceitful technique to undermine justice and honesty. In fact, it was not just in the case of battle of Yamāmah where all the Ḥuffāz Companions were martyred but this battle was just one in the long chain of battles that were to ensue, and there was a large number of learned Companions who were keen to sacrifice their lives in battles more fierce than this. If under these conditions, Sayyidina Umar رضي الله عنه got the idea to collect the Qurān how can it be made a basis for rejecting a strongly authentic tradition of Ṣaḥīḥ Bukhārī?

Another objection raised by Watt on this tradition is that if Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه had prepared an official transcription of the Qurān, it would have served as a precedent (a definite argument) but we do not find any evidence to that effect in the traditions of that time. The absurdity of this objection is also quite evident. That this transcription was a precedent and there can be no greater proof of this than the fact when Sayyidina ‘Uthmān رضي الله عنه decided to prepare the copies of the Qurān he sent for the same transcription from Sayyidah Ḥafṣah رضي الله تعالى عنها that was prepared by Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه.

Watt has also raised the objection that if this was an official transcription then after the death of Sayyidina ‘Umar رضي الله عنه why did it remain in the custody of Sayyidah Ḥafṣah رضي الله تعالى عنها instead of his successor Caliph. The answer to this objection is obvious that after the martyrdom of Sayyidina ‘Umar رضي الله عنه there was no successor for sometime and all his belongings, including this transcription, were transferred to his daughter Sayyidah Ḥafṣah رضي الله تعالى عنها. No sensible person would make this a basis for rejecting such an authentic tradition.

NINTH OBJECTION:

COMPLETE QURĀN WAS NOT WRITTEN UPTO THE TIME OF SAYYIDINA ABU BAKR'S CALIPHATE

It has been described earlier that whenever any verse was revealed to the Prophet ﷺ he used to send for the scribes and dictate it to them. In this way the entire Qurān had been written down before the death of the Prophet ﷺ but it was not compiled in a book form. Different verses were written on different things. Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه got all of them collected and transcribed into various folios.

Contrary to this, Noldeke and Arthur Jeffery etc. have claimed that the Qurān was not completely written down during the days of the Prophet ﷺ, but only some portions of it were written. They have based their claim on the tradition of Ṣaḥīḥ Bukhārī that Sayyidina ‘Umar رضي الله عنه advised for collection of the Qurān after the battle of Yamāmah and the reason he advanced was that he feared loss of many portions of the Qurān if the Ḥuffāẓ (memorisers) got martyred as they were in that Battle. Arthur Jeffery has written that the cause of fear was the killings of those "Ḥuffāẓ" who had memorised the Qurān. He argues that there was no cause for such a fear if the entire Qurān had already been written during the lifetime of the Prophet ﷺ. ³⁰⁷

But it is extremely sad and surprising that like some other Orientalists Arthur Jeffery has also refused to accept the tradition of Bukhārī which denotes that Sayyidina Abu Bakr ؓ had got prepared an official copy of the Qurān. ³⁰⁸ One wonders in which square to fit this double standard. On the one hand Jeffery considers all such events incorrect and suggests that preservation of the Qurān was officially written during the days of Abu Bakr ؓ, yet, on the other hand, he has based his argument on the wordings of Sayyidina 'Umar ؓ which is a part of the same tradition from Zayd bin Thābit ؓ. On the one hand, he calls the entire tradition as "fiction" but on the other hand he also quotes the same tradition for proving his claim that Qurān was not written down. Still they have the audacity to claim that justice, fairplay and impartiality of the Orientalists was quite obvious and that it is evident from their books that they want nothing else but to unveil the reality!

Anyway, if the method adopted for collection of the Qurān during the Caliphate of Sayyidina Abu Bakr Ṣiddiq ؓ, as described in the preceding chapter is kept in view, the argument of Jeffery automatically becomes void. To remind once again, the method adopted for this purpose was based collectively on memory and manuscripts at the same time. No verse was put to writing until its being a part of the Qurān was proved by all available means. Such a guarded system could become possible only because apart from the Qurānic verses being secure in writing, a large number of such persons were available who knew them by heart. Such persons were called Ḥuffāẓ (plural of Ḥāfīẓ) and if they had not been available in such a large number the feat of collection of the Qurān could not have been accomplished so scrupulously as it deserved.

In addition to that, an uninterrupted chain of transmission was needed for proof of the Qurān and just one or two copies could not fulfil this requirement. Hence a substantial number of Ḥuffāẓ was inevitable for the collection of the Qurān. That was why Sayyidina ‘Umar رضي الله عنه feared that if the martyrdom of Ḥuffāẓ continued like that and the collection of the Qurān was delayed, the chain of transmission could break or at least become weak, and it would not be possible to confirm the written verse from the uninterrupted memories of the Companions. Hence, it is quite false to use Sayyidina ‘Umar’s رضي الله عنه caution to conclude that the Qurān did not exist in written form.

TENTH OBJECTION.

DOUBTS ABOUT THE ORIGIN OF DIFFERENT RECITALS

The reality of different recitals has been discussed in detail in the preceding pages. But a large group of Orientalists have presented another misleading view about it. Noldeke, Goldzehir and Jeffery etc have written that the difference in the recitals was not auditory in nature but the actual reason was that transcriptions that Sayyidina ‘Uthmān رضي الله عنه got prepared did not have dots and diacritical marks, and hence, it could be read in different ways. Everybody read it according to his own interpretation and that became his recital.³⁰⁹

The gist of the claim of Orientalists is that the popular recitals of the Qurān do not have any proof of origin from the Prophet ﷺ but have come up from the different manners of reading the transcription of Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه that was without dots and diacritical marks. In fact these transcriptions were kept free of dots and diacritical marks intentionally so that all the recitals that had their origin from the Prophet ﷺ could be incorporated in the script and their claim of the orientalists is, therefore baseless.

We have already described that in every age three conditions have been laid down for any recital to be acceptable as original. These three conditions are,

- 1: There should be room for it in the 'Uthmāni transcriptions.
- 2: It must conform to the rules of Arabic Grammar.
- 3: It should have authentic proof of uninterrupted transmission from the Prophet ﷺ.

Consequently, no recital was accepted to be correct until authentic proof was available for its origin from the Prophet ﷺ. If the recitals had come into being simply due to 'Uthmāni Script, each and every recital that could be incorporated in it would have been taken as correct, and the third condition would not have been introduced. Whoever will think over the different recitals of the Qurān will clearly see that at various occasions there was scope for reading a word in several ways but since they did not have proof of originating from the Prophet ﷺ they were not adopted. This will be clear from the following two examples. In sūrah Al-Baqarah it has been stated: لَا يَقْبَلُ مِنْهَا (lā yuqbalu) and in another recital it is read as لَا تُقْبَلُ (Lā tuqbalu); but a similar verse occurs in Sūrah Al-Baqarah with the words وَلَا تَنْفَعُهَا شَفَاعَةُ وَلَا هُمْ يَنْصُرُونَ. Here the only recital is لَا تَنْفَعُهَا (La tan'fa'uhā) and there is no alternate recital as لَا يَنْفَعُهَا (La yan'fa'uhā) although it can be incorporated in 'Uthmāni script because in that transcription it was written as لَا سَفَعُهَا and thus it could be read in both ways. But because the other recital has no proof of its origin from the Prophet ﷺ, none of the recitors adopted it.

Similar, in Sūrah Yā-sīn it occurs اِنَّمَا اَمْرُهُ اِذَا ارَادَ شَيْئًا اَنْ يَقُولَ لَهُ كُنْ فَيَكُونُ According to one recital, the underlined word is read as fa'yakūnu and in another recital it is read as fa'yakūna (fa yakūna), but a similar verse in Surah Al-'Imrān, اِذَا قَضَىٰ اَمْرًا فَاِنَّمَا يَقُولُ لَهُ كُنْ فَيَكُونُ has only one recital as (fayakunu) and the other recital has not been adopted by any one despite its scope in the 'Uthmāni Script.³¹⁰

There are many other examples like these which clearly indicate that the recitals did not come into being due to the script but because they had authentic uninterrupted link with the Prophet ﷺ and in order to preserve them Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه kept his transcription free of dots and diacritical marks.

That is why only one person (Abu Bakr bin Muqsim³¹¹) can be named in the entire Ummah who had adopted the view that recitals could be invented from 'Uthmāni transcriptions according to one's own interpretations and it was not necessary for them to have their origin from the 310: Both these examples have been taken from Tarīkh-ul-Qurān pp128, 129 by 'Allāmah Tāhir Kurdi.

Prophet ﷺ. But when he pronounced his misleading view, he was severely reprimanded by the entire Muslim world, and the Caliph called him before a council of the "Recitors" and "Jurists" and demanded from him to repent which he did, and gave a written proclamation of his turning back from this view.³¹²

This incident clearly denotes that to innovate recitals from 'Uthmāni transcriptions according to one's own interpretation has always been regarded as an aberration in the Muslim world. There has always been a consensus that only such recitals of the Qurān would be taken as reliable as are originated authentically from the Prophet ﷺ. If the recitals had come into being simply due to difference of interpretation in reading the 'Uthmāni script, Ibn Muqsim would not have been reprimanded like that. Hence, the claim of the Orientalists that the recitals came into being due to absence of dots and diacritical marks in 'Uthmāni transcriptions is baseless and unfounded. On the contrary, the truth is that these recitals are proved through uninterrupted chain from the Prophet ﷺ and it was to preserve them that 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه had kept his transcriptions devoid of dots and diacritical marks so that all the accepted recitals could be incorporated in their script.

ELEVENTH OBJECTION:

RARE RECITALS OF THE QURĀN

Some Orientalists are making a mountain out of a molehill through false assumptions on the basis of rare recitals of the Qurān. Particularly Goldzehir and Jeffery have quoted several examples of these recitals and have drawn self-conceived inferences from them.³¹³ In these pages it is not possible to present all those examples and expose the reality about them. For this task a whole book will be required.³¹⁴ Also we feel that this would be unnecessary. However, we wish to mention some fundamental facts about the rare recitals, and we do hope that with these in view the readers will understand the rejection of the false assumptions of these Orientalists that they have made on the basis of rare recitals.

We have stated earlier that Muslims are united on their understanding that only such recitals of the Qurān are reliable that fulfil three conditions, namely

- 1: The particular recital can be incorporated in 'Uthmāni script.
- 2: It should conform to the rules of Arabic Grammar.
- 3: It must have proof of authentic uninterrupted transmission from the Holy Prophet ﷺ, or at least it must be popular among the scholars of Recitals.

Any recital lacking even one of the these three conditions is termed as "Rare Recital" and no one in the entire Ummah took it as reliable. A close look on "Rare Recitals" reveals that one or more of the following defects are present in them.

- 1: Sometimes that recital is totally innovated, just as the recitals of Abul Faḍl Muḥammad bin Fa'far Khuzā'i that he has attributed to Imām Abu Ḥanīfah. Dāraqutnī and all other scholars have exposed them and declared that they are all innovated.³¹⁵ 315: Al-Nashr fī Qirā'at 'Ashr, Ibn al Jazari v1, p16 Al-Itqān v1, pp78,79.

- 2: Sometimes they have very weak precedents, just as the recitals of Ibn-us-Samīfa' and Abus-Samāl or many of those recitals which Abu Dāwood has attributed to different Companions and their followers in his Kitāb-ul-Maṣāḥif.³¹⁶
- 3: Sometimes the precedent is correct but in fact it is not the recital of the Qurān, but a companion or his follower added one or more words during ordinary discourse as an explanation to some word of the Qurān. Since the Qurān in its entire substance was uninterrupted and thousands of Ḥuffāz were present in every period of time, there was no danger of actual addition in the original text due to the addition of explanatory words.³¹⁷ Hence, such explanations were not considered objectionable. For example, it is reported that Sa'ad bin Waqqās read وله اخ او اخت من أم. In this the underlined words (من أم) were an explanatory addition. Similarly, it is reported that Sayyidina 'Uthmān رضي الله عنه read a verse like this. ولتكن منكم امة يدعون الى الخير ويامرون بالمعروف و ينهون عن المنكر و يستعينون الله على ما اصابهم واولئك هم المفلحون.

In this, the underlined phrase و يستعينون الله على ما اصابهم is indeed exegesis addition, because if it has been part of the Qurān in his recital, it must have been present in the transcriptions compiled by him. But this phrase does not occur in any of his seven transcriptions.³¹⁸

There are many such examples found in Rare Recitals.

- 4: Sometimes it happened that certain recitals were abrogated in the last days of the Prophet's ﷺ life but the Companion who had already memorised it remained unaware of this fact, hence he continued to recite it as he had learnt.³¹⁹ Because the other Companions knew that this had been abrogated they did not recite it nor did they consider it to be a correct recital any more.

- 5: It appears from some of the Rare Recitals that probably some followers of Companions made a mistake in the recitation of the Qurān quite unintentionally (as sometimes happens even with eminent Huffāz) and a listener reported it as he had heard.³²⁰

Whatever Rare Recitals of the Qurān have been reported mostly come under one of the above five situations. Obviously, no question arises for accepting these recitals as reliable. Consequently, the Ummah never relied on them in any age. That is why these recitals could not even become popular, nothing to say of their being uninterrupted. Hence the inferences drawn by the Orientalists on the basis of Rare Recitals that (God forbid) differences exist in the text of the Qurān, is such an unfounded and absurd idea that it deserves no consideration at all from scientific and research point of view. And Allah knows best.

CHAPTER-7

TRUTHFULNESS OF THE QURĀN

The Holy Qurān is the last Book of Allah and He has put such a gripping effect in it that leaving apart obduracy and malice, anybody who studies it with sincerity and an open mind will readily admit that verily it is the word of Allah. It makes its impact both on intellect and emotions together and its truthfulness penetrates deep into the heart. An attempt to prove the truthfulness of the Qurān is like trying to prove that the Sun is luminous. But in the following lines we are presenting certain facts which, if given due attention, will make it easier even for a non-Muslim to arrive at the truthfulness of the Qurān.

MESSENGERSHIP OF SAYYIDINA MUHAMMAD ﷺ

First of all the readers must refresh in their minds our discussion on the "Need for Wahy" in chapter one. It has been made obvious that "Wahy (Divine Revelation)" is a natural requirement of mankind without which it is impossible for a man to lead a righteous life. It is of no use to talk about Wahy and Prophethood, to those who deny the very existence of Allah on this subject. They must be addressed, first, on the existence of God. But anyone believing in the existence of Allah cannot deny the "Wahy". The Being who created man and for him created this universe cannot be expected to leave him helpless in a world so full of mischief and turbulence and send him no code of life to guide him.

It is this chain of guidance that is called "Wahy" (Divine Revelation) and Messengership, and it did not start with Sayyidina Muḥammad ﷺ but was perfected on him. Thousands of Prophets and Messengers عليهم السلام had come to this world before him and almost every one of them gave the tidings that in the last era a Messenger will be sent on whom the chain of Prophethood and Messengership will be perfected. Some of the Prophets عليهم السلام had described many of his signs already and some had even told his name. Although a good deal of interpolation has taken place in the scriptures of the previous Prophets yet many of the tidings of the advent of Sayyidina Muḥammad ﷺ are still found in them.

TIDINGS ABOUT PROPHET MUḤAMMAD ﷺ IN THE DIVINE SCRIPTURES

In the Book of Deutronomy, Prophet Mūsa عليه السلام (Moses) has been addressed:

"And the Lord said unto me, they have well spoken that which they have spoken. I will raise them a Prophet from among their brethren like unto thee, and will put My words in his mouth, and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not hearken unto My words which he shall speak in My name. I will require it of him. But the Prophet ﷺ who shall presume to speak a word in My name which I have not commanded him to speak in the name of other gods, even that Prophet shall die. And if thou say in thine heart; How shall we know the word which the Lord had not spoken? When a Prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken, but the Prophet hath spoken it presumptuously thou shall not be afraid of him.

(Bible Deutronomy, 18:17-22)".

During the address to Bani Isra'il it has been clarified that the Prophet who has been prophesised here is not from among them, but would appear among their brothers, that is, Bani Isma'il. Also the New Testament contains the following address of Allah to Prophet Sha'ya ﷺ.

"Behold My servant whom I uphold, Mine elect, in whom My soul deligateth, I have put My spirit upon him, he shall bring forth judgement to the Gentiles. He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street, A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench; he shall bring forth judgement unto truth. He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he has set judgement in the earth, and isles shall wait for his law...I, the Lord have thee in the righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles. To open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison house. I am the Lord: That is My name; and My glory will I not give to another, neither My praise to graver images....Sing unto the Lord a new song, and His praise from the end of the earth ye that go down to the sea, and all that is therein, the isles and the inhabitants thereof. Let the wilderness and the cities thereof lift up their voice, the villages that Qaydār doth inhabit; let the inhabitants of the rock Satā sing, let them shout from the top of the mountains.³²¹ Let them give their glory unto the Lord, and declare His praise into the islands. The Lord shall go forth as a mighty man, He shall site up jealously like a man of war; He shall cry. Yell, roar; He shall prevail against His enemies... They shall be turned back. They shall be greatly ashamed, that trust in graven images, that say to the molten images: Ye are our gods.

(Bible 42:1-17)

In the above passage also it has been clarified that the Prophet ﷺ whose tidings are being given shall be from the progeny of Sayyidina Isma'il ﷺ because Qaydār (Kedar) is the name of his son and people of Sala' (the popular mountains of Madinah) will rejoice on his arrival. His main combat will be with the idolaters and he will destroy idolatry within his sphere of influence. He will also face wars against several nations and ultimately he will triumph over and establish justice among them.

In the Old Testament there are many more similar tidings and it was on account of them that upto the arrival of Sayyidina Isa (Jesus) ﷺ it was popularly known to the people that apart from him another great Prophet will be coming in this world. Thus, it is mentioned in the Bible of Yuḥanna that when Sayyidina Yaḥyā (John) ﷺ came the people asked him whether he was the Prophet whose tidings had been given by the earlier Prophets. He denied it. The Bible of Yuḥanna has described it thus:

321: Every word of this tidings points to the Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ. I have explained in the marginal note, to Bible-se- Qurān tak v3, p281. Let it suffice to say here that Qaydār is the name of the son of Sayyidina Isma'il ﷺ according to the Bible itself (tawārīkh:1-3) His descendents inhabited the wilderness of Arabia as is clear from the Bible (Sha'yā 21: 13-17). Thus by naming Qaydar this text gives the tiding of a Prophet from the descendents of Isma'il ﷺ, who will be sent to the Arabs.... This text also calls upon the people of Sala' to sing. Sala' is the famous mountain of Madinah and Thaniyāt al-wada' is situated here. The children of Madinah had stood over it and sang, (طلع البدر علينا the full moon has risen towards us) and welcomed him when the Prophet ﷺ had come here.

“And the witness of Yuḥanna is: when the Jews sent to him sooth-sayers from Jerusalem to ask him who he was? Then he affirmed and he did not deny. But he affirmed that he was not Messiah. Then they asked him: Who then are you? Are you Eiliah? He said. No, I am not... Are you “That Prophet”? He said: No... (Bible of Ytuhann 1:19-26)

It is evident from this that even during the days of Sayyidina Yaḥyā (John) ﷺ people were waiting for a Prophet other than Sayyidina ‘Isā ﷺ, and that Prophet was so popularly known to them that people thought it unnecessary to call him by his name and only the phrase “That Prophet” was sufficient.

And then Sayyidina Isā (Jesus) ﷺ came and he also gave glad tidings of the advent of Sayyidina Muḥammad ﷺ by name. In the Bible Yuḥanna he has been reported to have said,

“I speak the truth to you that my departure is useful for you, because if I do not depart then he the *pirclotus*³²² will not come to you, but if I go, I will send him to you; and he will then blame the world in respect of sins and truthfulness and justice.” (Yuhannā 16:7)

Keeping the above prophecies in mind just imagine the times when Sayyidina Muḥammad ﷺ came to this world. It was the time when the world had been without a Prophet since several centuries. The teachings of the previous Prophets were fading away. Interpolations and alterations in the Scriptures had distorted the earlier doctrines. Polytheism had become almost an epidemic all over the world. Oppression and barbarism was the order of the day. Those who had the knowledge of previous Divine Scriptures were anxiously waiting for the coming of the last Prophet. It was in such an environment that Sayyidina Muḥammad ﷺ was born in Makkah. He lived in that township for forty years in a manner that every living soul testified to his truthfulness, honesty, trustworthiness, justice and nobility. Makkah at that time was not a big city, but it was a dwelling where every person living in it was like an open book before the others. He spent forty years in that place and the people of Makkah had closely observed his childhood and youth and in all that period nobody could raise a finger on his personal character. On the contrary he became popularly known with the titles of "Truthful" and "Trustworthy". It was not that he had spent his life in seclusion, but was an active participant as a sagacious and prudent individual of the nation. He had trade relations with them, worked on wages settled their mutual disputes, travelled with them, had been living as a family man. In short, he had passed through all the stages of life, as it was in those days, and the whole nation confessed the nobility of his character in all those stages.

Then, in all those forty years he was not educated in any school of learning, had no links with the scholars of the people of the Book, did not learn reading and writing, did not compose any poetic verses, unlike Arabs in general, nor had any interest in poetic congregations, nor ever he mixed with the company of sooth sayers, magicians or fortune-tellers. And all of a sudden he starts speaking in such a superbly sublime language that all the greatest and the most prominent scholars and poets of the day, bow to its excellence and superiority, tells us of such scientific and knowledgeable realities that the philosophers of the whole world bow their heads before them, discloses such future events that could never be even imagined by any fortune teller or diviner and all these come true exactly as foretold. Such miracles happen from him that baffled the greatest sorcerers of the time. Then within a short span of twenty three years he brought about such an amazing revolution in the entire Arabian peninsula that the savage, illiterate and uncouth Arabs became the torch-bearers of light and learning and wisdom and morality throughout the world. Those who were cutting each other's throat were united like brothers. Where murder, terror were the order of the day, there love and peace reigned supreme. Oppression and barbarism were replaced with justice and fairplay, and the Bedouins of Arabia, who were held in contempt throughout the world for their ignorance ultimately became the heirs of great Persian and Roman Empires and the whole world was compelled to pay tribute to their justice, compassion and nobility.

Anyone looking at these events dispassionately and impartially cannot but reach the conclusion that Sayyidina Muḥammad ﷺ was the true Messenger of Allah. He was "The promised Prophet" whose tidings were being given since several centuries and who was awaited by the humanity. Hence, his claim that "The Qurān is the words of Allah" is an absolute truth which cannot be questioned.

MIRACLE OF THE QURĀN

Another convincing proof of truth of the Qurān is its miraculous nature. It is a book the like of which is beyond human power to produce. That is why it is called the greatest miracle of the Holy Prophet ﷺ. We would like to mention here briefly the sources of the miracle of Qurān a security of which makes it clear that undoubtedly the Qurān is the Word of Allah and that human intellect has no say in it.

Before proceeding any further two things must be borne in mind. First the eloquence and rhetoric, and the penetrating effect of an oration is a quality that pertains to perceptive and cognitive faculty, and it is not possible to describe its full reality and actual nature in words. We can only fix the rules of eloquence and rhetoric through elaborate search, investigation and reasoning, but these principles and rules are not the decisive factors. The merits and demerits of a composition are ultimately decided by instinctive and intuitive abilities. Just as there can be no comprehensive and meaningful description of a beautiful face, or just as the grace and relicacy of a colourful flower cannot be confined within words, or just as the fragrance of musk cannot be imparted through words, or just as the flavour and taste of a delicious fruit cannot be described in words, similarly it is just not possible to describe in full measure the eloquence and rhetoric of a composition. But listening to it, a cultivated person will atonce realise its beauty and elegance.

Secondly, in the matter of eloquence and rhetoric of a language the taste and cognition of only those people would be reliable whose mother tongue it happens to be. But no other person, howsoever proficient in a foreign language, can equal in appreciating its finer qualities the man whose mother tongue it is.

Now, imagine the people of Arabia in the Days of Ignorance when oratory happened to be the most dominant passion in the society. Each and every person in the society had a natural taste for literature and poetry.

Eloquence and rhetoric were their life blood. The liveliness that marked their gatherings, the gaiety of their fairs and the virtues on which they boasted themselves so much all found their expression through poetry and literature. They were so proud indeed of their literary accomplishments that they contemptuously dubbed all the other peoples of the world as “Ajam” The Dumb. It was in this atmosphere that there appeared on the scene an unlettered person Muḥammad ﷺ. He presented before them an oration, and declared it to be the Word of Allah, because,

لَئِنْ اجْتَمَعَتِ الْإِنْسُ وَالْجِنُّ عَلَى أَنْ يَأْتُوا بِمِثْلِ هَذَا الْقُرْآنِ
لَا يَأْتُونَ بِمِثْلِهِ وَلَوْ كَانَ بَعْضُهُمْ لِبَعْضٍ ظَهِيرًا ○

If mankind and the Jinn were to gather together to produce the like of this Qurān, they could never produce the like thereof even if they backed up one another.

(Al-Isra, 17:88)

Such a proclamation was no ordinary thing. It came from a person who had never learned anything from the renowned poets and scholars of the time, had never recited even a single piece of poetry in their poetic congregations, had never attended the company of soothsayers. And far from composing any poetry himself, he did not even remember the verses of other poets. Such, indeed, was the man whom these masters in the art of eloquence used to call the founder of a new religion. If this claim were to be established as the truth, the entire structure of their ancestral faith would crumble and the age - old customs and traditions would be doomed for ever. This proclamation was therefore the greatest challenge to their literary prowess, as also a fatal blow to their creed and beliefs. This was also a call for combat against their national honour and personal pride that the haughty Arabs could never let go unchallenged. A hush fell over the whole galaxy of these stirring orators and fiery poets. Not a soul stepped forward to accept this challenge. After sometimes the Qurān proclaimed once again:

وَإِنْ كُنْتُمْ فِي رَيْبٍ مِّمَّا نَزَّلْنَا عَلَىٰ عَبْدِنَا فَأْتُوا بِسُورَةٍ مِّنْ
مِّثْلِهِ وَادْعُوا شُهَدَاءَكُمْ مِّنْ دُونِ اللَّهِ إِنْ كُنْتُمْ صَادِقِينَ ۝
فَإِنْ لَّمْ تَفْعَلُوا وَلَكِنْ تَفْعَلُوا فَاتَّقُوا النَّارَ الَّتِي وَقُودُهَا النَّاسُ
وَالْحِجَارَةُ أُعِدَّتْ لِلْكَافِرِينَ ۝

And if you are in doubt concerning that which We have revealed to our servant (Muḥammad) then bring a surah like thereof, and call your helpers besides Allah, if you are truthful. But if you do it not — and you can never do it — then fear the Fire whose fuel is mankind and stones. It is kept prepared for the unbelievers.

(Al-Baqarah, 2:23-24)

Their silence remained unbroken as before. None of them was able to compose even a few sentences to match the Qurānic verses. Just think that they were a people who according to 'Allāmah Jurjāni,³²³ could never resist ridiculing the idea in their poetry if they heard that there was someone at the other end of the globe who prided himself on his eloquence and rhetorical speech. It is unthinkable that they could keep quiet even after such repeated challenges and dare not come forward. There can be no other explanation of this except that these stalwarts of eloquence and rhetoric were helpless in meeting the challenge of the Qurān. They had left no stone unturned for persecuting the Prophet ﷺ. They tortured him, called him insane, sorcerer, poet and sooth-sayer, but failed utterly in composing even a few sentences like the Qurānic verses.

323: Ar-Risālah Ash Shāfiyah: Abdul Qāhir al-Jurjāni. Rasāil fi 'Aijāz ul-Qurān Dar ul-Ma'arif p109, Egypt.

It was not only that these fiery and powerful poets and orators were incapable of holding out against the Quran but many of them frankly acknowledged its amazing and magical effect. Imām Hākīm and Bayhaqi have quoted the following words of Walīd bin Mughīrah about the Qurān:

والله ان لقوله الذى يقول حلاوة وان عليه لطلاوة ... وانه
ليعلوا وما يُعلَى -

By God! The words which he speaks are extremely sweet and elegant. This speech shall overwhelm and cannot be suppressed.³²⁴

This Walīd bin Mughīrah was the nephew of Abu Jahl. When Abu Jahl came to know that his nephew was getting impressed with these words he went to him to admonish him. Walid retorted "By God! None of you knows the beauty or ugliness of a poetry better than I do. By God! what Muḥammad says has nothing to do with poetry."³²⁵

Concerning this same person Ibn ‘Abbās رضي الله عنه says that after the advent of the Holy Prophet ﷺ, when time of Ḥajj came close Walīd bin Mughīrah gathered all the Quraysh together and said to them that the months of Ḥajj were approaching and different tribes from all over Arabia would come, hence they should decide their strategy about Muḥammad so that no differences cropped up. The Quraysh proposed that they would say that Muḥammad was a sooth-sayer. Walīd said, "By God! His words are not the words of sooth-sayers". The Quraysh then said that they would say he was insane. Walīd said, "There is not even a trace of insanity in him." Quraysh then said that they would call him a poet. Walīd replied, "I am fully conversant with all the various forms of poetry. What he says is definitely not poetry." The Quraysh then said, "We would say he is sorcerer". Initially, Walīd rejected this idea as well, but finally agreed to it, pleading that his words do have magical powers and they cause separation between father and son, and between one brother and another.³²⁶

Similarly, there was 'Utbah bin Rabī'ah, a prominent leader of Quraysh who went to Muḥammad ﷺ to negotiate a treaty with him. Muḥammad ﷺ recited the opening verses of Surah Hā Mīm Sajdah before him. He heard them with rapt attention until the Prophet ﷺ went into prostration on the verse of prostration when he got up and in a state of bewilderment went home. People came to him to know the result of his talk with Muḥammad. He said, "By God! Muḥammad has recited such words before me that the like of which I have never heard before. I did not know what to say."³²⁷

There are many other instances preserved in the pages of history which denote that great and renowned scholars and poets not only failed to accept the challenge of the Qurān but were actually forced to acknowledge the deep penetrating effect of the Qurān through their words or actions.

Some non-Muslim writers have expressed the idea that may be someone had responded to the challenge and composed something on the pattern of Qurānic verses but possibly they did not reach us. Abu Sulaimān Khaṭṭābī (died 388 AH) who was the leading scholar in lexicon and literature, apart from being a renowned scholar in Hadith commenting on this view has made a cogent observation in the following words.

“This is an absolutely false conception because it has been always customary with the high and the low alike to maintain a record of important events for the benefit of posterity, specially of the events on which the attention of the people is particularly focussed. This matter (the challenge of the Qurān) had attained the widest possible publicity at that time, and it is impossible that if anything was brought forth against the Qurān would not have reached us. But if this is considered possible then it may be possible, too, that there may have been another or several other Prophets advented at that time and divine Scriptures may have been sent to them and these events did not reach us. When this is inconceivable, no less so is the idea that Qurān’s challenge was met.”³²⁸

However, some buffoons did compose a few ridiculous things which are still preserved in the pages of history and the Arabs have laughed at them. For example, someone composed the following sentences on the style of Surah “Al-Qāri’ah” and Surah “Al-fīl”:

الْفِيلُ مَالِ الْفِيلِ وَمَا أَدْرَاكَ مَا الْفِيلُ لَهُ مَشْفَرٌ طَوِيلٌ وَ ذَنْبٌ أَثِيلٌ
وَمَا ذَاكَ مَنْ خَلَقَ رَبُّنَا بِقَلِيلٍ -

Somebody else had composed the following phrases:

أَلَمْ تَرَ إِلَى رَبِّكَ كَيْفَ فَعَلَ بِالْحَبْلِى أَخْرَجَ مِنْهَا نَسْمَةً تَسْغَى
بَيْنَ شِرَاسِيفٍ وَ حَشَى -

328: Thalāth Rasā'il fi 'Ijāzī l Qurān p5, Darul-Ma'ārif Egypt.

Musaylimah Kazzāb had claimed the following sentences as "Wahy" revealed to him:³²⁹

يا ضفدع نقى كم تنقين لا الماء تكدرين ولا الوارد تنفرين

Then again, long after the revelation of the Qurān a renowned Arabic man of letters and essayist and translator of Kalilah wa D imnah 'Abdullah bin Muqaffā (D.142 AH) intended to write a rejoinder to the Qurān but just then he heard a child reciting the verse...

وَقِيلَ يَا أَرْضُ ابْلَعِي مَاءَكِ وَيَا سَمَاءُ أَقْلِعِي (هود: ٤٤) and at once he declared "I testify that it is impossible to echo these words and verily it is not a human composition."³³⁰

MIRACULOUS ATTRIBUTES OF THE QURĀN

It will now be proper to describe those important attributes on account of which the words of the Qurān are regarded as miraculous. Obviously it is beyond human power to encompass them all. However, within the scope of limited insight of man these can be divided into four headings. (1) Miracle of words (2) Miracle of syntax (3) Miracle of style, and (4) Miracle of system.

MIRACLE OF WORDS

No poet or scholar of any language, no matter how consummate in his art, can claim that he has never used any unpolished word in his writings because sometime one is compelled to use such words in order to express one's thoughts. But, it is a miracle of the Qurān that from the first to the last word (from Sūrah Fātiḥah to An-Nās) there is not a single word that is inelegant. Not only that but the placing of every word is such that replacing it with another word with the same eloquence and rhetoric effect is impossible. Arabic is an extremely vast language and one of the richest languages of the world in relation to its stock of words. Hence it contains numerous words with minor differences to express one meaning. Out of this treasure of words the Qurān uses only that word which is the most suitable in respect of its context, expression of meaning and the flow of style. This thing can be clarified by a few examples.

329: Bayān i'jāz il-Qurān, Khaṭṭābī- Thalāsa Rasā'il fil-Qurān p.50.51

1: In the pre-prophetic era several words were in use to express the meaning of Death (Maut) e.g.³³¹

S No	Arabic	English
1	موت	Death
2	هلاك
3	فناء
4	حتف
5	شعوب
6	حمام
7	منون
8	سام
9	قاضيه
10	هميغ
11	نيط
12	فرد
13	مقدار
14	جهاز
15	قتيم

331: Ibn S-idah Andlusi has enumerated all these words and given examples from the poetry of the Arabs (Al-Mukhaṣṣaṣ, Ibn S-idah v6, p115)

16	حَلَّاق
17	طَلَّاطِل
18	طَلَّاطِلَه
19	عَوَل
20	ذَام
21	كَفَت
22	جَدَاع
23	حُزْرَة
24	خَالَج

But most of these words reflected the ancient faith of Arabs that due to death the components of a man were destroyed for ever, with no possibility of a resurrection. This was because they did not believe in Resurrection, Hereafter and Reckoning. That is why all the words which they used for "Death" had a reflection of this view. If the Qurān had remained contented with erroneous impression of its conformity with these ancient interpretation of the Arabs, an erroneous impression of its conformity with these false notions about Death might have been created. Hence wherever the Qurān describes the reality of Death, it uses a new word in preference to the two dozen words named above and, thus, it has given to the Arabic language such a beautiful, short, concise and eloquent word that clearly depicts the reality of Death. The word is تَوَفَّى (Tawaffī) the literal meaning of which is "to receive something wholly." The word also clarifies that Death does not mean eternal extinction but it is returning of the soul to Allah, and thus whenever He would like He can reassemble all the components together and return the soul to it. This word was never used for Death before it occurred in the Qurān. And thus it is that while using other words for 'death' in "Al Mukhaṣṣaṣ", Ibn Sīdah has quoted examples from couplets of Arab poets but for "Tawaffī" he has quoted only the Qurān.³³²

2: In every language there are words which, in their phonetic effect, are not regarded as eloquent and welcome, but because other words do not exist to express their meanings people are forced to use them. But on such occasions the Qurān has used such elegant styles that they create feelings of ecstasy in any person with a literary taste. For example, all the various words that are used for baked bricks for building construction are considered to be crude, degraded and offensive to good taste viz أَجُرُّ (Ajurrun) قَرْمَدٌ (Qarmadun) and طُوبٌ (Toob). Now, it was intended to say in the Qurān that Fir'awn (Pharoah) ordered his minister Hāmān to bake the bricks for constructing a lofty palace for him. In order to describe it the use of the word brick was unavoidable, but the Qurān has described it in such a miraculous manner that it conveyed the meaning splendidly without suffering the burden of the unwanted words. It says:

وَقَالَ فِرْعَوْنُ يَا أَيُّهَا الْمَلَأُ مَا عَلِمْتُ لَكُمْ مِنْ إِلَهٍ غَيْرِي
فَأَوْقِدْ لِي يَا هَامَانَ عَلَى الطِّينِ فَاجْعَلْ لِي صَرْحًا

And Fir'aun said, "O chiefs! I know not that you have any god other than me. so kindle for me. O Hāmān, a fire upon the clay, and make for me a lofty tower."³³³

(Al-Qasas, 28:38)

3: There are some words in Arabic that are soft and eloquent in their singular form but their plurals are regarded unchaste. For instance, the word اَرْض (Earth) is a delightful word. It has two plural forms in use اَرْضُونَ and اَرْضِي and both of them are regarded as inelegant and their use affects the smoothness and flow of the language. But where the use of plural is unavoidable the scholars of Arabia were compelled to use these words. Contrary to this, the Qurān has used at many places the word سموات (skies) as plural and in conjunction with it the word ارض as singular and not used its plural anywhere. However, at one place "Seven earths" were to be mentioned and plural form had to be used. But the Qurān avoided it in a miraculous manner and yet adopted a style that the sense has been conveyed thoroughly, and not only that no burden was put on the language but its beauty had only increased. It says:

332: Al-Bayān li Mushkilāt il Qurān, Shaikh. Bīnori p56.

333: Ref Al-Māthl As-Sā'ir, Ibn Athīr p71.

اللَّهُ الَّذِي خَلَقَ سَبْعَ سَمَاوَاتٍ وَمِنَ الْأَرْضِ مِثْلَهُنَّ

Allah is He who created seven heavens, and of the earth their like. (At-Ṭalāq, 65:12)

Just see! The plural of سما (heaven) has been used here but the plural of ارض (earth) has been beautifully avoided and if one ponders over the mysteries and subtleness in it a stream of miraculous rhetoric could be seen flowing with grandeur and elegance.

4. Some unbelievers have objected to some words of the Qurān as being harsh. for example the word ضيضى, but they forget that although some words may be harsh in themselves but a writer or an orator uses them with such skill that they cannot be replaced with other word. For example, one of the neck veins is called اخذع (akhdaʿ). Two Arab poets have used it in their poetry but there is a world of deference in the use of both of them. One poet Abu Tammām has said:

يا دهر قوم عن اخذعك فقد

اصحجت هذ الانام عن شحرك

In this verse this word appears to be very harsh and heavy. But another poet 'Abdullah bin Sammah of Ḥamāsah has used it thus.

تلفت نحو الحي حتى وجدتنى

و جفت من الاصغاء ليتا واخذعا

Here the same word has been used with such a flow and elegance that it does not hurt one's aesthetic sense in the least. Rather, on the whole it fits in most beautifully in the tender texture of the couplet.

In the Qurān the word ضيزى (Dīza) has also been used with such matchless beauty that no other word, no matter how elegant it may be, can replace it.

أَلَكُمُ الذَّكَرُ وَلَهُ الْأُنثَى ○ تِلْكَ إِذَا قِسْمَةٌ ضِيزَى ○

What, are for you the males and for Him the females?

This indeed is an unjust division. (An-Najm, 53:21-22)

If we look at the words by themselves, the Arabic قسمة seem more appropriate than ضيزى. But the style in which it is used in the Qurān ضيزى is apt and (جائرة) or (ظالمة) would mar the flow of the language.³³⁴

334: All these four examples are from Yatimah Al Bayān by Maulana Muhammad Yusuf Banorī. This book is a prelude to Mushkilāt ul Qurān by 'Allāmah Anwar Shah Kashmiri. He has cited the examples from Mushkilāt ul Qurān and al-Māthl us Sā'ir fi Adab al Kātib wa Shāir by Allama Ibn Athīr.

MIRACLE OF SYNTAX

Having discussed the miracle of words let us consider the structure of sentences, their harmony and placement. Here also we find the miracle of the Qurān at its supreme perfection. There is such a grandeur, lucidity and sweetness in the arrangement of its sentences that nothing equal to it can be produced. Here, only one example may suffice. Extracting blood money from a murderer was regarded as a virtuous act among the people of Arabia, and several proverbial phrases were popular to express its advantages, القتل احياء لجميع (killing is collective life), القتل انفى للقتل (killing checks killing). These phrases were so popular that they were commonly used and were regarded as eloquent. The Qurān has also expressed the same sense but with what stunning effect! It says,

وَلَكُمْ فِي الْقِصَاصِ حَيَاةٌ

And in (the law of) equitable retribution there is life for you. (Al-Baqarah, 2:179)

From whatever angle you look at the sweep, brevity, lucidity, grandeur and import of this sentence. It appears to be a masterpiece of eloquence, and all the other afore mentioned sentences appear to be clumsy before it.

MIRACLE OF STYLE

The most brilliant exposition of miracle of Qurān is noticeable in its style and this can be perceived by anyone. The following are its striking miraculous attributes:

In spite of the fact that the prose of Qurān does not follow the rules and regulations of poetry, it is infinitely, more rhythmic and appealing than any poetry. This is explained by the fact that a man's aesthetic sense does not get the same pleasure from prose that it gets through poetry. Looking for its reason one finds that the secret lies in the arrangement of words that creates a particular sonic rhythm. In the ancient Arabic, Persian and Urdu poetry this is produced by the prefixed meters of the lines and verses. One's aesthetic taste gets a thrill when one hears the words of the same measure again and again, and when rhyming words are added to this measure the thrill is still more magnified. But the rules of meter and rhymes are not the same in every region and language. The people of every language fix different rules according to their own taste and temperament. The Arabs, for example have kept their poetry confined to such moulds of meter and rhymes that were designed by Khalil bin Aḥmad and others. In the Persian poetry the scope of measures was further expanded and new meters were adopted but more strict conditions were imposed in the bounds of rhyming words and their placements. Thus, in Arabic poetry قَبُور (Qaboor) and (Kabir) are considered to be rhyming with each other. If 'Qaboor' in one couplet is followed by 'Kabir' in the next it is not considered to be a flaw. But this is not allowed in Persian poetry. Similarly, if half the phrase occurs in one line and the other half in the following line of a verse it is not considered improper in Arabic poetry but it is highly so in Persian poetry; in fact such a verse is not regarded as a verse at all. Also, there occur so many omissions in Arabic poetry that sometimes the actual meter becomes quite distorted, but this does not occur in Persian poetry. Similarly, there is no concept of رَدِيف (Radīf)³³⁵ in Arabic poetry but a غَزَل (Ghazal)³³⁶ is regarded as insipid without 335: Radīf is the word or words that occur as the end-phrase of a verse and is repeated as such in every verse.

336: Ghazal: Special kind of poem whose every verse is separate in subject matter but has the same meter, rigidly rhymed and ends on Radīf.

Radīf in Persian poetry. Also, in the original Arabic poetry many kinds of the poem did not exist that are quite common in Persian poetry.

Despite such differences in Arabic and Persian poetry there exist a great deal of unanimity in the meters. But ancient Hindi poetry is still different. Here the weighting of words is done with the number of alphabets each word contains. If two words have the same number of alphabets they are considered in balance even if their motions and diacritical sounds may be different. Sometimes one finds a wide divergence in the meters or rhymes in Hindi couplets and even in the number of alphabets yet they are recited and sung with great gusto and the effect they produce is undeniable.

In this context the trend of English poetry is perhaps more liberal than all the others. In it line may have variable proportions in its metric length and there may be no consideration of rhyming, but a specific rhythm is produced by the syllabic pronunciation of words, and it is this rhythm that imparts pleasure to the people of that language.

It becomes clear from this discussion that there is no universal standard for the fixed rules of meters and rhymes for producing pleasure and symphony in the poetry. That is why such rules keep on changing in different languages and regions. But there is one thing which is common among all the languages and nations, and that is a "Balanced Sonic Rhythm", which means to arrange the words in a manner that their pronunciation and audibility are delightful to a man's aesthetic perceptions. But since man is powerless to liberate this common value from the established moulds of meters and rhymes, he feels bound to adhere to the rules and regulations framed within his own setting whenever he wants to create the pleasures of poetry. The miracle of Qur̄an is that it did not chose any of the rules of poetry prevalent in different regions of the world, but only adopted the common value of the "Balanced Sonic rhythm" which is the ultimate aim of all these rules and regulations. That is why the Qur̄an, despite being a prose composition, carries an inherent grandeur and elegance of poetry, and not only the Arabs but people all over the world experience an extraordinary thrill and impact when they hear it.

This explains very well why some of the idolaters of Arabia had termed the Qur̄an a poetry? Evidently, the popular definition of poetry does not apply in the case of the Qur̄an, and the idolaters of Arabia, despite all their faults did have enough sense to distinguish between prose and poetry. They were not unaware that for a poetic composition meters and rhymes were essential and that the Qur̄an was independent of them. Yet they called it poetry because they felt greater pleasure and effect than poetry in its style and symphony; and they knew that even without conforming to the restrictions of meters and rhymes it carries in full measure the aesthetic beauty to meet the demands of ecstatic feelings and poetic taste that cannot be obtained even with a rigid conformity to meters and rhymes.

What new principles have been adopted by the Qur̄an to create the effect of this permanent sonic rhythm? It is beyond human power to describe it because words and phrases cannot adequately translate the true effect that pervades the style of the Qur̄an. However, anybody having a literary taste and aesthetic perceptions can verify for himself the truth of our statement while reciting the Qur̄an.³³⁷

337: This discussion is adopted from al-Fauzul Kabīr by Shah Waliullah explanatory note. Details may be seen there in section 2 chapter3.

2: The scholars of the science of rhetoric have laid down three categories of "style": (1) Oratorical (2) Literary and (3) Scientific. All of them have their own separate spheres, distinct qualities and different occasions, and it is not possible to combine all the three of them in one single piece of writing. When making a speech you have particular style; when writing an academic treatise, you adopt a different style, and when writing literary prose your style differs from both of them. But the miracle of the Qurān is that it combines all the three styles together. In it the force of oratory the elegance of literature and the soberity of an academic piece all go together and none of them loses its force and quality.

3: All at the same time the Qurān's addresses happen to be rustic, villagers, educated persons, learned scholars and experts in sciences and its style impresses all of them equally. On one side, an illiterate person finds simple realities in it and he feels that the Qurān has been revealed exclusively for his own benefit, while on the other side, learned scholars and researchers discover such scientific truths when they study it closely, that they feel that this book is full of such deeper knowledge about the sciences and the arts that a man of ordinary understanding just cannot grasp them.

For a man of average mind the style of Qurānic reasoning is very simple and mostly based on arguments drawn from direct observation. It proves the complex philosophical concepts of Unity of Allah, Prophethood and Messengership, the Hereafter, Creation of life and Existence of God with arguments based on the direct observation of man; and drawing attention to Natural phenomena it has described such realities as may be easily understood by a man of average intellect. But if you go deeper into the same simple realities you will also find purely intellectual and logical arguments which satisfy also those fond of philosophical hair-splitting about everything. Quite in passing it has also resolved the complex problems of philosophy and science the solution of which has always eluded eminent and renowned philosophers.

4: If the same thing is repeated over and over again the listeners get fed up after a certain stage, no matter how distinguished may be the place held by the speaker in literature. The force of speech is lost and its impact is very much reduced. But with Qurān it is different. In it the same thing has sometimes been repeated scores of times and the same event has been described several times yet everytime one gets out of it a new pleasure, a new feeling and a new impact.

5: Elegance in a speech and its appealing sweetness are two contradictory qualities. Different style has to be adopted for each of them. It is beyond human power to combine both of them in one single piece. It is a miracle of Qurānic style alone that both these qualities are to be found blended together in most perfect synthesis.

6: The Qurān has treated with the height of eloquence those topics to which human mind could not give literary beauty whatever he may do to achieve it. For example, the "Law of Inheritance" is such a dry and intractable subject that even all the scholars and poets of the world cannot create any literary beauty while dealing with it, but then just go through the verses of Sūrah An-Nisā beginning with يُوصِيكُمُ اللَّهُ فِي أَوْلَادِكُمُ الْخ and you cannot help exclaiming that this is an extraordinary composition. All these verses have described "The Law of Inheritance" but in such a beautiful and elegant manner that deeply moves one's aesthetic sense.

7: Every poet and scholar has his own particular field and any departure from it makes his work colourless. In Arabic Imra-ul-Qays is the patriarch of Ghazal, Nābighah is famous for portraying fear and horror, A'āsha for beauty of aspiration and attributes and Zuhair for hope and desire. The same is the case with every language, but the Qurān has dealt with so many diverse subjects that it is very difficult to encompass them all. But whether there be incentive or admonition, promise or reprimand, advice and preaching or stories and examples, matters of faith or injunctions, everywhere it shows the highest standard of eloquence and beauty.

8: Brevity is the exclusive attribute of Qurānic style and its miraculous excellence in this respect is quite marked. Since the Qurān has been sent as a guide for all times to come, till the Last Day, it deals, in a pithy manner, with such a vast number of topics that one can get guidance from it in every age. Despite the passage of fourteen hundred years its subjects have not become out dated. Human life has suffered great many vicissitudes many a great revolution have taken place, but the Glorious Qurān has remained eternally fresh and it shall remain. It is not a book of history yet it is the most authentic source of history; it is not a book of law and politics yet in short sentence it has described such principles of statecraft and global conquest that will guide mankind for all times to come; it is not a book of science and philosophy but it has unravelled many mysteries of philosophy and science; it is not a book of economics and sociology yet it has given such concise guidelines in both these subjects that it is only now that all the sciences and arts of the world are approaching nearer to it after faltering for centuries.

MIRACLE OF SYSTEM

A miracle of the Qurān lies in the mutual link and coordination, and arrangement and system of its verses. If you recite the Qurān in a cursory manner it would apparently seem that every verse deals with an independent topic and there is no link among them. That is why the commentators of the Qurān stand divided into two groups. One group holds the view that the Qurān was revealed piecemeal over a period of twenty-three years therefore there is no need to look for any inter-connecting link between its verses and that each verse deals with an exclusive subject. Contrary to this, the other group maintains that as a book the Qurān is an organic whole and it is interlinked from the beginning to the end, and it must be studied from this angle. This second group contends that inconsistency in a book is a sign of its defect and the word of Allah is most certainly free from it. In response to this the first group argues that just as there is no order and arrangement in natural sceneries, but actually their beauty lies in their dissimilarity that somewhere there are meandering rivers, somewhere rugged mountains and somewhere valleys high and low, similarly the beauty and grace of the Qurān lies rather in this fixed structure. The topic of each and every couplet of a ghazal is different and nobody takes it amiss likewise dissimilar arrangement in the Qurān is no defect. But the fact remains that there is an exceeding graceful link between the various verses of the Qurān that cannot be denied. If an orderly arrangement was not intended for the Qurān there was no need to follow a different order for writing it down from its chronological order. The Qurān might have been recorded in the same order in which it was revealed. A different order fixed by the Holy Prophet ﷺ is a clear proof of the fact that the Qurānic verses are interlinked. But, of course, it is a rather delicate link and it needs a lot of deep thinking and insight to get to it.

In this way the individual verse remains intact and the generalisation of its word is not lost.

In addition to this, the general style of speech and poetry among the Arabs at that time was also the same that the subject matter therein had a distinct place rather than being bound and interlinked to each other. Hence, the Qurānic style was in conformity with the literary taste of that time. Thus at a cursory glance every verse would appear to be independent but a close look will reveal that the book is one continuous and interlinked whole.

The style adopted by the Qurān in its arrangement and system is, therefore, its most subtle miracle, and a reproduction the like of it is beyond human power. Many scholars have written exclusive books to explain the system of Qurānic arrangement and some commentators have made special references to it in their writings. Imām Rāzi's Tafsīr Kabīr is probably the most commendable work in this connection. He had a divine gift for elaborating the system of the Qurān. After him Qaḍī Abus Sa'ūd has also made special efforts to describe the attributes of the Qurānic system. Subsequent commentators have mostly been the gleaners from the above two.

A glimpse of the System of the Qurān can be seen in the following example. In Sūrah Al-Hijr it is stated

نَبِّئْ عِبَادِي أَنِّي أَنَا الْغَفُورُ الرَّحِيمُ ○ وَأَنَّ عَذَابِي هُوَ
الْعَذَابُ الْأَلِيمُ ○

(O Prophet!) Inform My servants that I am the Forgiving, the Merciful, and that My chastisement is the painful chastisement.

وَنَبِّئُهُمْ عَنْ ضَيْفِ إِبْرَاهِيمَ ○

And inform them of the guests of Ibrāhīm. (Al-Hijr:15:51)

After this, the well known event of the angels coming to Sayyidina Ibrāhīm عليه السلام has been described. Apparently there seems to be no connection between the two things. But a closer attention makes it clear that the incident of Sayyidina Ibrāhīm عليه السلام is in fact supporting the first sentence, because the angels who came to him did two things. First, they gave the glad tidings of a virtuous son, Ishāq to Sayyidina Ibrāhīm, and secondly the same angels had brought destruction of the dwelling town of Sayyidina Lūt عليه السلام. The first one was a manifestation of أَنَا الْغَفُورُ الرَّحِيمُ (I am the Forgiving, the Meriful), and the second was the manifestation of عَذَابِي هُوَ الْعَذَابُ الْأَلِيمُ (My chastisement is a painful chastisement). Thus the two sentences are closely connected but when looked at separately they also hold an independent place of their own.³³⁸

PROPHECIES OF THE QURĀN

Whenever Allah sends a Messenger and reveals His words to him, He lets him know some of the future events so that he may prove the words as from Allah. Although predictions are also made by astrologers, they are never certain, and even the greatest astrologer could never claim that all his predictions come true and no mistake is ever made. Moreover, it has been the tradition with Allah that the prophecies made by a false pretender of Prophethood are never allowed and not even the bitterest enemies of Islam can deny them. In these pages it is not possible to describe all of them in detail, but a few important events are being given as examples.

338: For details see "Bible se Qurān tak" by Kiranwi p357, v2. We have dealt with this subject briefly. Further reading: Bible se Qurān tak³, Maulana Raḥmat ullaḥ Kiranwi edited by the author of this book v2, p357. Also I'jāz-el-Qurān by 'Allāmah Shabbīr Aḥmad Uthmani.

VICTORY OF ROMANS

While the Prophet ﷺ was still in Makkah after having been commissioned to Prophethood and was being subjected to all sorts of persecutions by the idolaters of Makkah exactly at the same time the two great powers of Rome and Persia were repeatedly beaten and vanquished, and suffering a horrible loss in men and material, the Roman government was so utterly exhausted that, far from being in a position to launch a counter-attack, it could not even take a firm stand anywhere. This situation was a matter of jubilation for the pagans of Arabia, as they identified Iranians, for their being fire-worshippers with themselves and the Romans, as the people of the Book, with Muslims. The dominance of Iranians, in their eyes, presaged their own victory and defeat of Muslims. In this war the Persian armies were constantly winning against the Romans who were losing on all fronts and the Persian armies, subjecting important cities of Syria to fire and destruction, were advancing ahead at a terrific speed.

It was under these circumstances that these initial verses of Sūrah ar Rūm revealed:

الم ○ غَلِبَتِ الرُّومُ ○ فِي أَدْنَى الْأَرْضِ وَهُمْ مِّنْ بَعْدِ غَلِبِهِمْ
سَيُغْلِبُونَ ○ فِي بَضْعِ سِنِينَ لِلَّهِ الْأَمْرُ مِنْ قَبْلُ وَمِنْ بَعْدُ
وَيَوْمَئِذٍ يَفْرَحُ الْمُؤْمِنُونَ ○ بَنَصْرِ اللَّهِ يَنْصُرُ مَنْ يَشَاءُ وَهُوَ
الْعَزِيزُ الرَّحِيمُ ○ وَعَدَ اللَّهُ لَا يُخْلِفُ اللَّهُ وَعْدَهُ وَلَكِنَّ أَكْثَرَ
النَّاسِ لَا يَعْلَمُونَ ○

Alif-Lam, Mīm. The Romans have been defeated, in the land close by and after (this) defeat of theirs, they will soon be victorious within a few years. To Allah belongs the command before and after and on that day the Believers will rejoice in Allah's help. He helps whom He will, and He is the Mighty the Merciful, this is Allah's promise. Allah fails not in His promise but most of mankind know not. (Ar-Rūm, 30:1-6)

For those who were aware of the military situation concerning the Romans and Persians this prediction was absolutely incredible. Hence a chieftain of the Quraysh Ubbay bin Khalaf had a bet with Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه that he would give him ten camels if the Romans emerged victorious within three years, otherwise Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه would give him an equal number of camels. Betting at that time was not yet prohibited so Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه agreed. When Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه told the Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم of this bet he said that the Qurān had used the word بضع سنين (few years) and in Arabic the word بضع applies to a number between three and nine, hence he should extend the time limit to nine years and increase the number of camels. Consequently, Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه had the bet increased to nine years for a hundred camels instead of ten even though there were no apparent signs of the fulfilment of this prediction. In fact, even that the Persians kept marching forwards, until they reached the city walls of Roman capital, Constantionople. The renowned historian Edward Gibbon has commented on this prediction thus:

When this prophesy was made no prediction could be more unbelievable because the initial twelve years of Heraclius were evidently declaring an end to the Roman Empire. (Fall of Roman Empire).

(v.5 p.73-74)

But exactly seven years after his first defeat the Roman Emperor sallied forth from the capital and inflicted crushing defeats on Persians at several places, and after that the Roman armies were victorious everywhere.

Meanwhile a large number of Muslims had migrated to Madinah and their wars with the idolaters of Makkah had already begun, and the day on which 313 ill equipped Muslims were beating back at the battlefield of Badr one thousand heavily armed warriors of Makkans, came the news that the Romans had defeated the Persians, and it was then realised that the Qurānic verse:

يومئذ يفرح المؤمنون بنصر الله

On that day the Believers will rejoice in Allah's help was meant to denote the twin happiness of the Roman victory as well as their own victory at Badr.

NEWS ABOUT THE CONQUEST OF MAKKAH

When the Prophet ﷺ left Makkah for migration as a result of the persecutions of idolaters, and after three days of stay at the cave of Thaur came across the road to Makkah near Jahfah while on his way to Madinah quite naturally he had nostalgic feelings about his birth place and felt aggrieved at parting with it for ever. On this occasion the following verse was revealed to him.

إِنَّ الَّذِي فَرَضَ عَلَيْكَ الْقُرْآنَ لَرَادُّكَ إِلَىٰ مَعَادٍ

Surely He who has ordained the Qurān for you (O Prophet), will bring you back.³³⁹ (Al-Qaṣaṣ, 28:85)

At that time he had left Makkah in a state of privation and in view of this apparently there was no chance of this prophecy being fulfilled. But only within a few years he entered the city of Makkah as a conqueror and the prophecy was fulfilled.

WISHING FOR DEATH BY THE JEWS

During the times of the Prophet ﷺ the Jews used to say that success and prosperity in the Hereafter was destined for the Jews alone and that they would certainly go to the Paradise. The Qurān has replied:

قُلْ إِنْ كَانَتْ لَكُمْ الدَّارُ الْآخِرَةُ عِنْدَ اللَّهِ خَالِصَةً مِّنْ دُونِ
النَّاسِ فَتَمَنَّوْا الْمَوْتَ إِنْ كُنْتُمْ صَادِقِينَ ○ وَلَنْ يَتَمَنَّوهُ أَبَدًا
بِمَا قَدَّمَتْ أَيْدِيهِمْ وَاللَّهُ عَلِيمٌ بِالظَّالِمِينَ ○

Say (O Prophet): If the abode of the Hereafter with Allah is exclusively yours and not for others of mankind (as you assert), then long for death if you are truthful. And they will never long for it, because of what their own hands have forwarded. And Allah is Knower of the evildoers. (Al-Baqarah 2:94-95)

This challenge and prediction was made in Madinah in an atmosphere where there were numerous dwellings of the Jews in and around and the Muslims were constantly engaged in debates and arguments with them. If this challenge had not been given through Divine revelation the Jews, who were not prepared to lose any chance of falsifying the Prophet ﷺ, would have easily come forward and wished for death openly. In this way the debates that had been going on day and night would have been settled in a moment. But they were all struck dumb after the revelation of this verse and not one of them came forward to accept this challenge.

Whatever may be the opinion of non-Muslims about the Prophethood and Messengership of Muḥammad ﷺ even his enemies never denied the fact that in sagacity and wisdom and in intellectual capabilities and statesmanship he stood at the summit. Even a man with an ordinary understanding cannot be expected, without having the fullest confidence, to throw a challenge or make a prophesy, that may be negated by his opponents in a moment. It was never possible for a man as great as the Holy Prophet ﷺ in sagacity, wisdom and statesmanship to throw this challenge without the Divine guidance.

SAFETY OF THE QURĀN

Allah made no promise to preserve the Divine Scriptures revealed to different Prophets عليهم السلام before the Holy Qurān. Hence they could not exist in their original forms. Muslims believe that the books called Torah Zubūr, or Injeel are not the same heavenly Scriptures as they were sent down but there have been a lot of interpolations and changes in them.³⁴⁰ Even the People of the Book themselves admit it and the most staunch Jew or Christian cannot claim that every word of these Scriptures is Divine and no interpolation in the original text has been made. Contrary to this the Qurān had already predicted about it that.

إِنَّا نَحْنُ نَزَّلْنَا الذِّكْرَ وَإِنَّا لَهُ لَحَافِظُونَ ○

Surely We have revealed the Admonition (Qurān) and surely We are its Guardian. (Al-Hijr, 15:9)

This challenge has stood the test of time and during the fourteen long centuries not even a dot or an iota of its words could be destroyed nor any attempt at interpolation in its text succeeded. Islam has always been under attack of hostile forces which spared no efforts to subdue it, but none of them could succeed in destroying the Qurān or making interpolations in it even in those times when its transcriptions were limited in numbers and the means of publicity and printing were scarce. Look at Torah how Bukht Naṣ-ar, the ruler of Bab il (Babylon) and according to the traditions of Bani Isra'il nobody except 'Uzair (Ezra) knew Torah by heart, hence he got it rewritten through his memory after all its copies were destroyed.³⁴¹ According to reports from Banu Isra'il themselves, the ruler of Rome, Anitos Apifonis got every single copy of Torah burnt. Until no copy of it was left.³⁴²

The same happened to Bible (New Testament) so the original transcriptions became extinct as a result of the attacks of Titus of Rome, Emperor Nero, Domician, Deuclacian. But so far as the Qurān is concerned it had to face hundreds of marauders, on many occasions there was a general massacre of Muslims, their libraries were burnt and huge collections of their ancient books were thrown in the river, the entire Islamic world, was subjected to the onslaughts of Karmathians who did everything in their power to interpolate in the Qurān. But as promised by Allah, this Book has not only remained safe without any change but its propagation and circulation keeps on increasing in East and West alike. Supposedly, if all the written copies of the Qurān were to disappear even now there are hundreds of thousands of Muslims who are holding it as a sacred trust within their hearts. If anyone tried to change a single word in it even small children would find it out.

Furthermore, not only the words but also the meanings of the Qurān have been safeguarded in a manner that in itself has a history of its own. With the passage of time meanings of words of every language keep on changing. Thus it was that languages like Hebrew, Kaladani in which previous Divine scriptures were revealed, either totally disappeared or such drastic changes occurred in them that they were transformed into entirely new languages.

341: Encyclopaedia Britannica v3, p501, 1950. Bible.

342: Bible Nox version, Macmillan, London 1963.

But Allah has conferred the distinction on the language of the Qurān notwithstanding the thousands of changes and revolutions in the world it remains fully preserved. If anyone wants to know in what sense a certain word of the Qurān was used in those times he could easily find it.

We can gauge from this incident how Arabic was preserved. There were two mountains by the name of Akkāḍ over the city Zaraib in Yemen. The inhabitants of the mountain had vowed that they would have no relationship with outside people. They would not marry any outsider, have no friendship with them and will not travel beyond their mountains. If anyone travels to their place, he will not be allowed to stay more than three days. They placed these restrictions to prevent a corruption of their Arabic language. Historians have said that they are the only people whose Arabic language is in its original form and has, undergone not the slightest change whatsoever.³⁴³

In short, the truth of Allah's promise is becoming increasingly manifest with the passage of time that this Book will ever remain safe and He Himself would safeguard it. This prior communication has proved to be perfectly correct.

We do not intend here to describe all the prophecies of the Qurān but only a few of them. Even these few examples clearly denote that prophecies made by the Qurān have been fulfilled in such a miraculous manner that no human effort was involved in them.

343: Mu'ajjam Al-Buldān, Yaqūt Al-Ḥamawī v4, p.143, Part.14, Dar Sadīr, Beirut 1376 AH. Under root word عكوتان and Taj-ul-Urus Zebaydī under root word عكه.

DISCLOSURES OF THE QURĀN

Apart from the prophecies, the Qurān has also pointed out many scientific and historical facts which were not only unknown at that time but could not even be imagined. It will form an exclusive book if all such verses of the Qurān are collected together and explained in detail. In these pages it is not possible to compile them all, but a few examples are being given below.

- 1: The Qurān has stated that as Fir'aun (Pharaoh) was drowning in the sea he confessed Faith orally just to save his life. In response Allah said

أَلْأَنْ وَقَدْ عَصَيْتَ قَبْلُ وَكُنْتَ مِنَ الْمُفْسِدِينَ ○ فَالْيَوْمَ
نُنَجِّيكَ بِبَدْنِكَ لَتَكُونَ لِمَنْ خَلْفَكَ آيَةً

What! Now! And indeed before this you did rebel, and were of the corrupters! So this day We shall rescue you with your body that you may be a sign to those who come after you. (Surah Yunus 10:91-92)

At the time of revelation of this verse, and even centuries afterwards, nobody knew that the body of Fir'aun is still preserved, but it has been discovered only recently and is preserved in the museum of Cairo.

- 2: The Qurān has stated

وَمِنْ كُلِّ شَيْءٍ خَلَقْنَا زَوْجَيْنِ لَعَلَّكُمْ تَذَكَّرُونَ ○

And of everything We have created pairs that you may be admonished. (Az-Zāriyāt, 51:49)

When this verse was revealed the general conception was that male and female pairs existed only among human beings and animals or in some vegetations. But with the advancement of science the Qurānic reality is becoming manifest that male and female pairs exist in everything. It is a different matter that somewhere they are termed as male and female and somewhere as positive and negative or as electron and proton, or neutron and positron. In another verse the Qurān has also clarified that the occurrence in pairs in many other things is still not known to people. It says,

سُبْحَانَ الَّذِي خَلَقَ الْأَزْوَاجَ كُلَّهَا مِمَّا تُنْبِتُ الْأَرْضُ وَمِنْ
أَنْفُسِهِمْ وَمِمَّا لَا يَعْلَمُونَ ○

Glorified be He Who created pairs of all things which the earth grows and of themselves, and of that which they know not.

(Suah Yāsīn, 36:36)

TRUTH OF THE QURĀN AND NON-MUSLIM AUTHORS OF THE WEST

There was a time when the Western authors, motivated by deep Christian bigotry used to say openly that the Qurān was authored by Muḥammad ﷺ himself and that his claim of Messengership was self-conceived. But now the non-Muslim Western authors themselves admit that this claim by the earlier Westerners was based on prejudice and not supported by any proofs or arguments, and the whole life of the Prophet ﷺ belied their accusations. The renowned Orientalist of the present times Montgomery Watts has written that this was a common conception in medieval Europe that Sayyidina Muḥammad ﷺ (God forbid) was an imposter, who falsely proclaimed that he received revelations from Allah, but these concepts of the medieval ages were a sort of war propaganda and are now gradually fading away from the minds of the Europeans and Christian world.³⁴⁴

Professor Watt is perfectly right in saying that the false accusation against the Prophet was not based on any academic argument but in fact it was a part of propaganda which was considered necessary in the fight against the Muslims. He has refuted in detail those earlier Europeans who used to accuse the Prophet ﷺ of making false claims or of being afflicted with insanity or some disease, and says that in view of clear proofs the present day scholars do not endorse these accusations. Summing up, he writes that this misconception about Muḥammad should now be dropped from the topic of discussion, and Muḥammad should be considered as a man who proclaimed with full sincerity and honesty the Messages about whom he believed that those were sent to him from God.³⁴⁵

After this admission, justice demanded that the Prophethood and Messengership of Sayyidina Muḥammad ﷺ should have been accepted, but the centuries old misconceptions are not easily erased from the mind. Hence Watt and other authors of the present time admit on the one side that the Prophet ﷺ was sincere in his claim of Messengership, but on the other side it is difficult for them to give up their own religion openly and accept Islam. Hence, in order to find a midway they have invented a very strange explanation of Prophet Sayyidina Muḥammad's ﷺ claim for Prophethood.

They say that the revelations received by him were not anything extraneous but (God forbid) it was a state within himself which had resulted from a prolonged thinking and observations and to which he sincerely believed to be the voice of Allah or an angel. He was disgusted with the beliefs and customs of his people from the earliest days of his life, and that is why he used to meditate in isolation rather than follow their way of worship. For this purpose he started to spend several days at a time in the cave of Hira and as a result of prolonged meditation his belief in the Unity of Allah became firm, and also the urge to invite his people to his belief and rid them of idolatry. In secluded atmosphere of the cave with no one to talk to this idea was so deeply ingrained on his mind that he began to feel his own inner voice as an extraneous voice, and taking it as the voice of Allah or an angel he very sincerely and honestly proclaimed himself to be the Prophet.

344: Watt: Bells Introduction to the Qurān Ch.2p-17.

345: Watt. Bells Introduction to the Qurān Ch. 2, p 18.

This is the explanation about the Prophet's claim to Messengership that is now popular among "Western Intellectuals". Not one or two but scores of "Researchers" among the Orientalists believe in it, so much so that even some of those who profess to be Muslims seem to be impressed with this view. But a little thought over it will make it clear that their motivation behind this explanation is nothing but the fact that these "intellectuals" have already decided that they will not affirm Messengership of the Holy Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ no matter how convincing may be the proofs for it, and no matter how far-fetched, absurd and impossible explanations they may have to advance to refute it. The fact is that the explanation of the Wahy revealed on Sayyidina Muḥammad ﷺ given by Professor Watt and other Orientalists in the present age is such that one feels shy of treating it worthy of an academic and intellectual reply. However, the following facts may be kept in view.

- 1: Can it be conceived that the Prophet, about whom they themselves admit that he was endowed with the highest intellectual and practical abilities, could have mistaken his own subjective state as a voice from an angel for twentythree years and could never understand the reality of this extraordinary phenomenon? Wahy did not come to him only once or twice, but it continued for hundreds or probably thousands of times during these 23 years. Did he suffer from this delusion throughout this whole period?

- 2: Moreover, if he experienced this so-called "Subjective State" on account of the deplorable state of his people, condemnation of their heresies and assertion of the belief in oneness of God ought to have been the first things to have been done as a result of this experience. But we find that the first revelation neither refuted disbelief and idolatry nor preached Unity of Allah, nor did it contain any of his basic teachings. On the contrary, the revelation was:

اقْرَأْ بِاسْمِ رَبِّكَ الَّذِي خَلَقَ ۝ خَلَقَ الْإِنْسَانَ مِنْ عَلَقٍ ۝ اقْرَأْ ۝ وَرَبُّكَ الْأَكْرَمُ ۝ الَّذِي عَلَّمَ بِالْقَلَمِ ۝ عَلَّمَ الْإِنْسَانَ مَا لَمْ يَعْلَمْ ۝

Read in the Name of your Lord Who created. Created man from a blood-clot. Read; and your Lord is the Most Bountiful Who taught by the pen, taught man that which he knew not. (Al-'Alaq. 96:1-5)

- 3: It is inexplicable that after coming into play only once this "Subjective State" is extinguished and for three years he hears nothings of it. During this period he remains anxious due to the disconnection of Wahy. Then, after three years, "Wahy" is revealed again but still it carries no categorical refutation of idolatry nor does it mention anything about the misdeeds of the Arabs. The question arises that if this state had occurred due to his meditation about the heretical life of his people and his being filled with the concept of Unity of Allah why these "delusions" find no mention in the very early stages of Wahy and why did the predominant influence of this state convey him no message for three years?

- 4: If it was a "Subjective State" it should have been in full conformity with the thoughts of the Prophet ﷺ but at many places in the Qurān advice has been given against his personal views, and at some places his personal views have actually been refuted alongwith a mild admonition for example:

لَيْسَ لَكَ مِنَ الْأَمْرِ شَيْءٌ أَوْ يَتُوبَ عَلَيْهِمْ أَوْ يُعَذِّبَهُمْ

It is none of your concern (O Prophet) in the matter, whether He relents towards them or chastises them.

(Al-Imrān, 3:128)

مَا كَانَ لِنَبِيٍّ أَنْ يَكُونَ لَهُ أَسْرَى حَتَّى يُثْخِنَ فِي الْأَرْضِ

It is not for a Prophet to have captives unless he has given (the enemy) a sound thrashing in the land.

(Al-Anfal, 8:67)

عَفَا اللَّهُ عَنْكَ لِمَ أَذِنْتَ لَهُمْ حَتَّى يَتَبَيَّنَ لَكَ الَّذِينَ صَدَقُوا
وَتَعْلَمَ الْكَاذِبِينَ ۝

Allah forgive you (O Prophet) why did you permit them (to stay behind) till it had become clear to you which of them spoke the truth and you had known the liars.

(At-Tawbah: 9:43)

- 5: Even if it is conceded that the over-powering grip of an idea is felt like an "Extraneous voice", how is it that the prophecies made by this Extraneous Voice always came true, whatever commands given it gave ultimately proved to be correct and whatever words it spoke should prove to be the ultimate truths which all the scholars and orators of the world could not contest, until it brings about a sweeping revolution in the Arabian peninsula the like of which the world has never seen.

- 6: If it is accepted that the "voice" resulting from a gripping imagination has some reality then obviously it must be a reflection of the knowledge and thoughts of the person who hears it and anything that is not already in his knowledge and thoughts cannot be known to him through this "Voice". But just turn the pages of the Qurān and you will come to know that there are innumerable things in it of which the Prophet ﷺ had no previous knowledge, and it was "Waḥy" that imparted this knowledge to him for the first time, for example the following verse.

مَا كُنْتَ تَدْرِي مَا الْكِتَابُ وَلَا الْإِيمَانُ وَلَكِنْ جَعَلْنَاهُ نُورًا
نَهْدِي بِهِ مَنْ نَشَاءُ مِنْ عِبَادِنَا

You knew not what the Book was, nor the Faith, but We have made this (Qurān) a Light whereby We guide whom We will of Our servants. (Ash-Shūra, 42:52)

- 7: Particularly, there are the events concerning the ancient peoples about whom the Qurān has clarified and factually also it is undeniable that before the coming down of Waḥy the Prophet ﷺ was not aware of them. The Qurān imparted this knowledge to him for the first time. For example, after describing the incident about Sayyidina Nūḥ عليه السلام in Sūrah Hūd the Qurān says,

تِلْكَ مِنْ أَنْبَاءِ الْغَيْبِ نُوحِيهَا إِلَيْكَ مَا كُنْتَ تَعْلَمُهَا أَنْتَ

وَلَا قَوْمُكَ مِنْ قَبْلِ هَذَا

That is of the tidings of the unseen which We reveal to you (O Prophet) you did not know it, nor (knew) your people before this. (Surah Hūd, 11:49)

And also,

ذَلِكَ مِنْ أَنْبَاءِ الْغَيْبِ نُوحِيهِ إِلَيْكَ وَمَا كُنْتَ لَدَيْهِمْ إِذْ
أَجْمَعُوا أَمْرَهُمْ وَهُمْ يَمْكُرُونَ ○

That is of the tidings of the unseen that We reveal to you (O Muhammad). You were not with them when they (Yūsuf's brothers) agreed upon their plan, while they were devising. (Sūrah Yūsuf, 12:102)

Montgomery Watt and his like-minded admit that Prophet Muhammad ﷺ never told a lie, and "Not a finger can be raised on the integrity and character of Muḥammad."³⁴⁶

Hence, even according to them no mis-statement was possible in any verse of the Qurān. The question now arises that if this "Waḥy" was not an extraneous source of knowledge how did he know the facts about earlier Prophets عليهم السلام of which he had no prior knowledge?

8: Here we have mentioned only those things which even an ordinary person can easily understand and which become clear even with a cursory reading of the Qurān. If the Traditions that describe the state of descent of "Waḥy" and its earlier incidents are also kept in view, the purely imaginary interpretations of Watt and others stand automatically nullified. Some of those traditions have been described under the caption of "History of descent of Waḥy."

346: Watt: Bell's Introduction to the Qurān ch:2 p25.

HOLY PROPHET ﷺ AND THE PEOPLE OF THE BOOK

In order to prove that the "Wahy" (Divine Revelation) received by the Holy Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ was in fact his own "Intrinsic state" created as a result of predominance of imagination some Western authors have stressed that he was aware of the affairs of the earlier peoples and the same events were related by him in his "Specific State".

They say that he had heard the facts about previous nations from the Jews and Christians of Arabia. In this connection two hermits Buḥaira and Naṣūra are specifically named.³⁴⁷ The Prophet's ﷺ meeting with them during his journey to Syria is mentioned in different books of biography and history. Some western authors have expressed the view that these hermits belonged to Aryusi sect who were Unitarians, and (God forbid) he imbibed the concept of Unity of God from them, and also acquired from them the knowledge of previous books and the affairs of earlier nations.

Even a man with ordinary understanding possessing an iota of respect for justice and fairplay, will not believe that in the short and accidental meeting with the Prophet during his journey to Syria these hermits would have poured out before him all the knowledge they had within their hearts, and that, he absorbed it all overnight and through it founded a revolutionary Faith and religion. To begin with, the very assertion that Buḥaira and Naṣūra belonged to Aryusi is utterly baseless and false. This is not supported even by the weakest records. And no wonder. Because Aryusis were declared innovators and heretic as early as the fourth century C.E. and even any mention of this Aryusi was declared to be a punishable offence.

Athanasius and his followers had left no stone unturned to stamp out this sect. How would this unfortunate clan survive till the 7th century C.E. Could their remnants, supposing any of them were left, be in a position to become the head of a monastery in a city like Baṣra?

Secondly, the same reports which mention that during his Syrian journey the Prophet ﷺ met these hermits also say that it was a very short, fleeting and off chance meeting in which there could be no room for any learning or education. It is really strange that the people who can believe in such absurdities find it difficult to accept the fact of the descent of Waḥy (Divine Revelation) on the Prophet ﷺ.

Below we produce the most detailed report on the Prophet's meeting with Buḥayra, that would clarify the reality behind this meeting.

Abu Mūsā Ash'arī has been reported in Jām'e Tirmizī to have stated that once Abu Ṭālib (uncle of the Prophet) went to Syria with some other chiefs of Quraysh. There was a hermit living at the place where they stayed in Syria. They used to pass by even before but he had never paid any heed to them, but against his wont this time he came out of his hermitage and looked at each of them in a searching manner until he held the hand of Muḥammad ﷺ, and said,

هَذَا سَيِّدُ الْعَالَمِينَ، هَذَا رَسُولُ رَبِّ الْعَالَمِينَ، يَبْعَثُهُ اللَّهُ رَحْمَةً

الْعَالَمِينَ -

He it is who is the leader of all the worlds, he it is who is the Messenger of the Lord of all the worlds, whom Allah will send as a Mercy for all the worlds.

The chieftains of Quraysh asked him how did he know that? The hermit said that there was not a tree or rock that did not prostrate before him when they had come out of the valley, and trees and rocks prostrate only before a Messenger of Allah. He further said that the Prophet was also bearing the apple-shaped seal of Prophethood under his shoulder and with that also he recognised him.

The hermit then went back and arranged food for the entire caravan. When all were seated for the feast, Muḥammad ﷺ was not among them. The hermit asked where was he? He was told that he had taken the camels for grazing. A man was sent for him and when he came a cloud was casting its shadow on him. When he joined his people all of them had already taken seats under the shade of a tree and no shady spot was left. He sat down on one side and instantly the shadow of the tree hovered over him. The hermit exclaimed, "Look! How the tree's shadow has bent over him". He then stood up and said to the Quraysh, "Do not take him towards Rome. If the Romans saw him they will know him by his qualities and signs and kill him". While the hermit was talking he saw seven Romans coming towards him as if searching for some one. The hermit asked them what they were upto. The Romans said they were looking for the Prophet (whose tidings are present in Torah and Injīl) and who was about to come out on a journey in the same month as it was, and that the Romans are looking for him everywhere. The hermit then asked them if it was possible for anybody to stop anything destined by God. They said, "No" Then these vowed before the hermit Bah-ira that they would no longer pursue the Prophet, and stayed with him. The hermit then asked the Quraysh on oath as to who was the custodian of Muḥammad? People told him that it was Abu Ṭālib. The hermit then persistently implored Abu Ṭālib to send Muḥammad back until he did so.³⁴⁸ Some of the Ulama have questioned the authenticity of this report.³⁴⁹ But even if it is correct, one does not find, even with microscopic view, any clue that the Prophet could have learnt anything from Bah-ira. It was a very short meeting which did not extend to more than a few hours and then it took place a time when his age was just twelve or thirteen years.³⁵⁰ Can anybody in his proper senses believe that at this tender age a meeting lasting only for a few hours would have imparted to the Prophet ﷺ such a deep knowledge of the affairs of earlier nations that would enable him to challenge the people of the Book and expose the interpolations in their Books and point out mistakes in them?

The description of the Prophet's meeting with hermit Nastura is even more sketchy than that with Bah-irā. And if anybody says on this basis that the Prophet had acquired knowledge for the people of the Book, it cannot be explained as anything bigotry and animus against Islam.

But the point to ponder is that if the Holy Prophet ﷺ had learnt about these events from some people of the Book, why the idolaters of Makkah, who would go to extremes of exaggeration to refute him, remained silent on this matter? Why did they not charge that he was taught these things by so and so persons. It is the limit that the idolaters widely publicised that a certain blacksmith of Makkah was the teacher of Muḥammad ﷺ and just because the Holy Prophet ﷺ used to stop at his place for a few moments.

And certainly We know that they say "Only a mortal teaches him". The speech of him whom they allude to is foreign, and this (Qurān) is speech Arabic, manifest.

(An-Nahl, 16:103)

But none of them ever raised the objection that he had gained all that knowledge from Bah-irā, Nasturā or Waraqah bin Naufal. It makes it clear that this is an absurd objection that even the bitterest contemporary opponents of the Prophet did not like to even mention it.

SOME OBJECTIONS ON THE QUR'ĀN

Some Orientalists have raised objections on certain facts mentioned by the Qur'ān and have tried to impress that the Prophet ﷺ had heard about them from some scholars belonging to the People of the Book and erred while describing them. For example:

THE NAME OF MARYAM'S (MARY'S) FATHER

Encyclopaedia Britannica has raised an objection that Maryam was the name of Sayyidina Musa's ﷺ sister and also of the mother of Sayyidina Isa ﷺ. The former was the daughter of 'Imran and the Qur'ān (God forbid) confusing the two of them described the latter also as "Daughter of Imran".³⁵¹ It is too disgraceful that even such a universally hailed authority as the Encyclopaedia Britannica should have no qualms in giving place in it to such an utterly baseless objection. Had the author been able to establish through some definite proof that 'Imrān was not the name of Maryam's father, there might have been some weight in the objection. But the fact is that if they were asked, "What else was the name of the father of Maryam other than 'Imrān?" they would have nothing to say. And what beats it all is the fact that even the Bible does not mention her father's name. Even in the Encyclopaedia Britannica, under the chapter Maryam it has been admitted that "there does not exist any record in the historical documents of the first century C.E.

351: Encyclopaedia Britannica v13, p483 (Qur'ān).

about the parents of Maryam".³⁵² How strange it is that on one side is the ignorance and on the other side is the claim that Maryam's name mentioned in the Qurān was fallacious. Do the authors of Britannica think that if one man is named 'Imrān, all rights get reserved for that particular person and no one else by that name would come into being in future? In fact this only serves as a proof of the Truth of the Qurān that openly unveils those historical facts which were not known to people for seven hundred years. The Qurān has done it with such a bold and confident style that even its most bitter enemies could not dare to prove it wrong for fourteen hundred years.

Further, it is not confined to the name of the father of Maryam but all "authentic" Christian sources are silent on the topics of her birth, upbringing, childhood and early life, so much so that there is no mention about these things in any of the four versions of the Bibles. It was the Qurān that for the first time, revealed these facts to all people. In the beginning the Christian world objected to these "disclosures" too but now those ancient books on Christianity are being discovered in which the incidents are mentioned as they exist in the Qurān.³⁵³ How surprising it is that despite such manifest disclosures of the Qurān these "Intellectuals" raised objections on the Qurān that the name of the Maryam's father is not found in any Christian sources?

352: Britannica v14, p999 (Maryam).

353: Dictionary of the Bible by Hastings v3,p288.

HĀMĀN, THE MINISTER OF FIR'AUN (PHAROAH)

In the article "Qurān" of Encyclopaedia Britannica another objection has been raised that the Qurān has mentioned Hāmān as the name of one of the ministers of Fir'aun (Pharoah) while no minister by that name occurs in the Old Testament of the Bible. The author has expressed the view that in fact Hāmān was the minister of King Esvirus whose name is mentioned in the Bible, and Muhammad confused him with the minister of Fir'aun.³⁵⁴

This is also a thing with no head and tail and is based on the childish assumption that no two persons of one name can exist in the world. Further, the fact is that the story of so-called minister of Esvirus mentioned by the writer of this article in Britannica exists only in a doubtful book Apocryphal Book of Bible Esther of the Old Testament. This book is not regarded as reliable by the Protestants and hence it does not occur in the existing Protestant Bibles. However, the Catholics regard it as authentic as Hāmān or Āmān³⁵⁵ was not the minister of king Esvirus but his chief courtier³⁵⁶ and the story written in that book does not have even a distant relation with that of the Qurān. The Qurān states that Fir'aun had ordered Hāmān to build a high palace for him so that he could peep into Sayyidina Musa's ﷺ God. The Qurān further states that Hāmān remained the arrogant minister of Fir'aun till the end and was ultimately drowned with him. Contrary to this, there is no such story attributed to Hāmān (or Āmān) in the Book Esther. Haman of this book belongs to the time of the incident of Bakht Naş-ar, and the story only is that due to an accidental situation he gained proximity to King Esvirus but shortly afterward he ordered mass killing of the Jews. The Jewish wife of the King became his enemy and ultimately he was hanged by the King and in his place a Jew caller Murdeke was nominated.³⁵⁷

Anybody who has studied the book of Esther even in a cursory manner can fully realise that the story of this book does not have even a distant relation to the Qurānic story. If the Prophet ﷺ had confused Hāmān of the Qurān with Hāmān of Esther there should have been some resemblance somewhere between the two stories. The story as described by the Qurān does not occur in Esther or any other book of the Bible, and the story of Esther not only does not exist anywhere in the Qurān but is also not found in several hundred thousands of traditions to indicate that this had ever come to his knowledge. It is all the more surprising that it is only the Qurān that the present day Christian and Jew Orientalists accuse of confusing two people bearing the same name. They are never concerned with hundreds of such cases found in the Bible.

CHAPTER-8

SUBJECTS OF THE QURĀN³⁵⁸

When we pay a close attention to the subjects of the Qurān we find that they are divided under four major headings, and every verse of the Qurān can be placed under any one of the four headings.

- 1: Beliefs.
- 2: Commandments.
- 3: Stories.
- 4: Examples or Parables.

BELIEFS (ASSENTING ASPECT)

In the Qurān, three fundamental beliefs have been brought out: Oneness, Messengership and Hereafter.

Tawhīd or Oneness means that man should believe that every particle of this universe is the creation of One Being. He should worship the same Being, love Him, fear Him, beseech Him and have firm faith that every particle of the universe is His possession and nobody else can alter it without Divine guidance.

Belief in Messengership means that man should accept Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ and the prophets عليهم السلام before him as true Messengers of Allah. He should confirm 358: The author had written this article in 1383 AH. eleven years before this book was published. It was also published then in Bayyināt (the monthly journal). It is now included here with some changes and additions.

whatever the Prophets say.

Belief in the Hereafter means that man should believe in such a life after death that will be eternal, and in it everyone will be rewarded against the deeds done in the worldly life. If he had done good he will deserve the blissful blessings of Paradise, and if he had wasted his worldly life in evil deeds he would be destined for eternal doom of the Hell.

In order to prove these three beliefs the Qurān has given different kinds of arguments. By way of reasoning there are four kinds of arguments. To prove a thing a man either cites an authority that his opponent also respects. This is known as Recorded argument. Or he tries to prove it in a logical manner and this is known as Logical argument. Or he shows such evidences as persuade his opponent to draw the same conclusion as he has drawn himself and this is known as Observational argument. Or, he invites attention towards previous happenings to prove his point of view and show that people succeeded or failed depending on whether they heeded the advice or not. This type of argument is known as Experimental or Empirical argument. Or, he invites attention towards previous happenings to prove his point of view and show that people succeeded or failed depending on whether they heeded the advice or not. This type of argument is known as Experimental or Empirical argument.

In the Qurān each of these arguments is present and in this way the three fundamental beliefs are fully supported with arguments. Examples of these are given below;

RECORDED ARGUMENTS

To prove the Messengership of Sayyidina Muḥammad ﷺ Allah has stated:

وَإِنَّهُ لَفِي زُبُرِ الْأَوَّلِينَ ۝

“And surely it is (mentioned) in the scriptures of the ancients”. (Ash-Shu‘arā, 26:196)

In this verse Allah has addressed the disbelievers saying that while they reject the Messenger of Allah, their Books (Torah and Injeel) although they are interpolated still contain tidings of Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ.

This is a reference to the prophecies and tidings about him in the previous divine scriptures. For example it occurs in Bible.

"He came from Sinai, and rose on them from Sha'ir³⁵⁹ and shone his lights from the mountain of Fārān. He came with ten thousand pious persons and in his right hand was a fiery code of life for them." (Deutronomy, Chapter 33)

Obviously, no Prophet other than Sayyidina Muḥammad ﷺ coming after those who followed Sayyidina Mūsā عليه السلام appeared from the mountains of Fārān and Shā'ir and ten thousand pious men³⁶⁰ appear to be his Companions because their number at the time of conquest of Makkah was the same.

Sayyidina Isa عليه السلام is quoted in the Injil to have said: But when he, the spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you in all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatever he shall hear (from God) that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come. (John 12:15)

LOGICAL ARGUMENTS

There are many kinds of Logical arguments and almost each of them is present in the Qurān. The first and most widely accepted kind is that conventionally known as Qiyās Iqtiranī. A rule is generally described and logical conclusion drawn from that premise. The Qurān contains many such examples. In Surah ṬāHā it is stated that Sayyidina Mūsā عليه السلام felt some fear when he saw the ropes and sticks of the magicians turn into moving snakes. Allah comforted him with the following words:

359: The name of a mountain near Madinah, and Fārān is a famous mountain of Makkah it is now known as Jabal-Nūr.

360: In the 1958 Edition of Bible the words "ten thousand" have been changed to "hundred of thousands".

إِنَّمَا صَنَعُوا كَيْدٌ سَاحِرٍ ۖ وَلَا يُفْلِحُ السَّاحِرُ حَيْثُ أَتَى ۝

They have only wrought the guile of a sorcerer and a sorcerer prospers not wheresoever he comes from.

(Tā Ha, 20:69)

This is an example of Promiximal Hypothesis. The conclusion is drawn from a minor premise and a major premise. It tells as that (1) a sorcerer will not prosper and (2) from wherever he comes.

Besides there are a large number of such examples in the Qurān in which one component is dropped. For example, the unbelievers used to say how was it possible for a person to be brought back to life on the Day of Judgement when his bones had turned into ash after his death. Allah states that this is definitely possible because

بَلَىٰ قَادِرِينَ عَلَىٰ أَنْ نُسَوِّيَ بَنَانَهُ ۝

Yea We are are able to restore his very fingertipes.

(Al-Qiyāmah, 75:4)

- a) While there is, in this example, a minor premise, no major premise is presented and the final conclusion is not mentioned. It means that He who can restore even the phalanges of fingers, will logically restore decayed bones as well. Restoration of the fingers is much more difficult because the marks and lines on them are an amazing example of Allah's power and wisdom, the lines on one person's fingers do not match with any other person's. We may see a trillion examples. That is why the finger impressions have been regarded as an alternative to the signature of a person since ancient times, and even today the rule is held in all courts of Law and governmental procedures. Hence the Being Who can restore the complex and delicate can bring the bones back to life. Therefore it is wrong to deny the Day of Resurrection.

- b) The second kind of Logical argument is "Exceptional Hypothesis". This argument is presented generally to negate something. It has two components. That which is to be negated is the first form and is dependent on something else. In the second form that which is negated is placed. For example, if I want to prove that it is not daytime I would say, "If it was daytime, the sun should have been there, but since the sun is not there, it is not day time". There are many such arguments in the Qurān. For example, to deny polytheism and affirm Unity, it states

لَوْ كَانَ فِيهِمَا آلِهَةٌ إِلَّا اللَّهُ لَفَسَدَتَا فَسُبْحَانَ اللَّهِ رَبِّ
الْعَرْشِ عَمَّا يَصِفُونَ ○

If there were in them (the heaven and the earth) other Gods besides Allah, certainly they would both go to ruin.³⁶¹ (Al-Anbiya, 21:22)

Here too the hint is there but the conclusion is understood without being stated, that is "but the two of them were not discorded." Thus we know that there is no God other than Allah in the earth and the heavens.

- c) The third kind of Logical argument is known as "As-Sabr wat-Taqsīm" (Probing) through which the opponent's claim can be disproved. In this the opponent is told that his claim can be proved only if any of the several possibilities is found, and since none is present his claim is wrong. For example, the opponent claims that Mr. X is a member of Pakistan 361: If there were gods besides One Allah, they would have differed in their decisions.

Assembly. He would then be told that to be called a member of Pakistan Assembly it is necessary that he should be a member of National Assembly or of one of the Provincial Assemblies and since he is not a member of any of them he cannot be called a member of Pakistan Assembly.

Very clear example of this type of argument is present in the Qurān. The pagans sometimes used to prohibit male animals and sometimes female animals to themselves although they were permissible, Allah has refuted them by asking them the cause of their action. There could only be four reasons of prohibition, due to their being males, or due to being females, or due to something in the womb where they were created, that makes it prohibitory, or just because Allah has forbidden it. But all these four things are not applicable, because they did not prohibit only males but sometimes females as well, so neither the male nor the female can be the cause. The womb can also not be taken as cause, because in that case both males and females should have been forbidden together but they forbade only male or female at a time. They also did not forbid it in submission to the will of Allah because Allah did not give any such command. Allah said,

وَمِنَ الْإِبِلِ اثْنَيْنِ وَمِنَ الْبَقَرِ اثْنَيْنِ قُلْ أَلَذَّكَّرَيْنِ حَرَّمَ أَمْ
الْأُنثَيْنِ أَمْ أَسْتَمَلْتُ عَلَيْهِ أَرْحَامُ الْأُنثَيْنِ ۖ أَمْ كُنْتُمْ شُهَدَاءَ
إِذْ وَصَّيْتُكُمْ اللَّهُ بِهَذَا فَمَنْ أَظْلَمُ مِمَّنِ افْتَرَى عَلَى اللَّهِ كَذِبًا
لِّيُضِلَّ النَّاسَ بِغَيْرِ عِلْمٍ ۚ إِنَّ اللَّهَ لَا يَهْدِي الْقَوْمَ الظَّالِمِينَ ۝

"And of the camels (He has created) a twain, and of the cows a twain. Say (O Prophet)," Is it the two males He has forbidden or the two females? Or what the womb of two females contain? Were you witnesses when Allah enjoined you with this?" (Al-An'ām, 6:144)

Here Almighty Allah has refuted their evil theory 'as Ṣabr wat-Taqsīm'.

The fourth important subdivision of Logical Argument is the "Acceptance" approach. Here, it is argued with the opponent that his claim would not hold even if his conditions are accepted. The pagans used to say why an angel was not sent as a Messenger instead of a human being? This has been replied in the Qurān in several ways, for example,

وَلَوْ جَعَلْنَاهُ مَلَكًا لَّجَعَلْنَاهُ رَجُلًا

And had We made an angel (our Messenger), We would surely have made him as a man. (Al-Anām, 6:9)

That is, in the first place it is not necessary for the Messenger to be an angel, rather it is better that the Messenger should be a man. If we did send an angel for this purpose your object would not have been served because you cannot stand the sight of an angel in his original shape. Hence he would have to be sent in the shape of a human being, and you would have rejected him.

e) "Diversion" is another form of logical argument. In a logical debate it sometimes happens that the debater brings forward an argument but his opponent raises an objection to it. Then, he gives another argument rather than reply to the objection. This does not mean that his first argument was wrong, but that the objection is based on stupidity and, therefore, another argument is being given. This method is known as "Diversion."

In the Qurān, there is an example of it in the incident of Sayyidina Ibrāhīm عليه السلام. He had to convince Nimrūd and advanced an argument for the existence of Allah and Assembly. He would then be told that to be called a member of Pakistan Assembly it is necessary that he should be a member of National Assembly or of one of the Provincial Assemblies and since he is not a member of any of them he cannot be called a member of Pakistan Assembly.

Very clear example of this type of argument is present in the Qurān. إِذْ وَصَّيَكُمُ اللَّهُ بِهَذَا فَمَنْ أَظْلَمُ مِمَّنِ افْتَرَى عَلَى اللَّهِ كَذِبًا

Then, he gives another argument rather than reply to the objection. This does not mean that his first argument was wrong, but that the objection is based on stupidity and, therefore, another argument is being given. This method is known as "Diversion."

In the Qurān, there is an example of it in the incident of Sayyidina Ibrāhīm عليه السلام. He had to convince Nimrūd and advanced an argument for the existence of Allah and

His Unity

رَبِّيَ الَّذِي يُحْيِي وَيُمِيتُ -

My Lord is One who gives life and causes death".

On this Nimrūd got hold of an innocent person and had him killed. Then, he released a person who was sentenced to death, and said

أَنَا أَحْيِي وَأُمِيتُ -

I also give life and cause death. (Al-Baqarah, 2:258)

Sayyidina Ibrāhīm عليه السلام understood that the stupid person did not understand the actual meaning of giving life and causing death, hence he immediately presented another argument which silenced Nimrūd. He said,

فَإِنَّ اللَّهَ يَأْتِي بِالشَّمْسِ مِنَ الْمَشْرِقِ فَأْتِ بِهَا مِنَ الْمَغْرِبِ

Surely, Allah brings the sun from the east so you bring it from the west. (Al-Baqarah, 2:258)

This was a "Diversion" which silenced Nimrūd.

فَبُهِتَ الَّذِي كَفَرَ

Thereupon he, who disbelieved was confounded.

(Al-Baqarah, 2:258)

OBSERVATIONAL ARGUMENTS

This kind of argument pertains to "Observation". The Qurān has used this type of argument more than the others because logical and philosophical argument may silence a person but sometimes it does not appeal to the heart, and does not offer a cure to the sufferer of doubts. The Qurān does not intend to silence anyone but it aims at letting the truth penetrate into the heart. Also, logical arguments are useful for a particular group of people, and every illiterate and ignorant person cannot benefit from them. But "Observation" is so evident that even an illiterate villager cannot resist saying,

البعرة تدل على البعير والاثر على المسير فسماء ذات ابراج
وارض ذات فجاج كيف لا تدل على اللطيف الخبير -

When the excreta on the wayside point to a camel and the foot print to wayfarers, why the sky of domes and the earth of caves cannot point to the Subtle and All-Knowing Creator.

Allah has presented most of the Observational arguments each time with a new grandeur and style. Here is an example where arguments for Unity of Allah have been advanced.

أَمَّنْ خَلَقَ السَّمَاوَاتِ وَالْأَرْضَ وَأَنْزَلَ لَكُمْ مِنَ السَّمَاءِ مَاءً

رَحْمَتِهِ ءِإِلَهُ مَعَ اللَّهِ تَعَالَى اللَّهُ عَمَّا يُشْرِكُونَ ۝

Or, who has created the heavens and the earth, and sends down water for you from the heaven? So, with it

We cause to grow orchards of delight — it is not possible for you to cause the trees to grow thereof. Is there a God with Allah? Nay, they are a people who deviate (from the right path!). Or who had made the earth a fixed abode, and placed rivers in its midst, and placed thereon firm mountains and placed a barrier between two seas? Is there a God with Allah? Nay, most of the them know not! Or who answers the distressed one when he calls upon Him and relieves his suffering, and makes you to be successors in the earth? Is there a god with Allah? (But) little you are admonished. Or, who guides you through the depths of darkness on land and sea, and who sends the wind as heralds of glad tidings, before His mercy? Is there a god with Allah? Exalted be Allah above what they associate (with Him). (An-Naml, 27:60-63)

The Being Who is doing such important works and there is none else who can do them must be the One worthy of worship, and associating anyone else with Him will be utmost stupidity. Just think that the Being Who can alone do such great works, why should He be in need of an associate for minor works? These verses tell us that the Being Who does these important things which none else can do is surely entitled to be worshipped. To associate any other with Him is the worst form of absurdity. We must also ask ourselves how can He Who does all this need a partner to do minor things?³⁶²

It is also stated in support of the Hereafter.

362: The unbelievers of Arabia knew that Allah has created the earth and heaven and does all the things described in the above verses but they supposed that He has appointed the kings of the world as His helpers in the administration of these tasks.

Have they not beheld the heaven above them, how We have built it, and adorned it, and it has no cracks? And the earth, We have spread it out and cast on it firm mountains, and We caused to grow therein of every lovely kind (of vegetation), for an insight and an admonition to every penitent servant. And We send down from the heaven blessed water, then We cause to grow thereby gardens and grain of harvest, and tall date-palms having ranged cluster, a sustenance for the servants, and thereby We revive a dead land. Thus, will be the coming forth (from the earth). (Surah Qaf, 50:5-11)

In the Qurān things described in connection with human body and soul, realities of the universe, astronomy, vegetation and geophysics, mostly follow this line of arguments. And where the emphasis is on pondering over the universe the intention is that the man should thereby develop an understanding and conception of the limitless power of its Creator. He may prostrate himself before Him alone. Accordingly, the Qurān has unveiled many scientific realities. But all such things must be seen in the whole context of the Qurān otherwise to think of it as a book of Science will create many misunderstandings.

EXPERIMENTAL ARGUMENTS

The Qurān has invited attention to the experiences of the previous nations. Hence it has stated at various places.

أَوَلَمْ يَسِيرُوا فِي الْأَرْضِ فَيَنْظُرُوا كَيْفَ كَانَ عَاقِبَةُ الَّذِينَ

لِيَظْلِمَهُمْ وَلَكِنْ كَانُوا أَنْفُسَهُمْ يَظْلِمُونَ ○

"Have they not travelled in the land and seen how was the end of those before them? They were stronger than these in might, and they filled the land and built upon it more than these have built. And their Messengers came to them with clear proofs (of Allah's sovereignty). So it was not Allah Who wronged them, but they used to wrong themselves." (Ar-Rum, 30:9)

وَكَمْ أَهْلَكْنَا مِنْ قَرْيَةٍ بَطِرَتْ مَعِيشَتَهَا فَتِلْكَ مَسَاكِنُهُمْ لَمْ
تُسْكَنْ مِنْ بَعْدِهِمْ إِلَّا قَلِيلًا وَكُنَّا نَحْنُ الْوَارِثِينَ ○

And how many a township have We destroyed, that exulted in its (easy) way of living! So those are their dwelling places: they have not been inhabited after them except a little. And We are ever the Inheritors!" (Al-Qaṣaṣ, 28:58)

The purpose of narrating these experiences is to sound a note of caution that those people who had fashioned their lives on a wrong footing turning away from the light of guidance were ever pushed by Allah into deep caverns from where they could never come out.

BELIEFS (NEGATING ASPECT)

In addition to proving the above mentioned beliefs, the Qurān has negated many of the wrong beliefs and actions, and given satisfactory answers to different doubts harboured by poeple. In the terminology of the principles of Tafsīr the Verses of the Qurān that treat this subject are called Āyāt Mukhāṣamah (The Negating verses)

In this type of verses four kinds of astray poeple have been opposed and negated:

- | | |
|-------------------------|----------------|
| 1. Polytheist idolaters | 2. Christians |
| 3. Jews | 4. Hypocrites. |

POLYTHEIST IDOLATERS

The heathen Arabs were involved in any of the five wrong ways

1. Associating others with Allah. They used to ascribe partnership of idols with Allah in certain of His specific Excellences. Their belief was that although Allah was the Creator of everything yet, like the emperors of this world who entrust other poeple with administration, He too has delegated certain powers to others. He keeps control of the Universe but He has entrusted matters of subsistence etc. to the idols, and does not interfere in their affairs. Hence, request relating to these departments should be made to the idols. The idols should be worshipped to gain their pleasure that they recommend their worshippers to Allah. The Qurān has described their belief in the follwing words:

مَا نَعْبُدُهُمْ إِلَّا لِيُقَرِّبُونَا إِلَى اللَّهِ زُلْفَىٰ

We worship them only that they may bring us nearer to Allah. (Az-Zumar:3)

Idol worship under this pretext was originated by a man named 'Amr bin Luhayy and it spread day by day, so they were worshipping 360 idols at the time of Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ. The Qurān has rejected their behaviour in different manners. Sometimes it has asked them to support their blind conduct with proof. It has proved that Allah has authority over everything. He brings into existence merely by intending to do so. Then, why should He need the assistance of others in the administration of His Kingdom. The verse quoted above denotes this very fact. Sometimes, He draws their attention to the stone that lay under the footsteps but suddenly becomes a god after being beaten and carved out by chisel and hammer. Just by being given the names Lāt or Hubal they cannot become the cherisher or sustainer of people.

إِنْ هِيَ إِلَّا أَسْمَاءٌ سَمَّيْتُمُوهَا أَنْتُمْ وَأَبَاؤُكُمْ مَا أَنْزَلَ اللَّهُ بِهَا
مِنْ سُلْطَانٍ

These are naught but names which you have named, you and your fathers: Allah has sent no authority concerning them. (An-Najm, 53:23)

- 2: Similitude: The second wrong the idolaters indulged in was their comparison of Allah to themselves. Hence they said that He had a body and family and they described the angels as His daughters. The Qurān has refuted it in two ways. First, by a clear denial that Allah has children.

لَمْ يَلِدْ وَلَمْ يُولَدْ ۝

He begets not, nor was He begotten. (Al-Ikhlāṣ, 112:3)

Secondly, by denying in particular that He has daughters. They were told that they should think over it that while they consider it a shame and ignominy for themselves to have daughters, they assert that the Being who is Authority over the universe has daughters for Himself.

أَمْ لَهُ الْبَنَاتُ وَلَكُمْ الْبُنُونَ ۝

Or, has He daughters while you have sons?

(At-Tūr, 52:39)

مَا لَكُمْ كَيْفَ تَحْكُمُونَ ۝

What is the matter with you? How do you judge?

(Al-Qalam, 68:36)

- 3: Interpolation: This was the third kind of wrong that they practised. While they regarded themselves as followers of the religion of Sayyidina Ibrāhīm عليه السلام and said that they were exactly on his creed, yet they had innovated many subsidiary laws and orders for themselves. They circumambulated the Ka'bah in a naked state, whistled and clapped instead of offering Ṣalāh, and altered the order of the months. If the prohibited month came during a war they extended it for another month, and so on. Allah has exposed their absurdities and instructed the Muslims to refrain from such behaviour.

يَا بَنِي آدَمَ خُذُوا زِينَتَكُمْ عِنْدَ كُلِّ مَسْجِدٍ

O children of Ādam! Take (goodly apparel for) your adornment at every place of worship. (Al-A'rāf, 7:31)

وَمَا كَانَ صَلَاتُهُمْ عِنْدَ الْبَيْتِ إِلَّا مُكَاءٌ وَتَصْدِيَةٌ

And their prayer at the (sacred) House is nothing but a whistling and a clapping of hands. (Al-Anfāl, 8:35)

إِنَّمَا النَّسِيءُ زِيَادَةٌ فِي الْكُفْرِ

The shifting of the sacred month is only an addition into disbelief. (At-Taw-bah, 9:37)

- 4: The fourth form of wrong they committed was that they did not accept Muhammad ﷺ as the Messenger of Allah. They argued as to how a person who walked around and ate and drank like them could be a Messenger? The Qurān has spoken against this attitude frequently and explained that there is nothing wrong in a human being receiving Messengership and Messengers of Allah had always been human beings.

وَمَا أَرْسَلْنَا مِنْ قَبْلِكَ إِلَّا رِجَالًا نُوْحِيْٓ إِلَيْهِمْ

And We sent not before you (any Messengers) but men, from the people (of the towns), to whom we sent revelation... (Surah Yūsuf, 12:109)

- 5: Their fifth wrong was "Rejection of Hereafter" and they thought that resurrection after death was not possible. The Qurān has censured their stand in different verses:

أَوَلَمْ يَرَوْا أَنَّ اللَّهَ الَّذِي خَلَقَ السَّمَاوَاتِ وَالْأَرْضَ وَلَمْ يَعْْيَ بِخَلْقِهِنَّ بِقَادِرٍ عَلَىٰ أَنْ يُحْيِيَ الْمَوْتَىٰ

Do they not see that Allah who created the heaven and the earth, and was not wearied by their creation is Able to give life to the dead. (Al-Ah'qāf 46:33)

THE JEWS

The Qurān has also refuted the Jews. These people were wayward beyond limits and practised all sort of vices that the idolaters had in them (except denial of the Hereafter). They called themselves the followers of Torah but in fact they did not follow it. Rather, Torah, so to say, was at their mercy, and they made whatever alterations they liked in it. Their alterations in Torah were of three kinds:

- 1: Alteration in words, whereby they presented wrong translation to the verses of Torah.
- 2: Alteration in meaning, whereby they read their own meanings in the verses and invited the people to obey them. For example:

"It has remained well known to the people of every Prophet that an unbeliever and a transgressor are not alike, they are different and their fate are also different. An unbeliever is one who does not believe in the fundamontal truths of the natural religion such as Unity, Prophethood and Hereafter. Such a person deserves Hell forever. The transgressor, on the other hand, is one who does beleive in these fundamentals yet does not obey the tenets of religion in respect of his deeds and character, and pursues that which is severely prohibited. Such a person will not suffer eternal torment but will enter Paradise after undergoing his sentence in Hell. The same fact was mentioned in the Torah that a person who believed in Sayyidina Mūsa عليه السلام deserves Paradise, and if he does go to Hell it would be a temporary affair. This only meant that anybody who believed in the Messenger of his time in conformity with the fundamental concepts of natural religion will be subject to this procedure. The Jews interpreted it in the sense that believing only in Sayyidina Mūsa عليه السلام was sufficient for their salvation and, thus it was not necessary for them to believe in Sayyidina Muḥammad ﷺ.

وَقَالُوا لَنْ تَمَسَّنَا النَّارُ إِلَّا أَيَّامًا مَّعْدُودَةً

And they say "the Fire shall not touch us but for a number of days." (Al-Baqarah, 2:80)

The Qurān has clearly negated it. It says

بَلَىٰ مَنْ كَسَبَ سَيِّئَةً وَأَحَاطَتْ بِهِ خَطِيئَتُهُ فَأُولَٰئِكَ أَصْحَابُ
النَّارِ هُمْ فِيهَا خَالِدُونَ ۝

Yea! Whoever earns evil and his sins have encompassed him, so those are the Companions of the Fire, they shall abide therein. (Al-Baqarah, 2:81)

- 3: The third thing was that they used to conceal from the people many verses of the Torah. They did this so that they could retain their esteem in the society. They feared that people will become averse to them if they found out that their learned scholars did not obey those commandments, and thus they will lose the honour and dignity they were enjoying.

Thus, they had concealed the verses that predicted the advent of Sayyidina Muḥammad ﷺ and the verses about the stoning of an adulterer and they used to instruct each other not to disclose them to the Muslims. The Qurān has unveiled it to inform the Prophet ﷺ that this is what they talk to each other

أَتَحَدِّثُونَهُمْ بِمَا فَتَحَ اللَّهُ عَلَيْكُمْ لِيُحَاجُّوكُمْ بِهِ عِنْدَ رَبِّكُمْ

Do you speak to them of what Allah has disclosed to you, so that they may thereby contend with you before your Lord. (Al-Baqarah, 2:76)

THE CHRISTIANS

They called themselves the followers of Sayyidina 'Isā (Jesus) عليه السلام.

Their first wrongdoing was their "Belief in Trinity". It implies that God has three components that are blended together in some other respects, and separated in some other respects. The first part is "Father", the second is

"Son" and the third is "Holy Ghost". The "Son" part of Him came to this world as Sayyidina 'Isā (Jesus) ﷺ.

Allah has negated this silly, ignorant concept through the light of knowledge, and at many places in the Qurān He has emphasised that this was an unreasonable concept from which 'Isā (Jesus) ﷺ himself sought refuge.

وَإِذْ قَالَ اللَّهُ يَا عِيسَى ابْنَ مَرْيَمَ أَأَنْتَ قُلْتَ لِلنَّاسِ اتَّخِذُونِي
وَأُمِّي إِلَهَيْنِ مِنْ دُونِ اللَّهِ قَالَ سُبْحَانَكَ مَا يَكُونُ لِي أَنْ أَقُولَ
مَا لَيْسَ لِي بِحَقٍّ إِنْ كُنْتُ قُلْتُهُ فَقَدْ عَلِمْتَهُ تَعْلَمُ مَا فِي نَفْسِي
وَلَا أَعْلَمُ مَا فِي نَفْسِكَ إِنَّكَ أَنْتَ عَلَّامُ الْغُيُوبِ (المائدة: ١١٦)

إِنْ تُعَذِّبْهُمْ فَإِنَّهُمْ عِبَادُكَ وَإِنْ تَغْفِرْ لَهُمْ فَإِنَّكَ أَنْتَ الْعَزِيزُ
الْحَكِيمُ (المائدة: ١١٨)

And (recall) when Allah will say: "O 'Isā, son of Maryam! Did you say to mankind 'Take me and my mother for two gods besides Allah?' 'Isā will say: "Be Thou glorified! It is not mine to say that to which I have no right. If I had said it, thou wouldst indeed have known it. Thou Knowest what is in my mind, and I know not what is in Thy mind. Surely Thou and only Thou art the knower of the Unseen. I spoke to them naught but as Thou commandest me. "Worship Allah, my Lord and your Lord." And I was a witness over them while I dwelt among them, but when Thou didst take me, Thou wast the Watcher over them. And Thou art witness over everything. If Thou chastisest them, surely they are Thy slaves, and if Thou forgivest them, Thou are the Mighty, the Wise. (Al-Ma'idah, 5:116-118)

Like the idolaters, they also rejected the Messenger and drew examples for Allah and interpolated in the Book.

HYPOCRITES

The hypocrites were mischievous, ill mannered, coward and people of low moral courage. In their hearts, revered the same deities as were worshipped by other disbelievers, but they did not have the courage to proclaim thier beliefs openly. Hence, with their tongues they affirmed Unity, Messengership and the Hereafter but, in secret, they conspired against the Muslims.

Some of them proclaimed Islam merely to further their conspiracy and treachery against it. Their hearts, however, were full of the evils of disbelief and polytheism. There were some others who confessed Islam because their elders did so. For them the real thing was to follow their elders, hence if the elders had remained unbelievers they would also have remained unbelievers and if they had embraced Islam, these people made an outward demonstration of it.

Since these hypocrities did not have any fixed beliefs and they professed Islam orally, obviously a negation of their beliefs was out of question. However, the Qurān has unveiled their evil designs and conspiring nature at many places and exposed their baseness. Examples of this can be seen in Sūrah At-Tawbah and Al-Anfāl.

COMMANDMENTS

The next subject of the Qurān is "Commandments". These can be divided into three kinds.

1. Laws and Commands pertaining exclusively to the rights of Allah. We call this worship. These include Purification, Ṣalah, Zakāh, Fasting of Ramaḍān, Sacrifice and commands about Hajj. The Qurān has given basic guidelines about these matters.

2. Laws and Commands pertaining exclusively to the rights of people which are called Mutual Dealings, for example, trade, justice, witness, trust, pawning, eating of slaughtered animals, use of different drinks, bequest and inheritance etc. The rules relating to these matters are laid down in the Qurān itself.
3. Laws and Commands which are acts of worship in some respects and mutual dealings in other respects. In treating them the Qurān has described rules and instructions about Marriage and Divorce, Criminal Laws, Honesty, Torts, Wars (Jihad), Belief, Oaths and Partnership.

The Qurān wants to give to the world such a clean way of life that may allow man to live in peace and tranquility. That is why it implemented its orders in a gradual process. Any command was not given abruptly, but people were first mentally prepared for it and then it was implemented. An example of this is the prohibition of intoxicant drinks. The Arabs were so addicted to it that they had two hundred and fifty names for it in their language. To rid them of this evil habit is a miracle of the Qurān alone. When in the beginning the Holy Prophet ﷺ was asked about the permissibility of intoxicants, he did not at once say that it was forbidden but the Qurān said:

قُلْ فِيهِمَا إِثْمٌ كَبِيرٌ وَمَنَافِعُ لِلنَّاسِ وَإِثْمُهُمَا أَكْبَرُ مِنْ نَفْعِهِمَا

Say: In both is a grievous sin and some benefits for people but the sin in them is more grievous than their benefits. (Al-Baqarah: 2:219)

Good natured people understood thereby that it was better to give it up. Then after sometime, the commandment was sent:

لَا تَقْرُبُوا الصَّلَاةَ وَأَنْتُمْ سُكَارَى

Draw not near Ṣalah while you are intoxicated.

(An-Nisa, 4:43)

This brought about a general disliking for wine. Hence, after sometime again the command was:

إِنَّمَا الْخَمْرُ وَالْمَيْسِرُ وَالْأَنْصَابُ وَالْأَزْلَامُ رَجَسٌ مِّنْ عَمَلِ الشَّيْطَانِ فَاجْتَنِبُوهُ wine and gambling (game of chance) and (sacrificing) to idols, and divining arrows are an abomination of Satan's handiwork, so abstain from it. (Al-Mā'idah, 5:90)

BACKGROUND OF REVELATION

The Commandments in the Qurān were revealed in one of the two ways:

When Allah wished to change an evil custom among the Muslims or Disbelievers.

1. A verse or verses were revealed. For example, Sayyidah 'Āyshah رضى الله تعالى عنها states that it was customary with the Arabs that they used to take as their wives, female orphans under their custody, for the sake of their wealth or beauty. But, they did not pay them a dower similar to the one they paid on marrying any other woman.

Sayyidina Ibn 'Abbās رضى الله عنه has stated that some Arabs used to marry upto ten women at the same time, and when they could not support them they used to appropriate the property of orphans under their care.

'Ikramah رضى الله عنه has said that the Arabs married upto ten wives but did not treat them with justice and equality.

All such customs and deeds were wrong and needed to be changed in an Islamic society. So Allah revealed a comprehensive verse which eradicated all these evils.

وَأِنْ خِفْتُمْ أَلَّا تُقْسِطُوا فِي الْيَتَامَىٰ فَانكِحُوا مَا طَابَ لَكُمْ
مِنَ النِّسَاءِ مَثْنَىٰ وَثُلَاثَ وَرُبَاعَ فَإِنْ خِفْتُمْ أَلَّا تَعْدِلُوا
فَوَاحِدَةً

And if you fear that you will not deal fairly with the orphans (under your wardship), then marry such other women as seem good to you, two three or four; and if you fear that you will not act justly (towards them), then (marry) only one. (An-Nisā, 4:3)

Those who were not giving full rights to the orphan women under their care and taken as their wives were advised through this verse that it was not proper to marry these orphan women when Allah allowed them to marry upto four wives from among the other women.

This also set a limit of four wives for those who married upto ten women and then were unjust and unfair to them. It also emphasised that this permission was subject to strict justice and equality to all the four. If they feared that they would be unjust and unfair then they should be content with only one wife.

Thus a single verse put an end to several evils at the same time.

2: The other cause of the revelation of commands was an enquiry by the companions about any particular subject. Examples have been given in chapter 2 under the heading "Causes of Revelation".

STORIES

The third and important subject of the Qurān is Stories and Happenings. These can be divided in two parts (1): Events of the past, and (2): Future events.

EVENTS OF THE PAST

Of the past events, Allah has mostly described the events related to Prophets and Messengers عليهم السلام. He has also related account of pious men and disobedient nations.

The Qurān has described the events in the lives of twenty seven Prophets ﷺ whose names in chronological order are as under:

Ādam, Nūḥ, Idrīs, Hūd, Ṣāliḥ, Ibrāhīm, Isma'īl, Ishāq Lūṭ, Ya'qūb, Yūsuf, Shu'ayb, Mūsā, Hārūn, Yūsha', Hizqīl, Yūnus, Ilyās, Al-Yasa', Shamū'il Dāwood, Sulaymān, Zul-kifl, 'Uzayr, Zakariyya, Yaḥyā and 'Isā عليهم السلام.

In addition to the above Prophets the following ten persons and nations have also been mentioned in the Qurān.

Aṣḥāb-ul-Jannah (Companions of the Garden), Aṣḥāb-ul-Qaryah (People of a township), Luqmān, Aṣḥābus Sabt (People of Saturday), Aṣḥābur-Rass (Companions of Rass), Zulqarnayn, Aṣḥāb-ul-Khaf (cave-sleepers) and Raqīm, Qaum-e-Sabā (People of Sheba), Aṣḥāb-ul-Ukhdūd (People of Ukhdūd), Aṣḥāb-ul-Fīl (Lords of Elephants).

The aim of the Qurān in describing these stories is not to recall history but by recalling them, moral lessons and advice for the Muslims. It tells us too that the happenings of the previous nations were being recited by one who was unlettered and had never been in company of anyone who could teach him or impart that knowledge to him. Hence indeed he was being informed by Allah, and the source of the words he was reciting was not any human being but Allah Himself.

Further, there are treasures of knowledge in these narrations and every verse of the Qurān provides guidance to mankind in countless issues.

WHY REPETITION OF EVENTS?

Sometimes the same story is repeated in the Qurān several times. The events related to Sayyidina Mūsa عليه السلام for instance have been described seventy two times. Why it is so? One might feel that it would have been easier and simpler for the people if an event were narrated only once and relevant tenets described instead. Many differences would have been eliminated thereby.

In fact, there are several expedient reasons for such repetitions.

- 1: The Qurān was not revealed all at once but it was revealed gradually and it was sent to those people who had to face immense hardships and ever new trials in their early days. In fact it would not be wrong to say that their entire life was spent in warfares, sacrifices and hard work, particularly in the stage of their progress. They could have become disheartened if solace was offered to them repeatedly. That is why we find that the Qurān has described the events related to previous Prophets عليهم السلام when Muslims were faced with difficulties, and they were repeatedly told that they were not the only ones facing these trials but every people charged with the duty to invite to righteousness had passed trials and hardships but ultimately they gained success and victory.

For the same reason sometimes all the events of a Prophet do not occur in the Qurān at one place but different parts of the same event have been described at different places in relevance to the subject under discussion.

2: It becomes clear from the repetition of these stories that the purpose of the Qurān is not to give the details of various commands but it describes only the principles underlying them. The basic purpose of the Qurān is to reform the beliefs, exhort to moral behaviour and character-building. As for the details of the laws, they were taught and explained by the Prophet ﷺ through non-Qurānic revelations.

This approach of the Qurān is very convincing proof for the authority of Prophetic Traditions (Hadith). If the Qurān alone was meant to be the final argument in Islamic law, and Hadith had no such authority the Qurān would have described the Commandments instead of repeating the stories which would have been left to non-Qurānic revelations. Obviously, the purpose of narrating the stories would have been served in that way. But adopting the approach as has been done the Qurān has emphasised that its purpose is to impart to mankind correct belief and build their character. It describes only the underlying principles. About the details it says:

فَلَا وَرَبِّكَ لَا يُؤْمِنُونَ حَتَّى يُحَكِّمُوكَ فِي مَا شَجَرَ بَيْنَهُمْ ثُمَّ لَا يَجِدُوا فِي أَنْفُسِهِمْ حَرَجًا مِّمَّا قَضَيْتَ وَيُسَلِّمُوا تَسْلِيمًا ۝

But no, by your Lord! they will not believe until they make you (O Prophet) the Judge of what is in dispute between them, then find no vexation in their hearts over what you decide, and submit with full submission. (An-Nisa. 4:65)

- 3: The third wisdom in repetition of stories is that it reflects on the miraculous nature of the Qur̄an. It is human psychology that listening to the same thing over and over again tires the ears. Even an interesting story loses its charm. But the Qur̄anic narrations are such that every time the reader or listener gains a fresh interest and insight into it and one cannot resist concluding that Qur̄anic discourse cannot be the product of human mind.

FUTURE EVENTS

The Qur̄an has also made predictions and prophecies. These include the signs of the Doomsday, events of the Day of Judgement and the scene of that Day, torments of Hell, and the charms and pleasures of Paradise. Hence appearance of a strange animal on earth, coming of Gog and Magog, the Trumpet of angel Isrāfil عليه السلام, Reckoning Mutual Conversation among the dwellers of Hell find mention in the Qur̄an frequently.

PARABLES

The Qur̄an uses two kinds of parables. The first kind are used as examples to explain things, eg.

مَثَلُ الَّذِينَ يُنْفِقُونَ أَمْوَالَهُمْ فِي سَبِيلِ اللَّهِ كَمَثَلِ حَبَّةٍ أَنْبَتَتْ
سَبْعَ سَنَابِلَ فِي كُلِّ سُنبُلَةٍ مِائَةُ حَبَّةٍ

The similitude of those who expend their riches in the way of Allah is as the similitude of a grain that grows seven ears, in every ear a hundred grains.

(Al-Baqarah. 2:261)

Such examples have been used to state that the reward in the Hereafter will be seven hundred times what one spends in the way of Allah in this life. Sometimes, it is more than that. Man cannot understand it easily so Allah explains it through an example that just as a grain can grow seven hundred grains on the earth so the reward will be seven hundred times in the next world.

Secondly, the examples known as "Proverbs" have been used in the Qurān in two ways. There are some which gained coinage after the revelation of the Qurān. In other words, the Qurān invented them, for example.

هَلْ جَزَاءُ الْإِحْسَانِ إِلَّا الْإِحْسَانُ ○

Is the recompense of goodness anything but goodness?

(Ar-Rahmān, 55:60)

وَأَنْ تَعْفُوا أَقْرَبُ لِلتَّقْوَى

And that you should forgo is nearer to piety.

(Al-Baqarah, 2:237)

The second type of proverbs are those that are not proverbs actually but the meaning of the verse points to the one already in use. There are several such examples in the Qurān. For example there is a popular Arabic proverb

لَيْسَ الْخَبْرُ كَالْأَعْيَانِ or in Persian

شنیدہ کے بود ماندر دیدہ

(Hearing is not like witnessing)

This is the same as "Seeing is Believing" in English. This is used in the following verse of the Qurān. when Prophet Sayyidina Ibrāhīm عليه السلام said to Allah, "Show me how you give life to the dead". On this Allah said, "Do you not believe." Sayyidina Ibrāhīm عليه السلام then said:

بَلَىٰ وَلَٰكِنْ لِّيَطْمَئِنَّ قَلْبِي

Yea, but that my heart, may rest at ease. (Al-Baqarah, 2:60)

Similarly, a popular proverb runs:

لَا يُلْدَغُ الْمُؤْمِنُ مِنْ جُحْرٍ مَرَّتَيْنِ

A Muslim cannot be bitten twice (by snake) through the same hole."

This is reflected in a verse of Surah Al-Yūsuf. The brothers of Sayyidina Yūsuf عليه السلام, who had cast him down in a well earlier, requested Sayyidina Ya'qūb عليه السلام to send Binyāmin with them. He said,

هَلْ أَمْنُكُمْ عَلَيْهِ إِلَّا كَمَا أَمِنْتُكُمْ عَلَىٰ أَخِيهِ

Should I entrust him to you but as I entrusted his brother to you before? (Surah Yūsuf, 12:64)

THE SCIENCE OF TAFSĪR

(EXEGESIS)

- 2. PRINCIPLES
- 3. HISTORY

CHAPTER-1

THE SCIENCE OF EXEGESIS (TAFSĪR) AND ITS SOURCES

INTRODUCTION

The word "Tafsīr" is derived from "Fasr" which means "to open". Since the meanings of the Qurān are openly described, this science is known as the "Science of Tafsīr" or Exegesis. In the beginning this word was applied exclusively to the explanation of the Qurān.¹ During the era of the Prophet ﷺ the sciences were not yet grown much, so there were not many branches of the sciences. But when it acquired the shape of an organised knowledge and received attention from different angles, it became a very vast and developed science, and kept on expanding according to needs of the time. The technical interpretation of 'Ilm-ut-Tafsīr (Science of exegesis...) The science of Tafsīr is that branch of knowledge that deals with the method of the delivery of the words of Qurān, their interpretation, their individual and composite forms and expedencies. It includes the meanings derived from them in their composite state. In the summation of meanings due consideration is allowed to the background of revelation, the abrogator and the abrogated and equivocal stories.²

1: 'Allamah Zarkashī has defined Tafsir in brief as: علم يعرف به فهم كتاب الله المنزل على نبيه محمد صلى الله عليه وسلم و بيان معانيه واستخراج احكامه و حكمه {The knowledge through which one gains understanding of the Qur'an and comprehension of its commandments and wisdom.} (Al-Burhān, v1, p.13)

In the light of this definition the science of Tafsīr has the following components.

- 1: Methods of delivery of the words of Qurān, that is how the words of the Qurān may be read. Early Arabic commentators used to mention in detail the various recitals of every verse in their exegesis and for this purpose a separate science by the name of "Qirā'at" (Recitals) also exists. This has been dealt with briefly in the preceding pages.
- 2: Interpretation of the words of Qurān, that is, the lexical meanings of the words. For this it is essential to be thoroughly conversant with the science of lexicons. That is why we find numerous references to the scholars of lexicons and to Arabic literature in the books of exegesis.
- 3: Individual Forms of the words. This implies a knowledge of every word as to form, its root, how did it acquire its present form, its conjugation, and the meanings and attributes that go with that conjugation form. For this the knowledge of etymology is needed.
- 4: Rules regarding compound words. This is to know the meaning it conveys when it combines with other words? What is its grammatical analysis? Why the diacritical marks so placed and to what meaning they point at? For this, the science of Syntax and Meanings is essential.
- 5: The ultimate meaning of the compound phrase. It is to know what meaning a particular verse conveys in reference to its context? Depending on the subjects of the verse, help is taken from various sciences. Apart from these, sometimes one has to look at it from the point of language and literature. Hadith and principles of jurisprudence are also considered.

- 6: Summation of the meanings. Due consideration is given to the background of verses and details of short and concise expressions of the Qurān. For this purpose mostly the Aḥādith are relied upon. But this is such a vast subject that the knowledge of almost every art and science of the world can be incorporated in it because sometimes in a very short sentence the Qurān expresses an endless world of realities and secrets. For examples, the Qurān says...

وَفِي أَنْفُسِكُمْ أَفَلَا تُبْصِرُونَ

And also in your own selves — do you not see?

(Az-Zāriyāt, 51:21)

Just see that the entire subjects of physiology and psychology can be encompassed in the explanation of this short sentence, yet it may not be said with certainty that it explains fully the secrets of Allah's infinite Wisdom in creation as contained in this phrase. Hence through intellect, thinking, experiments and observation, different subjects become part of the science of Tafsīr (Exegesis).

TAFSĪR AND TA'WĪL

In the early period another word "Ta'wīl" was also used for "Tafsīr" and even the Qurān itself has used the former for its Tafsīr e.g.

وَمَا يَعْلَمُ تَأْوِيلَهُ إِلَّا اللَّهُ

But none knows its interpretation except Allah.

(Al-ʿImrān, 3:7)

Thereafter the scholars began to argue whether the two words were interchangeable and synonymous or different from each other?

Imām Abu Ubayd and some others think they are synonymous, while some other scholars have tried to point out differences in the two words, but so many different opinions have been expressed to denote these differences that it is very difficult to enumerate all of them. Some of these opinions are.³

- 1: "Tafsīr" is the name of explanation of individual words exclusively, and "Ta'wīl" is explanation of a sentence or sentences.
 - 2: "Tafsīr" means the description of apparent meaning of words but "Ta'wīl" means to explain the inherent meaning.
 - 3: "Tafsīr" is an interpretation of a verse which is not open to any other interpretation while Ta'wīl is to choose one interpretation out of the several possible in explaining a verse.
 - 4: "Tafsīr" is an unquestionable explanation while "Ta'wīl" may be challenged with another explanation.
 - 5: "Tafsīr" is the name of explaining the words, and "Ta'wīl" is meant to expound the lessons derived from them.
- And there are other differences too.
- 6: In fact, the opinion of Abu 'Ubayd appears to be correct that there is no real difference in the use of these two words. Those who hold the two words as different have not given us a definite and unanimous verdict through their divergent arguments. It seems that some scholars did try to give the two words different meanings but they could not give a convincing argument and gain universal acceptability. That is why the commentators even from the earliest times are using them as synonyms and one word is used for the other hence it is futile to waste time in this discussion.

SOURCES OF TAFSĪR (EXEGESIS)

After this brief introduction to the Science of Tafsīr, the most important thing to know is the sources of "Tafsīr" of the Qurān.

What are the available means through which Tafsīr (exegesis) of a verse can be determined? The answer to this question calls for some details which are given below.

First of all it should be understood that the Qurānic verses are of two types. Some verses are so clear and evident that any one who knows the language can easily understand their meaning that is why the question of any difference of opinion in the exegesis of these verses does not arise. The source of exegesis of such verses is "Arabic lexicon". Except for an expert view of Arabic language and common sense, nothing is needed to understand them.⁴

The other type comprises verses that are comprehensive in meaning and in which there is some ambiguity or difficulty in explanation or, in order to grasp their meaning, it is necessary to study the background in which they were revealed. Or, they deal with delicate legal questions or deep unknown facts and knowledge. Only a knowledge of Arabic language is not sufficient to comprehend such verses, but other information is needed to derive their proper exegesis. In the following lines the exegetic sources of these type of verses are described.

4: والحق ان علم التفسير منه ما يتوقف على النقل.... ومنه ما لا يتوقف.... الخ.

Al-Burhān, Zarkashī, v2, p171, chapter 41. and Al-Itqān , v2, p183. chapter 78.

Keeping this in view, there are six sources of the exegesis or Tafsīr of the Qurān. They are, the

- 1: Qurān itself,
- 2: Prophetic Traditions,
- 3: Sayings of the Companions رضى الله تعالى عنهم,
- 4: Sayings of the followers of Companions,
- 5: Arabic Lexicon and
- 6: Common sense.

Here, we present some details of each of these sources and their position in the science of Tafsīr.

FIRST SOURCE:

THE QURĀN ITSELF

- 1: The first source of exegesis of the Qurān is the Qurān itself, that is, sometimes its verses explain each other. Something is left unsaid in a verse but said in detail in another verse. For example, it is said in Al-Fātiḥah:

إِهْدِنَا الصِّرَاطَ الْمُسْتَقِيمَ ○ صِرَاطَ الَّذِينَ أَنْعَمْتَ عَلَيْهِمْ

Guide us Thou to the straight way, the way of those whom Thou hast blessed. (Al-Fātiḥah, 1:6-7)

It is not clear in this verse as to who are the blessed people? But at another place it is stated:

فَأُولَٰئِكَ مَعَ الَّذِينَ أَنْعَمَ اللَّهُ عَلَيْهِمْ مِنَ النَّبِيِّينَ وَالصِّدِّيقِينَ
وَالشُّهَدَاءِ ○ وَالصَّالِحِينَ

They are with those whom Allah has blessed — of the Prophets, and the truthful, and the martyrs, and the righteous. (An-Nisā, 4:69)

Similarly, it is stated in a verse:

فَتَلَقَّى آدَمُ مِنْ رَبِّهِ كَلِمَاتٍ فَتَابَ عَلَيْهِ

Then Ādam received certain words (of revelation) from his Lord, and He relented towards him. (Al-Baqarah, 2:37)

It is not revealed what those words were? They have been identified in another verse:

قَالَا رَبَّنَا ظَلَمْنَا أَنْفُسَنَا وَإِنْ لَمْ تَغْفِرْ لَنَا وَتَرْحَمْنَا لَنَكُونَنَّ
مِنَ الْخَاسِرِينَ ○

They (Ādam and Ḥawwā) said: We have wronged ourselves, and if Thou forgivest us not, and hath not mercy on us, we shall surely be among the losers. (Al-'Arāf, 7:23)

Further, at another place it is stated:

يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا اتَّقُوا اللَّهَ وَكُونُوا مَعَ الصَّادِقِينَ ○

O you who have believed! Fear Allah, and be with the truthful ones. (At-Tawbah, 9:119)

This verse does not tell us who the truthful people are. They are identified in another verse:

لَيْسَ الْبِرَّ أَنْ تُوَلُّوا وُجُوهَكُمْ قِبَلَ الْمَشْرِقِ وَالْمَغْرِبِ وَلَكِنَّ
الْبِرَّ مَنْ آمَنَ بِاللَّهِ وَالْيَوْمِ الْآخِرِ وَالْمَلَائِكَةِ وَالْكِتَابِ وَالنَّبِيِّينَ
وَأَتَى الْمَالَ عَلَى حُبِّهِ ذَوِي الْقُرْبَىٰ وَالْيَتَامَىٰ وَالْمَسَاكِينَ
وَابْنَ السَّبِيلِ وَالسَّائِلِينَ وَفِي الرِّقَابِ وَأَقَامَ الصَّلَاةَ وَآتَى
الزَّكَاةَ وَالْمُؤَفَّقُونَ بَعْدَهُمْ إِذَا عَاهَدُوا وَالصَّابِرِينَ فِي
الْبَأْسَاءِ وَالضَّرَّاءِ وَحِينَ الْبَأْسِ أُولَٰئِكَ الَّذِينَ صَدَقُوا وَأُولَٰئِكَ
هُمُ الْمُتَّقُونَ ○

It is not virtue that you turn your faces to the East and to the West, but true virtue is of him who believes in Allah, and the Last Day, and the angels and the Book (Divine revelations), and the Prophets, and gives his wealth, for love of Him to the kindred, and to orphans, and the needy, and the wayfarer, and to those who ask and to set slaves free, and (of him who) establishes the Ṣalāh and pays the Zakāh, and of those who fulfil their covenant when they covenant one, and are persevering in distress and affliction, and in the time of conflict. Those are they who are the truthful, and those—they are the God-fearing. (Al-Baqarah, 2:177)

This verse has made it clear that by "Truthful people" are meant those who possess the foregoing virtues.

There are several other examples in the Qurān but the three mentioned here may suffice.

- 1: The Qurān is explained from the Qurān itself through another recital that clarifies what is not clear from the first recital.

For example, in the verse describing the method of ablution, according to one recital it is read.

يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا إِذَا قُمْتُمْ إِلَى الصَّلَاةِ فَاغْسِلُوا وُجُوهَكُمْ
وَأَيْدِيَكُمْ إِلَى الْمَرَافِقِ وَامْسَحُوا بِرُءُوسِكُمْ وَأَرْجُلَكُمْ إِلَى
الكَعْبَيْنِ ط

Wash your faces, and your hands up to the elbows and wipe your heads, and (wash) your feet up to the ankles... (Al-Ma'idah, 5:6)

According to Arabic grammar, it may also be translated wash your faces, and your hands up to the elbows and wipe your heads and your feet up to the ankles.

But in another recital the word أَرْجُلُكُمْ (Arjulakum) has been used instead of أَرْجَلِكُمْ (Arjulikum) which can only mean "and wash your feet". Hence the second recital clarifies that the same is meant in the first recital as well and it cannot mean to wipe the feet.

Thus an exegesis of the Qurān based on uninterrupted recitals shall be reliable and certain. Although authentic recitals do not provide a knowledge that is certain yet they have a great importance in exegesis, but opinions about the rare recitals are divided. Some commentators attach no importance to them while some accept them as related by an individual alone in exegesis. This question is dealt with in detail in the Books of Fiqh.

- 3: Another form of "Exegesis of the Qurān by the Qurān, is to take into consideration the context of the verse under study. In this way the complex verse is sometimes explained. For example, in Surah Al-Aḥzāb the Prophet's wives are addressed in these words:

وَقَرْنَ فِي بُيُوتِكُنَّ وَلَا تَبَرَّجْنَ تَبَرُّجَ الْجَاهِلِيَّةِ الْأُولَى

And stay in your houses, and display not your adornment like the displaying of the (time of) former pagansim. (Al-Aḥzāb, 33:33)

Seeing that this is addressed to the wives of the Prophet ﷺ those who are ignorant of the principles of Shari'ah have claimed that the commandment for Hijāb (Veil) was applicable exclusively to the wives of the Prophet ﷺ, and that it did not apply to other women in general. But the context of the Qurān belies this claim. There are many other commandments addressed to the wives of the Prophet ﷺ in the verses that precede and follow. For example the commands are: do not be complaisant of speech, speak of virtue, establish Ṣalāh, pay Zakāh, and obey Allah and His Messenger ﷺ.

No sane person can say that any of these commands is exclusively meant for the wives of the Prophet ﷺ and other women are not obliged to obey them. Hence to pick out just one sentence out of the text that gives so many commands and to assert that it does not apply to other women, is contrary to the contents of the other verses and Aḥādith. The fact is that all these commands have a general application for all women. The specific mention of the wives of the Prophet ﷺ is meant only to reflect their greater responsibility and to express that they are under greater obligation to obey the Commands of Allah.

Similarly, it is stated in another verse:

وَإِذَا سَأَلْتُمُوهُنَّ مَتَاعًا فَاسْأَلُوهُنَّ مِنْ وَرَاءِ حِجَابٍ

And when you ask them (the wives of the Prophet) of any good, ask them from behind a curtain. (Al-Aḥzāb, 33:53)

Some ignorant people have said about this verse too, that it applies exclusively to the wives of the Prophet ﷺ although the next phrase of this same verse clarifies that this command has a general application for all women. It says:

ذَلِكَمُ أَطْهَرُ لِقُلُوبِكُمْ وَقُلُوبِهِنَّ

This is purer for your hearts and their hearts.

(Al-Aḥzāb, 33:53)

Obviously, to gain purity of heart is not limited to the wives of the Holy Prophet ﷺ alone but all Muslim women should gain it. Hence, the command given in this verse cannot be regarded as exclusive for some particular women.⁵

5: There are many more explicit reasons supporting the contention that the command of Hijāb is universal but we have limited ourselves here to the context of the verse.

Similarly, there is another verse of Surah Al-Aḥzāb, that states:

إِنَّمَا يُرِيدُ اللَّهُ لِيُذْهِبَ عَنْكُمُ الرِّجْسَ أَهْلَ الْبَيْتِ وَ يُطَهِّرَكُمْ تَطْهِيرًا ○

Allah only desires to take away from you all abomination, O people of the household (of Muḥammad) and to purify you with a thorough purifying.

(Al-Aḥzāb, 33:33)

Some people conclude from this verse that the people of the household includes the children etc of the Prophet ﷺ and not his wives. But the context of the Qurān clearly refutes this idea, because the verses preceding and following this verse throughout address the wives of the Prophet ﷺ. Then how may they be excluded from the term people of the household? The next verse particularly states:

وَاذْكُرْنَ مَا يُتْلَىٰ فِي بُيُوتِكُنَّ

And remember that which is recited (by the Prophet) in your houses..... (Al-Aḥzāb, 33:34)

The word بيوت (houses) in this verse signifies that people of the household includes the holy wives primarily and they cannot be separated from the meaning of the verse.

These are only a few examples. If we ponder over the Qurān we will learn that many of the exegetical issues are solved through a reference to the verses of the Qurān. Sometimes an exposition of a verse in this manner makes it so clear that a reasonable person will not refute it. Such an exegesis is final and certain. Sometimes, however, an exegesis made through a reference to the context is not so certain. Hence the commentators and other scholars may differ on it.

This was a short introduction to the "Exegesis of the Qurān by the Qurān." Some exegetics have expounded the entire Qurān in this manner in which every verse has been explained with the help of some other verse of the Qurān. One such exegesis is by 'Allāmah Ibn Jauzī and 'Allāmah Suyūṭī has mentioned it in his book Al-Itqān.⁶

Another valuable contribution of the same pattern is the recent effort of a scholar of Madinah, Sheikh Muḥammad Amīn bin Muḥammad Mukhtār Shanqīṭī. The book is named Aḍwā-ul-bayān fi Idāḥ-i-l-Qurān bil Qurān. In the Foreword of this book he has given the various forms of "Exegesis of the Qurān" with great clarity and details.⁷

SECOND SOURCE:

TRADITIONS OF THE HOLY PROPHET ﷺ

The second source of exegesis of the Qurān are the traditions of the Holy Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ. The Qurān has clarified at many places that the real purpose of sending him in this world was for him to explain the Qurānic verses through his words and deeds:

وَأَنْزَلْنَا إِلَيْكَ الذِّكْرَ لِتُبَيِّنَ لِلنَّاسِ مَا نُزِّلَ إِلَيْهِمْ ۝

And We have now revealed to you (O Prophet) the Admonition that you may make clear to mankind what has been revealed unto them. (An-Naḥl, 16:44)

In this verse Allah has made it clear that the purpose of his advent was to explain the Qurān. It further says:

لَقَدْ مَنَّ اللَّهُ عَلَى الْمُؤْمِنِينَ إِذْ بَعَثَ فِيهِمْ رَسُولًا مِّنْ أَنفُسِهِمْ يَتْلُوا عَلَيْهِمْ آيَاتِهِ وَيُزَكِّيهِمْ وَيُعَلِّمُهُمُ الْكِتَابَ

6: Al-Itqān v2, p.175.

7: v1, pp7-37. Printed at Darul Isphahānī, Jaddah, 1378 AH.

وَالْحِكْمَةَ وَإِنْ كَانُوا مِنْ قَبْلُ لَفِي ضَلَالٍ مُبِينٍ ۝

Certainly Allah has conferred a favour on the Believers when He sent among them a Messenger from themselves, who recites to them His revelations, and purifies them, and teaches them the Book and the wisdom, though before that they were certainly in manifest error. (Al-Imrān, 3:164)

Further, it has been stated in Sūrah An-Nisā.

إِنَّا أَنْزَلْنَاهُ إِلَيْكَ الْكِتَابَ بِالْحَقِّ لِتَحْكُمَ بَيْنَ النَّاسِ بِمَا أَرَاكَ اللَّهُ ۝

Surely We have revealed the Book to you (O Prophet) with truth, so that you may judge between people by means of what Allah has shown you. (An-Nisā, 4:105)

وَمَا أَنْزَلْنَاهُ عَلَيْكَ الْكِتَابَ إِلَّا لِتُبَيِّنَ لَهُمُ الَّذِي اخْتَلَفُوا فِيهِ
وَهُدًى وَرَحْمَةً لِقَوْمٍ يُؤْمِنُونَ ۝

And We have not revealed the Book to you except that you may make clear to them that wherein they differ, and as a guidance and mercy to a people who believe.

(An-Nahl, 16:64)

In these verses the Qurān makes itself clear that the purpose of sending the Prophet ﷺ in this world was only that he may teach the people the guidance of the Qurān and its deep knowledge and thereby guide them how to live properly. Hence it is proved from the Qurān itself that the Prophet's ﷺ teachings are a significant source of exegesis of the Qurān.

Even otherwise it does not call for a lengthy reasoning to stress that the correct meanings of the Book may best be explained by the one on whom it has been revealed. There can be no one more stupid than the one who claims, that the, exegesis is better known to him than the Prophet ﷺ to whom the Qurān was revealed.

Some people try to create a confusion that the importance of the Prophet's ﷺ sayings cannot be denied but we cannot rely upon them as they have not reached us through authentic sources.

But this type of thinking casts aspersion on Allah that on the one hand He has sent the Prophet ﷺ as the Teacher of the Qurān that every Muslim was obliged to follow till the Last Day, but on the other hand, He made no arrangement to preserve his teachings and explanations. Can such a thing be said by one who believes in the eternal wisdom and supreme authority of Allah, and who has read the following verse of the Qurān?

لَا يُكَلِّفُ اللَّهُ نَفْسًا إِلَّا وُسْعَهَا

Allah does not charge a soul save to its capacity.

(Al-Baqarah, 2:286)

Some people go to the extent of saying that the Prophet ﷺ was the Teacher of the Qurān as long as he lived but in our times his teachings are not needed. (I seek forgiveness of Allah for narrating it). This is to say that the Companions رضى الله عنهم needed a Prophet to teach them the Qurān although Arabic was their mother tongue, they were aware of the nuance and idiomatic use of the words, and they not only knew the revelatory background but in fact passed through it and they witnessed the causes of revelation of each verse. As against that people of our times whose mother tongue is not Arabic who do not go through the environment of revelation and the revelatory background claim that they do not need the guidance of a Prophet to learn the exegesis of the Qurān. Can any reasonable and just man swallow such absurd notions?

How reliable are the means through which the teachings of the Prophet ﷺ have reached us is a very detailed subject of study. Libraries have vast collections of literature on the subject of Ḥadith and Asmā'ur'Rijāl (the names and character of men). It is a different matter, to hunt for excuses to satisfy personal bents but if these subjects are studied with a sincere motive and unbiased mind one cannot resist drawing the conclusion that Allah has not made the teachings of the Prophet ﷺ obligatory without ensuring its preservation in a manner that is beyond human imagination. Leaving aside the other branches of the science of Ḥadith, if we just go through the subject of *Asmā-ur-Rijāl*⁸ an achievement of the people of which they may feel proud we will see that it has no parallel among any other people. Every Ḥadith from the times of the Prophet ﷺ till today is well recorded in relevant Books with full information of its analysis and the narrator. It includes details on his birth, his education and lessons on Ḥadith which of the narrators he had met, his general character, the state of his memory, the cautions he exercised in narrating a Ḥadith and the opinion in which he was held by his contemporary scholars and those after that time? These books exist even today and if anybody desires to find answers to these questions, he may go through the pages of these books and the answer will be there.

We do not intend to initiate a detailed discussion on the preservation of Ḥadith because a vast literature on this subject already exists and can be consulted for this purpose. However, we wish to point out that there is no logic in denying the use of the Traditions of the Prophet ﷺ for an exegesis of the Qurān whether viewed through the Qurān, common sense and historical events or through any other rightful method.

However, it is true that in today's vast collection of Traditions we find authentic as well as unsound narrations. Therefore, before taking a decision on the basis of a narration found anywhere, one must thoroughly verify the narration on the basis of relevant principles. The scrutiny of those narrations found in the books of exegesis is particularly essential because most of the commentators have just collected all sorts of traditions in their book without bringing their research and investigation into discussion in the Traditional manner. Hence only such persons can benefit from them who hold an expert view on the Science of Ḥadīth and its related subjects and who know the principles of picking out the authentic from the unsound narrations.

THIRD SOURCE:

SAYINGS OF THE COMPANIONS ﷺ

It is the Companions of the Holy Prophet ﷺ who learnt the Qurān directly from him. Some of them had devoted their entire lives to learn the Qurān, its exegesis and related knowledge directly from the sayings and deeds of the Prophet ﷺ. Their language was Arabic, and they were fully aware of the environment of revelation of the Qurān. Rather than rely on their linguistic excellence they learnt the Qurān verse by verse from the Prophet ﷺ. Imām Abu 'Abdur Raḥmān Sulmī a renowned Tābi'ī (epigone) scholar said:

حدثنا الذين كانوا يقرءون القرآن كعثمان بن عفان و عبد الله بن مسعود و غيرهم انهم كانوا اذا تعلموا من النبي صلى الله عليه و سلم عشرة ايات لم يتجاوزوها حتى يعلموا ما فيها من العلم والعمل (الاتقان، ص ١٧٦، ج ٢، نوع ٧٨)

Those (of the Companions) who used to teach the Qurān, such as Sayyidina ‘Uthmān bin ‘Affān رضي الله عنه and Sayyidina ‘Abdullah bin Mas‘ūd رضي الله عنه and others told us that they did not proceed further with their lessons until they had learnt ten verses from the Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم and until they had received all knowledge and practical applications related to it.⁹

This is why Sayyidina Anas رضي الله عنه has been reported in Musnad Ahmad to have said:

كان الرجل اذا قرأ البقرة و آل عمران جد في اعيننا (الاتقان، ص ١٧٦، ج ٢، نوع ٧٨)

When some one had learnt Sūrah Al-Baqarah and Sūrah Al-‘Imrān he was regarded very highly in our eyes.¹⁰ And it is narrated in Mu’-attā Imām Mālik that:

اقام ابن عمر على حفظ البقرة ثمان سنين (الاتقان، ص ١٧٦، ج ٢، نوع ٧٨)
‘Abdullah bin ‘Umar took eight years to memorise Sūrah Al-Baqarah.¹¹

Obviously Sayyidina ‘Abdullah bin ‘Umar رضي الله عنه did not have such a weak memory as to take eight years just to memorise the words of this Surah. It took him so long actually to learn the interpretation and other relevant knowledge alongwith memorising the words.

9: Al-Itqān, v2, p176 Chapter 78

10: Al-Itqān v2, p 176 Chapter 78

11: Al-Itqān v2, p176, Chapter 78

And Sayyidina ‘Abdullah bin Mas‘ūd has said:

والذى لا اله غيره ما نزلت اية من كتاب الله الا وانا اعلم فيمن
نزلت واين نزلت ولو اعلم احدا اعلم بكتاب الله منى تناله
المطايا لآتيته (تفسير ابن كثير، ص ٢٠٣، ج ١)

By the Being except whom there is none worthy of worship, no verse of the Qurān is revealed about which I do not know where and for whom it was revealed. And if I hear of anyone who knows the Book of Allah more than me and the means of transport is available to me I would certainly go to him.¹²

Hence, after the traditions of the Holy Prophet ﷺ the third source of exegesis of the Qurān are the statements of the Companions who had devoted time and effort to learn it. But even here certain factors must be kept in view.

- 1: Even in the exegetic sayings of the Companions رضى الله عنهم we come across authentic as well as unsound narrations. Hence, they too must be scrutinised on the principles of Ḥadith before placing any reliance on them.
- 2: Sayings of the Companions ﷺ would be cited only when an explicit commentary of a verse by the Holy Prophet ﷺ is not available through authentic means. If such an explanation is found in the authentic traditions, the statements of the Companions رضى الله عنهم will only have a supportive value, but if any of these statements differ from the Prophetic tradition, it shall not be acceptable.
- 3: When there is no explanation available from the Holy Prophet ﷺ and there exists no difference in the various explanations of the Companions ﷺ their view would be adopted.

- 4: When there are differences in the various exegesis given by the Companions and if harmony can be brought about among them then it would be adopted. But if it is not possible to harmonise them we then shall adopt an exegsis which an adept scholar deduces from them through established reasoning.¹³

FOURTH SOURCE:

SAYINGS OF TĀBĪ'Ī (SUCCESSORS OF THE COMPANIONS رضى الله عنهم)

Scholars differ whether the sayings of a Tābi'ī can be a conclusive argument in exegesis or not? Ibn Kathīr has stated that if a Tābi'ī has reported an exegesis from a Companion it will have the same status as that of a Companion. But if he gives his own interpretation then it will be seen whether another Tābi'ī differs from him. If that is so, his interpretation will not be acceptable and conclusion will be drawn on the basis of other sources of exegesis. If no difference exists among the Tābi'īn their opinion will be acceptable without doubt.

FIFTH SOURCE:

ARABIC LANGUAGE

It has been asserted earlier that the only source for interpretation of a Qurānic verse will be the Arabic language if its meaning is clear, and no ambiguity, doubt or confusion exists, nor any historical background is required to understand it. But when one is faced with ambiguity or deeper sense or religious laws are being drawn from the verse, interpretation may not be made by means of Arabic 13: This principle is summarised from Al-Burhān v2, p172, and Al-Itqān v2, pp176-178.

Lexicon alone. In such a situation the basic sources of exegesis would be the Qurān itself, Prophetic Traditions and statements of the Companions رضى الله تعالى عنهم and the Tābi'īn. Only after that will recourse be had to the Arabic language because Arabic is a very vast language and its words are used in several meanings, and a single sentence may be interpreted in several ways. Hence any inference drawn on the basis of language also may result in confusion. That is why some authorities reject language alone as a source of exegesis. Imām Muḥammad رحمة الله عليه is reported to have said that he considers an exegesis through lexicon to be undersirable. But 'Allamah Zarkashī states that Imām Muḥammad did not mean to ignore the role of lexicon in the Science of Exegesis altogether, but he meant that it is not permitted to choose vague meanings in preference to the most apparent and appropriate interpretations. Evidently, the Qurān has been revealed on the idiom of the language of the Arabs. Hence whenever the Qurān and Ḥadith or sayings of the Companions رضى الله عنهم do not offer an interpretation of a verse, it would be interpreted in the light of the idiom of the language, choice of vague meanings derived from Arabic poetry but not used in ordinary conversation is totally wrong, although found in dictionaries.¹⁴

This may be understood through an example.

The Qurān states that when Banu Isra'īl asked Sayyidina Mūsā عليه السلام: for water, Allah gave him the order:

فَقُلْنَا اضْرِبْ بِعَصَاكَ الْحَجَرَ (البقرة: ٦٠)

And strike with your staff the rock.

If this sentence is spoken before any Arabic knowing person he would clearly understand from it that it is a command to strike the staff against the stone, and it would be a valid interpretation of this sentence. But, Sir Syed Ahmad Khan has claimed on the basis of vague usages of the language that this sentence means, "Walk on this rock with the support of your staff."¹⁵ Here the meaning of the word اضرب (strike) has been taken as walk instead of strike and that of الحجر (stone or rock). This meaning is imposed because even if a vague reference is available in the books of language the normal usage rejects it altogether.¹⁶ Imām Ahmad has said that it is forbidden to draw such interpretations on linguistic grounds. No sane person can subscribe to it, either.

SIXTH SOURCE:

COMMON SENSE

In fact, common sense is needed for every thing in this world, and, obviously, it is required to draw interpretation from the above mentioned five sources also. But we wish to point it out as a constant sources of exegesis. The Qurān is an endless ocean of deep mystic meanings. By means of the above five sources its subjects can, of course, be understood to the extent required but as far as its mysteries and commands are concerned, it can never be said that a climax has been reached and there is no room for any further deliberation. On the contrary, the door to ponder over and deliberate on its inner meanings shall remain open till the Last Day. And whoever has been blessed with insight and fear of Almighty Allah may discover ever new 15: Tafsīr ul Qurān, Sir Syed Ahmad Khan, v1. p91. Lahore.

16: We have quoted him here by way of example alone otherwise his explanation does not find support in language too. There are some errors on that point also to for example when used to imply walk ضرب is followed by في الارض (واذا ضربتم في الارض) which is not found here.

realities. This is why the commentators in every age have made additions to this chapter according to their understanding. This is exactly what the Prophet ﷺ meant when he prayed for Sayyidina ‘Abdullah Ibn ‘Abbās ؓ in these words:

اللهم علمه التاويل وفقهه في الدين

O Allah! Bestow on him the Sciences of Exegesis and Comprehension of religion.¹⁷

But it should be remembered in this connection that only such realities and deeper meanings drawn through reasoning shall be reliable as do not clash with other religious principles and the foregoing five sources. If anything is deduced by disregarding the rules of exegesis, it will have no standing in religion.

CHAPTER-2

UNRELIABLE SOURCES OF EXEGESIS

After getting acquainted with authentic and reliable sources of the Science of Exegesis it seems essential to point out the unreliable sources. These have led many a people to grave misunderstandings and they have cited them as the basis of their commentaries. These sources are:

1) ISRĀ'ĪLIYYĀT OR JUDAICA

These are narratives that have reached us through Jews and Christians. Some of these have been taken directly from Bible or Talmud and some from Mishnah¹⁸ and their commentaries some are the words of mouth which were being transferred from one to another of the people of the Book, and were popular among the Jews and Christians of Arabia. A vast many of such stories are yet found in the existing books of exegesis. The renowned researcher and commentator Ibn Kathīr has stated that there are three kinds of such narrations, and each kind has to be dealt with in a different way.

- i) Isra'īliyyāts that have been verified as true by other authentic sources. For example, the drowning of Fir'aun (Pharoah), the contest of Sayyidina Mūsa عليه السلام with the magicians and his ascent on the Mount Sināi etc. are reliable narrations because they are authenticated by the Qurān and Hadith.

18: A collection of precepts and customs embodying Jewish oral law.

- ii) Isra'iliyāts that have been proved to be false by other arguments, for instance, the story that Sayyidina Sulaymān عليه السلام had become an apostate in his later years (God forbid).¹⁹ This narration is absolutely false because the Qurān explicitly refuted it. Similarly is the blatant lie about Sayyidina Dawood عليه السلام that he committed adultery with the wife of his general Uriah.²⁰
- iii) Isra'iliyāts which are neither proved to be correct nor false through arguments. Such as the injunction of Torah, and so on. About them the Prophet ﷺ has said:

لَا تُصَدِّقُوْهَا وَلَا تَكْذِبُوْهَا

Neither confirm them nor falsify them.

It is permissible to mention such narrations, but neither a religious tenet can be based on them nor can they be confirmed or refuted. It is of no benefit to cite these narrations either. Hāfiẓ Ibn Kathīr ²¹ رحمه الله عليه has stated that the Qurān itself teaches us how to deal with such narrations. It says:

سَيَقُولُونَ ثَلَاثَةٌ رَّابِعُهُمْ كَلْبُهُمْ وَيَقُولُونَ خَمْسَةٌ سَادِسُهُمْ
 كَلْبُهُمْ رَجْمًا بِالْغَيْبِ. وَيَقُولُونَ سَبْعَةٌ وَثَامِنُهُمْ كَلْبُهُمْ قُلْ
 رَبِّيَّ أَعْلَمُ بِعِدَّتِهِمْ مَا يَعْلَمُهُمْ إِلَّا قَلِيلٌ فَلَا تُمَارِ فِيهِمْ إِلَّا
 مِرَاءً ظَاهِرًا وَلَا تَسْتَفْتِ فِيهِمْ مِنْهُمْ أَحَدًا ○

19: Bible, Book of the kings 11:2-13.

20: Ibid, Samuel 13:14.

21: Tafsīr Ibn Kathīr, Muqaddama v1, p4 and Usūl ut Tafsīr, Ibn Taymiyyah p33.

(Some) will say, They were three, the fourth of them was their dog and (some) say, "Five the sixth of them was their dog, conjecturing about the unseen. And (some others) said, "Seven, and the eighth of them was their dog. Say "My Lord knows best their number — none knows them but a few, so contend not concerning them but with an outward contention; and ask any of them for a pronouncement on them." (Al-Kahf, 18:22)

In this verse Allah has mentioned different Isra'īlite versions current among the people of the Book about the number of the Cave Dwellers. He has also laid down these principles:

- 1: Describing the Isra'īli narrations and their differences are permissible.
- 2: Those of the narrations that have been proved false must be rejected as has been done by Allah refuting the first two by saying رَجَمًا بِالْغَيْب (conjecturing about the unseen).
- 3: Nothing should be said about the version which is not proved false. Allah has done so about the third narration.
- 4: Our belief about the truth or falsehood of these versions should be that the real knowledge rests with Allah.
- 5: We must refrain from engaging in unnecessary debate on these narrations.
- 6: It is not proper to probe into the veracity of these narrations because it will be a futile exercise. One does not stand to gain anything in this world or the next.

Some narrations are evidently Isr'ailite but it is not so apparent about the others, and it is so determined through other evidences. Most of the narrations reported by Ka'b al-Aḥbār and Waḥb bin Munabbih and mentioned in the books of exegesis belong to this category. Hence it seems appropriate to know about something of these persons.

KA'B AL-AHBĀR

His full name was Ka'b bin Mātī' al Ḥimyarī but was popularly known by the title of Ka'b-al-Aḥbār or Ka'b ul-Hibr. He belonged to Yemen and had a high place among the Jewish Scholars. He lived in the pre-prophetic dark era as well as the Prophetic days but could not embrace Islam during the life-time of the Prophet ﷺ. In the Year 12 A.H., during the caliphate of Sayyidina 'Umar رضى الله عنه he came to Madinah and embraced Islam. It has been reported in Ṭabaqāt Ibn Sa'd that Sayyidina Ibn 'Abbās رضى الله عنه asked him, "Why did he not embrace Islam in the days of the Prophet?" He replied, "My father had given a manuscript of Torah and advised me to follow it. He had sealed all other books so that I may not read them, and also took a pledge from me on the plea of paternity that I would not break those seals. But when Islam began to spread all over the world I thought my father might have tried to conceal some important knowledge from me, and I broke the seals and studied those books. In them I found the mention of Muḥammad and his people, and accepted Islam."²²

Ka'b al-Aḥbār رحمه الله عليه has generally been regarded as reliable but 'Allāmah Muḥammad Zahid al-Kawtharī has expressed doubts on the basis of some of his narrations. For instance, when Sayyidina 'Umar رضى الله عنه intended to build the Maṣjid Al-Aqsa, he sought the opinion of the people whether it should be built in front of the Sakhrāh Baitul Maqdis or behind it? Ka'b-al-Aḥbār advised him to construct it behind the Mosque Sakhrāh. On this Sayyidina 'Umar رضى الله عنه said, "Son of a Jew woman, the influence of 22: قال الكوثري {Al-Kawtharī has commented on the authenticity of this narration.} Maqālāt Al-Kawtharī p32.

Judaism has still not worn out over you. I shall construct it in front of Sakhrāh so that Sakhrāh is not faced by Muslims during Ṣalāh." Zāhid Al-Kawtharī has written that Ka'b al-Aḥbār kept grudge against Sayyidina 'Umar رضي الله عنه after this incident, so much so, that he was seen in company with those people who killed Sayyidina 'Umar رضي الله عنه. Before the incident he had warned Sayyidina 'Umar رضي الله عنه with reference to some inscriptions in the books of Jews and Christians that he ('Umar) would be killed. After quoting all such evidences, 'Allāmah al-Kawtharī has written:

"On looking at these separate events, it becomes evident that Sayyidina 'Umar رضي الله عنه, Abu Zarr Ibn-'Abbās, Awf bin Mālīk and Mu'āwiyah did not fully trust Ka'b al-Aḥbār."²³

There may be grounds for a difference with 'Allāmah al-Kawtharī when he casts doubts on Ka'b al-Aḥbār especially when we see them in the light of the sayings of the Companions,²⁴ but one thing is certain that most of Ka'b's narrations are Isra'ilites and they cannot be relied upon unless confirmed through other sources.

WAHB BIN MUNABBIH

He also came from Sanā in Yemen and was Persian by origin. He is also one of those to whom many Israiliyats are attributed. He has been reported to have been born during the Caliphate of Sayyidina 'Uthman رضي الله عنه.²⁵ His father, had embraced Islam during the days of the Prophet ﷺ. Wahb bin Munabbih was a pious Tabi'ī and he was an ascetic. He has reported from Abu Hurayrah, Abu Sa'īd

Khudrī, ‘Abdullah bin ‘Umar, Ibn ‘Abbās and Jābir رضي الله تعالى عنهم. He had a vast knowledge, gained from the scholars of the people of the Book, their books and narrations. He considered himself to be equal in knowledge to ‘Abdullah bin Salām and Ka‘b al-Aḥbār together. According to Imām Ibn Sa‘d he had also published a book named Aḥādith ul-Anbiya containing all those narrations.²⁶ al-Mas‘ūdī has mentioned that Wahb had written a book named Al-Mabda.²⁷

It is perhaps this very book that Ḥajī Khalīfah has referred to as Kitāb ul Isra‘īliyyāt in his Kashfuz Zūnūn.²⁸ Yaqūt al Ḥamawī and Ibn Khallikan have credited him with another book named Zikr ul Mulūk-al-Maftūḥah Min Ḥimyar-wa-Akhbāruhum waghair Zalik. Ibn Khallikan had seen the book.²⁹

The Traditionalists and research scholars have not questioned his trustworthiness. Ḥāfiẓ Zahabī رحمه الله عليه says, "He was reliable and truthful, but reported a great deal from Isra'ilite books." Imām Abu Zar‘ah and Imām Nasā‘ī have called him as "Reliable". Imām ‘Ijlī has said, "Wahb was a reliable Ṭābi‘ī." Only Imām Amr bin Ali al-Falās has considered him as "weak" not because he doubted Wahb's truthfulness and trustworthiness but the reason was that in the early period Wahb was inclined towards the Qadriyyah beliefs. Imām Aḥmad has stated that Wahb had later repented from his misgivings. Abu Sinān has quoted Wahb himself that he had subscribed to Qadri beliefs but later relented.³⁰

30: Tahzīb ul Tahzīb v11, p168.

It is obvious from this discussion that none of the scholars of Ḥadīth has ever doubted his truthfulness, trustworthiness and reliability. It was on this basis that both Bukhari and Muslim have included his narrations in their books. Hence the narrations which he has attributed to the Prophet ﷺ shall be accepted if precedences conform to the principles of the Science of Ḥadīth. However, his stories of the past and predictions about the future described without authentic references are mostly Isra'ilites which we have been directed neither to confirm nor to deny. Some authors of the present time, for instance, Sayyid Rasheed Raza have regarded him as a "weak" narrator on the basis of his strange Isra'ilite narrations. But the fact is that just mentioning the Judaic is no crime. It is, however, a different matter that Islamic dogma and commands cannot be based on them.³¹

‘ABDULLAH BIN ‘AMR ﷺ

Ka'b al-Aḥbār and Wahb bin Munabbih are among the Tabi'īn and most of the Isra'ilite narrations have been reported by them. Among the Companions probably most of Isra'iliyats have been reported by 'Abdullah bin 'Amr.' The reason is that he had thoroughly learnt the Syrian language³² and at that time many of the books of Jews and Christians could be had in the Syrian language. After the battle of Yarmūk he got such a large number of those books which formed two camel loads. He has reported several traditions from the Holy Prophet ﷺ too but they have no connection with Isra'iliyāt. In fact, if they stand the test of authentic narrations they should be accepted just as the Aḥādith of other Companions. However, the narrations cited by him from Judaica shall neither be confirmed nor denied. Similarly, the narrations reported as his own adages seem to be Isra'iliyats and cannot form the basis of Islamic beliefs. An Egyptian rejector of Ḥadith. Abu Raiyyah has levelled a baseless accusation on 'Abdullah bin 'Amr in his book Adwā' 'Alas Sunnat il Muḥammadiyah that he sometimes attributed Isra'ilite narrations towards Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ. This allegation is absolutely wrong and exposes the dishonest intentions of Abu Raiyyah. He has based his allegation on the following phrase of Ḥafīẓ Ibn Ḥajar from his book Fath-ul-Bārī:

ان عبد الله بن عمرو كان قد اصاب زاملتين من كتب اهل
الكتاب و كان يرويها للناس عن النبي صلى الله عليه وسلم
فتجنب الاخذ عنه كثير من ائمة التابعين و كان يقال له "لا تحدثنا عن الزاملتين" -

'Abdullah Bin 'Amr had obtained two camel loads of books of the People of the Book. He used to narrate to people from these books by attributing them towards the Prophet ﷺ. That is why many of the Ṭābi'ī scholars avoided citing him and people used to say to him not to relate to them anything of the two camel loads."³³

In this phrase the underlined sentence in italics is not found in Ibn Hajar's Fath-ul-Bārī. Abu Raiyyah has inserted this sentence on his own and attributed it to Ibn Hajar. One can easily see through the rejectors of Aḥādith western-minded authors.³⁴

33: Fath-ul-Bārī v1, p166.

34: An outright rejection of the stand of Abu Raiyyah may be observed in al Sunnatal lāhi deen Doctor 'Ajjaj al-khateeb and al-Israiliyyāt wā-thir-hā fi kitābit Tafsīr Dr Ramzi Na'nā'ah.

2. EXEGESIS OF THE SUFĪS (MYSTICS)

Certain words of the honourable sufīs about the verse of the Qurān which may seem to be an exegesis but those words contradict the obvious meanings. For instance, the Qurān says,

قَاتِلُوا الَّذِينَ يَلُونَكُمْ مِنَ الْكُفَّارِ

Fight those of the disbelievers who gird around you.

(Al-Tawbah, 9:123)

About it some Sufīs have said

قاتلوا النفس فانها تلى الانسان

"Fight your soul because it is nearest to man."

Some people have taken such sentences as interpretations of the Qurān, but in fact they are not so. The Sufīs never meant that these represent the actual intentions of the Qurān and not the meanings that are apparent. Rather they have full faith in the apparent meanings proved from its original sources and admit this to be the true interpretation of the Qurān, but alongwith it they also give vent to the ecstatic feelings they sense during the recital of the verse. Hence, the Sufīs do not say that the foregoing verse does not advocate jihad against the unbelievers. What they mean to express is that while the verse in fact calls on us to fight the unbelievers, at the same time it tells us that nearest enemy is his own soul that repeatedly prompts him to commit evil. Hence, he must engage in Jihad with it also at the same time as he is bound to wage Jihad with the disbelievers.

We find a large number of such intuitive interpretations of the Sufīs in the Exegesis of renowned commentator 'Allāmah Maḥmūd Alūsī. He has explained the views of the Sufīs in the following words:

"The deliberations reported from the Sufīs in connection with the Qurān in fact point to those deep and fine disclosures that they read in it. These disclosures are truly based on the apparent meaning. The Sufīs do not believe that the apparent meanings are to be ignored against intuitive meanings because this is the belief of the Bāṭiniyyah apostates who have adopted it as stepping stone to negate the Laws of Islam. Our mystics have nothing to do with this belief, and it cannot be, because they insist that the apparent meanings of the Qurān must be adopted first."³⁵

But, the following considerations must be kept in mind in regard to such deliberations of the mystics.

- 1: These deliberations should not be regarded as exegesis of the Qurān, we should believe that the true exegesis of the Qurān is the one that is apparent from its real source, and these deliberations are just intuitive deductions which cannot be regarded as exegesis without going astray. Imam 'Abdur Raḥmān Sulmī رحمه الله عليه had written a book, Ḥaqā'iq Tafsīr which consisted of such deliberations. Imām Wāḥidī رحمه الله عليه has said about it that, "whoever believes that this is Tafsīr would become an apostate."³⁶
- 2: Of all such deliberations only those may be taken as correct which do not negate the apparent meanings of a verse or an established principle of Islamic Law. If the established rules and regulations of religion are defied under the guise of intuitive deliberations it is 35: Ruh-ul-Ma'āni v1,p7 Introduction. 'Allāmah Suyūṭī has reproduced the same material from Shaikh Tājuddīn bin 'Ataullah. (Al-Itqān, v2,p185).

36: Al-Itqān, v2,p184.

- 3: Intuitions of this kind would be reliable only so long as they do not interpolate the words of Qurān. If anything is connoted by distorting the word of the Qurān then that is also apostasy and a wavering from the path. For instance, take the verse. من ذا الذى يشفع (Who is he that shall intercede). Someone said about it that it is actually من ذل الذى يشفع where ذى means "soul" giving the phrase the meaning, "Whoever shall disgrace the soul shall be cured. Remember it." When 'Allāmah Sirajuddin Bāqillanī was asked about it he said, "Such a person is a heretic."³⁷
- 4: In the earlier times, there was a group of heretics named 'Bāṭiniyyah'. They claimed that in fact Allah did not mean what is understood in the Qurān on the face of it, but every word points to an intrinsic meaning which is its true interpretation. Such a belief is unanimously regarded apostasy by the Ummah. Hence, it will amount to subscribing to the misconceived ideas of, 'Bāṭiniyyat' if we attribute such a belief to the deliberations of the Sufīs.

The deliberations of the mystics (Sufīs) can be studied with due regard to these four cautionary notes. Indeed, some people having an ideal bent of mind have benefitted from these deliberations. That is why 'Allāmah Ālusī has devoted an entire chapter named Bab-ul-Isharah fīl Āyāt in his Tafsīr Rūḥul Ma'ānī in which he has mentioned such intuitions.

To sum up, the intuitive deliberations made by the Sufīs are not against the Qurān or Sunnah, and to blame them for Bāṭiniyyah is not justified. In spite of that, we cannot resist quoting Ibn-us Ṣalāh:

37: Itqān v2, p 184.

ومع ذلك فياليتهم لم يتساهلوا بمثل ذلك لما فيه من الابهام
والالباس (الاتقان، ١٨٤، ج ٢)

"Despite this, how I wish these people had not been so careless in delving upon these deliberations because there is much possibility of creating misunderstanding and doubt through them.³⁸

3. SELF-CONCEIVED INTERPRETATIONS

The Holy Prophet ﷺ has said,

من تكلم فى القرآن برأيه فاصاب فقد اخطأ

Whoever comments on the Qurān on the basis of his own opinion and even if his opinion, is correct still he committed a mistake.

‘Allāmah Māwardī رحمه الله عليه has stated that some people with a mischievous bent of mind assert that this tradition makes it unlawful to say anything about the Qurān on the basis of one’s opinion and thinking. They go to the extent in saying that even meanings cannot be derived at in accordance with the principles of Shari’ah. But this is a misconception because the Qurān itself has described deliberations and deductions a praiseworthy effort. If restrictions are imposed on the thinking and deliberation, the door to deduce laws and regulations from the Qurān and Sunnah will be closed for ever. Hence this tradition does not intend to restrict every kind of self-conceived opinion.³⁹

There is a consensus among the scholars that, in the light of the Qurān and Hadith, this tradition does not

38: Al-Itqān v2, p184.

39: Adopted from al-Itqān, v2, p180.

disallow one to think, deliberate and reason in studying the Qurān. But an exegesis arrived at only by personal opinion and ignoring the established principles of exegesis of the Qurān, shall be unlawful, and any person drawing conclusions in this manner shall be committing a sin even if his conclusions are correct because he took a wrong approach. There can be several ways in which a person may ignore the principles of exegesis. These are:

- 1: Anyone who is not competent to talk about the exegesis of the Qurān may interpret it through his own deliberations.
- 2: Anyone may ignore an explanation of a verse explicitly proved from the Prophet ﷺ or his Companions and their followers (Tabi'īn), and forward his own opinion as final.
- 3: Someone may make an interpretation ignoring usage, literature and lexicon when an explicit interpretation from the companions and Tabi'īn is not reported.
- 4: Someone may extract rulings from the Qurān although he is not competent to do so directly from the Qurān and Hadith.
- 5: Someone may infer from the verses of the Qurān the meanings of which the Qurān itself states that these are known to none but Allah alone and then stands by his inference.
- 6: He may draw an interpretation of the verses of the Qurān which clash with other established belief and tenets of Islam.
- 7: Where personal deliberation and deduction is permissible one may declare his own unsubstantiated opinion as conclusive and at the same time firmly negate the deliberations of other scholars.

These are the possibilities of an exegesis on personal opinion which the foregoing Hadith declares illegal. All these possibilities are summed up in another saying of the Prophet ﷺ.

من قال في القرآن بغير علم فليتبوأ مقعده من النار

"Whoever says anything about the Qurān without knowledge, let him make his place in the Fire (of Hell)."

However, if an opinion is expressed which is not against the Qurān and Ḥadith and conforms to the principles of exegesis and established rules and regulations of Islam, it does not attract the wrath of this Ḥadith. But it must be understood that such deliberations themselves are not possible without a deep knowledge of the Qurān and Ḥadith and experience in Islamic Sciences. The scholars have laid down certain principles for this purpose, which form part of the principles of Islamic Jurisprudence and principles of exegesis. A very useful summary of these principles has been given by 'Allāmah Badruddin Zarkashī in his book Al-burhān-fī-ulūm-il-Qurān, in the 41st edition particularly under 'kinds of Tafsīr'. (pp 164-170)

This entire discussion is very useful but one cannot benefit from it without a sound knowledge of Arabic and its sciences. Hence, we do not see any advantage in presenting its translation here.

CAUSES OF INACCURACIES IN EXEGESIS

While it is respectful and honourable to pursue, the science of exegesis (Tafsīr), it is also dangerous to step into it. The reason for that is that if anyone makes a wrong interpretation he would attribute towards Allah a thing which He has not said, and there can be no greater deviation than that. Those who expound the Qurān without being properly qualified fall into the wrong path in spite of labouring much in the exercise. Hence, it is essential to have a view of the causes that mislead a man in the matter of exegesis of the Qurān.

FIRST CAUSE: INCOMPETENCE

The first and the most dangerous cause of erring off the path while engaging in the exegesis of the Qurān is to impose one's opinion without assessing one's competence and ability. Lately, it is seen that this habit has assumed epidemic proportions. It has become a common misconception that by being able to read Arabic one becomes a scholar on the Qurān and can interpret the Qurān as he understands it. It is worth observing that while there is no art or science in the world wherein a person becomes an expert only by virtue of his linguistic knowledge and ability yet this is ignored when dealing with the Qurān. No sensible man would claim to have become a physician or surgeon simply because he has a full command on English language and play with the lives of his patients. Merely reading a book on medical science will not make anyone a doctor. Similarly, a person cannot claim to be an Engineer simply by reading books on Engineering, or lawyer merely by reading books on Law. If anybody claims to be a professional on this basis he will be termed a quack and an idiot because everyone knows that the arts and sciences cannot be achieved simply by being acquainted with the language and by self study. It needs years of hard work and tuition under expert teachers in the field leading through several examination conducted by institutions of learning. It is followed by practical experience under supervision and company of specialists. Only then one would be entitled to be called a beginner in the science.

If this is the case with learning these arts and sciences how can anyone hope to become an expert in the science of exegesis of the Qurān simply by knowing Arabic language? In the preceding pages, we have seen what vast a knowledge is required to be able to enter the domain of the science of Exegesis. The Qurān is not a continuous book like other ordinary books where everything about one subject may be found at one place. Unlike all other books it has a unique and distinguished style. Hence, in order to fully understand the meaning of a verse it is necessary to keep in view its different recitals, other verses on the same subject and their related information, the revelatory background. It is also necessary to know the sayings of the Prophet ﷺ on which depends the interpretation of many verses. We shall have to find out if there is a deed or saying of the Prophet ﷺ that explains the verse, and if it stands the test of authenticity. Also one should know how the Companions understood this verse, and whether there was a consensus on it or a difference of opinion existed among them. In case of a difference of opinion how may that be solved? Further, Arabic is a rich language, its words have many meanings and several synonyms.

It is also essential to be familiar with the idiom of that era to understand the meaning of the verse. Besides, the meaning of a verse, it is not sufficient to have a knowledge of only the literal meaning of a word because in Arabic language the meanings change with the change in grammatical composition and diacritical marks. Without due proficiency in Arabic literature and language, this knowledge cannot be acquired and the composition nearest to the language of that day cannot be determined. Lastly, it must be thoroughly understood that the Qurān is Word of Allah, and Allah does not disclose the secrets and mysteries of His words to those who are disobedient to Him. Hence, obedience to Allah, close attachment with Him, piety and righteousness are essential qualities in man before he sets to interpreting the Qurān. This discussion makes it clear that mere familiarity with Arabic is not enough to explain the Qurān. One must study the principles governing Tafsīr, science of Ḥadīth principles governing Ḥadīth and jurisprudence, knowledge of syntax, grammar, etymology, literature and rhetoric. Coupled with purity of heart, mind and body and deep devotion to Allah (Taqwa).

To adopt the path of exegesis without meeting these conditions is to mislead oneself and qualify oneself as one of whom the Prophet ﷺ had said,

من قال فى القرآن بغير علم فليتبوأ مقعده من النار

Whosoever says anything about the Qurān without knowledge let him make his place in the Fire (of Hell).

SOME MISUNDERSTANDINGS

In this connection some misunderstandings must be removed.

1: Some people say that the Qurān has itself stated:

وَلَقَدْ يَسَّرْنَا الْقُرْآنَ لِلذِّكْرِ فَهَلْ مِنْ مُدَكِّرٍ ۝

Certainly We made the Qurān easy for admonition but is there anyone who would be admonished.

(Al-Qamar, 54:17)

So when the Qurān is an easy book there is no need for help from arts and sciences to interpret it. Every one should be able to understand it by reading its text.

This argument is a grave misunderstanding which is based on lack of intellect and on superficial viewpoint. The fact is that the Qurānic verses are of two types. Firstly, those which offer common advice, didactic events, and subjects that deal with taking warning and acting on sound advice. For instance there are verses that speak of morality of the world, account of Paradise and Hell, verses that inspire fear of God, concern for the Hereafter and other plain facts of life. Verses of this type are no doubt easy and anyone knowing Arabic language can benefit from them.

In fact this purpose can be achieved to some extent even after going through the recognised translations of the Qurān. The verse under reference has pointed out to this very fact, which is apparent from the word للذكر (for the sake of admonition).

Contrary to this, there are verses which consist of injunctions, regulations, beliefs and scholastic subjects. It is not possible for just anyone to understand them and deduce and draw tenets from them unless a deep insight in the Islamic learnings is attained first. That is why the Companions of the Prophet ﷺ used to spend long periods of time regularly in learning the Qurān from him even though their mother tongue was Arabic and they did not have to go anywhere to get training in Arabic. Suyūṭī has quoted ‘Abdur Raḥmān Sulamī that he was told by the Companions such as Sayyidina 'Uthmān bin 'Affān and 'Abdullah Bin Mas'ūd ؓ, who had regularly learnt the Qurān from the Prophet ﷺ that they would not proceed beyond ten verses until they had obtained all the relevant knowledge and practical application of these verses. They used to say:

فتعلمنا القرآن والعلم والعمل جميعا-

We have learnt the Qurān, knowledge and action all in one.

It is narrated in Muṣatta' of Imām Mālik that 'Abdullah ibn 'Umar took eight years to memorise and learn Surah Al-Baqarah alone, and in Musnad Aḥmad, Sayyidina Anas ؓ has stated that the one among them who had learnt Surah Al-Baqarah... and Al-'Imrān enjoyed high esteem and status.⁴⁰

It is worth observing that these Companions used to take such a long time as eight years to learn and memorise just one Surah though their mother tongue was Arabic. They had the highest degree of expertise in poetry and literature and could commit to memory lengthy odes with only a little effort. The only reason (was) that a proficiency in Arabic language was not enough for learning the Qurān and its sciences, but they had to seek the benefit of the company and teachings of the Holy Prophet ﷺ. When such was the state of affairs with the Companions who had expertise in Arabic language and were direct witnesses to revelation, how then could some one claim to be a commentator of the Qurān with a cursory knowledge of Arabic or just by reading translations of the Qurān. Such a claim is indeed audacious and a pitiable jest with the Qurān. Such people should remember the Prophet's ﷺ saying:

من قال فى القرآن بغير علم فليتبوأ مقعده فى النار

(ابوداؤد، منقول از إتيقان، ص ١٧٩، ج ٢)

Whosoever says anything about the Qurān without knowledge⁴¹ let him make his abode in the Fire (of Hell).

THE 'ULAMĀ AND MONOPOLY IN THE FIELD

- 2: Some people raise the objection that since the Qurān is guidance for all mankind, hence every one has a right to derive benefit from it according to his understanding. Its explanations and interpretations cannot be monopolised by the scholars and learned ones.

But this, too is a very superficial and sentimental objection that has nothing to do with reality. No doubt the Qurān is the source of guidance for the entire humanity but how does it mean that even an illiterate person may formulate intricate laws and rulings from it, and that no competency is essential for this. This can be understood with the help of an example: Suppose an expert lawyer or philosopher or doctor writes a book on his subject, obviously it is meant to be of use to the entire mankind. If, now, a beginner unaware of the basics of these arts and sciences objects that since those books were written for the benefit of all mankind, why have the experts monopolised it. We can only feel sorry for the man. If defining basic qualifications for competency to benefit from a book is to monopolise the field then no art or science can remain safe from the hold of the illiterate and inept. In fact every book of art or science is written for the benefit of mankind, but there are only two ways in which a man may gain the advantage. He may either learn the art or science from specialists in these fields and devote time and effort to it, or if he cannot do so, he may rely on the explanations and interpretations of those who have spent their lives in attaining proficiency in them. Anyone who takes a third course at the expense of these two is actually unjust to himself and to the science or art too. The same applies to Qurān and Sunnah which are a fountain source of guidance to all mankind. The same two approaches are possible to gain advantage from them, either one acquires the knowledge himself through the proper process under teachers and by devoting time to it, or rely on explanations and interpretations of those who have given their time for the sake of this science. This is the principle of learning applied all over the world, and to call it a Monopoly is nothing but to ridicule the 'Ulamā in a sentimental outburst. Of all the learnings in the world, are the Qurān and Sunnah alone, an unclaimed field of enquiry, that need no competence in order to interpret them and anyone who likes may pass opinions in this matter?

THE 'ULAMĀ AND THE PAPAL SYSTEM

- 3: The same objection is raised by some people in a different manner. They say that Papalism is alien to Islam. It is a peculiarity of the Christian faith that interpretation of the Bible is the exclusive right of the Pope and no one else can object to it. Islam has done away with the papal system. How then could the rights of exegesis of the Qurān be reserved for a particular section of the people, the 'Ulamā?

This objection is the result of a misconception about both the Papalism and scholars of Islam, the 'Ulamā. The 'Ulamā is not a name of any particular or specific group of people based on colour and creed, wealth and property or status and position, nor is it a regular organisation the membership of which may be essential to be called a religious scholar. On the contrary, every one having specific knowledge, wisdom, character and piety is a religious scholar irrespective of the place he belongs to, the language he speaks and his family background. In this way the following clear characteristics distinguish the scholars of Islam and Popes of Christianity.

- i) Papalism is the name of a complex religious system which is bound to a fixed international organisation. It has a large number of offices and posts and the number of incumbents is limited. Appointment of a person to every office or post is made by a group of specified persons and they assign various duties and powers to appointees. No one may obtain an appointment merely, on the basis of his ability, knowledge, piety or character. Nomination by the higher authorities is the only way to assume office. Unless he has attained an office in the organisation, he will have no say in any religious matter, however, highly placed he may be in religious learning, piety and character. The result is that a person who has attained the highest degree of proficiency in religious sciences cannot challenge the strong hierarchy of the Church through reasoning and argument. Even if a selected group of people revolt against their divine books, their Prophets and their ancestors, nobody outside the organisation can raise a finger on them.

In contrast to this, there has never been an international organisation of "The Scholars of Islam", the 'Ulamā. There is no such organisation which prohibits expression of views to those outside it, and limits authority of its officers and appropriates to itself the right of appointments. Rather, every such person gains fame and becomes entitled to be called a religious scholar an 'Ālim, on the basis of his knowledge, piety, devotion and character. The authorities of the Church prevail upon their flock with their opinions by virtue of their official status but a Muslim scholar attains his position through his knowledge, piety and character. The enforced laws of the Church bind man to follow them but among the Muslims the real decisive force is the collective conscience of the Ummah. The number of officers of the Church is limited and once that is attained no one is entitled to differ from the decisions of the Church, no matter how great a scholar he may be. The "Religious Scholars of Islam", the 'Ulāma, have no fixed number. Every one can become a scholar once he has gone through the process of religious learnings.

- ii) In Papalism the powers of interpretation and exegesis of religious tenets rest with a single person who is called the Pope. He is elected by only seventy cardinals out of millions of followers of that religion. The Pope is the sole vicegerant of St. Peter, the final authority in all religious matters, and his interpretations are binding on every Christian. His word is the Law and even the greatest scholar has no right to differ from him. His powers have been defined in Encyclopaedia Britannica in the following words:

"Hence, in matters of belief and concepts the Pope, in the capacity of supreme authority enjoys the same authority and the same infallibility as the entire Church. In the capacity of legislator and judge he enjoys all those powers which the whole Church has."⁴²

42: Encyclopaedia Britannica, Article on Pope v18, p222,223.

Turn the pages of Islamic history and you will not find a single instance of a religious scholar making claim to such an absolute authority.

iii) According to Christian beliefs the Pope is innocent and infallible when he proclaims ideological rulings. The Britannica says:

"Hence, the Pope has two distinctive attributes. One, that whenever, he makes a proclamation about beliefs, he is infallible and free from errors; and two he has a sovereign jurisdiction over all the followers of religion. These two prerogatives that the Popes have claimed and used since centuries, have been given a clear constitutional shape in the Vatican Council of July 1870."⁴³

As opposed to this, the scholars of Islam are all agreed that nobody except the Prophets عليهم السلام can be infallible and innocent. Everyone else may err. Hence, the scholars of Islam have been commenting on each other with full freedom of expression, and this is in practice since the time of the Companions. The result is that even if the greatest scholar of Islam errs in interpreting the Qurān and Sunnah, the other 'Ulamā censure him and save the Ummah from the evil repercussions.

iv) Further, the seventy Cardinals that select the Pope and advise him are all nominated by the Pope himself. According to Encyclopaedia Britannica:

"Now-a-days the nomination of the Cardinals is the job of Pope alone. The job is regarded as complete on the publication of the names selected by the Pope in secrecy, and it does not require any other formality....similarly it is not essential for it to be voted or approved by the Sacred College."⁴⁴

43: Encyclopaedia Britannica v18, p223 also see the article on Infallibility.

Then again these authorities of the Church are not appointed only by virtue of their ability but several regional prejudices prevail in different regions. The Encyclopaedia Britannica says:

"In the United States of America, the Church is composed of different groups of every nation in the world. But the English speaking nations are in majority. Till the middle of 19th century Irish and German nations had the maximum quota.... In addition, Eastern Catholic nations (i.e. Greek, Syrians and Armenians,) are present in a considerable ratio."⁴⁵

After this brief introduction if we compare Papalism with Islamic scholars we find a world of difference between the two. There is no established Organisation of the Scholars of Islam, no single person is the supreme authority in religious matters, nobody does claim to be innocent and infallible, a number is not limited for them to prevent their increase in the numbers of the 'Ulamā, none of the 'Ulamā is above criticism by the others, no approval required from a "Single Person" to attain the scholar status, there is no restriction of caste, creed, colour or place for it. In fact the history of Islam shows that mostly the Arabs led in the political domain but religious scholars were generally from non-Arabs and even from the slaves, whom the entire Islamic world had acknowledged for their learning, knowledge, piety and devotion. Thus it is most unjust to blame the 'Ulamā for adopting the Papal system when they assert that insight and experience is necessary for speaking on the Qurān and Sunnah.⁴⁶

44: Encyclopaedia Britannica v4, p855 on Cardinal.

45: Ibid v19, p421 (Roman Catholic Church)

In fact the religious science is like the other sciences. Just as the verdict of a person on any other art or science will not be accepted unless he has attained the concerned knowledge from experts in that field and has also gained practical experience in it, the interpretation and exegesis of the Qurān would not be acceptable from a person who has not attained knowledge from expert teachers and practised it under their supervision. If this is Papalism, then every art or science of the world is Papalism, too.

SECOND CAUSE:

SUBJECTING THE QURĀN TO ONE'S OWN VIEWS

The second grave aberrance in connection with the exegesis of the Qurān is that a person first conceives certain ideas in his mind and then attempts to interpret the Qurān according to those ideas. This has been pointed out by Allamah Ibn Taymiyyah.⁴⁷

Irreligious people and those impressed by the philosophy of their time, have from earlier times, adopted the same misleading method for exegesis of the Qurān, and tried to interpolate the words of the Qurān to suit their own views. This behaviour does not conform to any standard of justice and righteousness in any matter, and it is cruel to adopt it in connection with the Qurān such as

46: Here we only intend to point out the differences between the scholars of Islam and Popes. To deal with the merits and demerits of Papalism is outside the scope of our subject. In fact, the propaganda of the Protestants has pointed out to actual defects of Papalism they have also made certain unfounded allegations only to defame the system. But we are not concerned with that discussion at this point. (Muhammad Taqī) nothing could be more cruel than this. The Qurān has declared itself frequently a book of "Guidance". "Guidance" means "To show the way to a person who has lost his destination." Hence, in order to get Guidance from the Qurān it is essential that one should keep his mind open like the one who does not know his destination, and his mind is blank. Thereafter, he should have faith that the way shown by the Qurān will be the way for reform and prosperity for him even if his limited mind cannot reason it. He may tell himself if he were capable he would not have turned to the Qurān in the first place. When anyone turns towards it with this belief and fulfils the required conditions and etiquette necessary for getting the "Guidance" of the Qurān, he will surely get it and achieve his goal.

Contrary to this, if somebody has predetermined concepts in his mind based on his personal whims and then goes through the Qurān with this frame of mind it would mean that he is not reading the sacred Book of Allah to get guidance but only to find support for his personal views. Obviously one who relies on his own intellect and does not subject it to the Qurān but (God forbid) suppresses the Qurān to his intellect, the Qurān is not under obligation to guide him. Such a person would not get any guidance from the Qurān and rather than reach his destination would be caught in the labyrinth of waywardness. It is for these people that the Qurān has said:

يُضِلُّ بِهِ كَثِيرًا وَيَهْدِي بِهِ كَثِيرًا

Allah sends many astray thereby; and He guides many thereby. (Al-Baqarah, 2:76)

Hence the correct method of gaining guidance from the Qurān is to turn towards it like a seeker of Truth after freeing one's mind of bias and prejudices. One should acquire the knowledge required to understand it and then seek to interpret it. Then believe like a true believer in whatever he learns of the Tafsīr. As for the one who cannot afford to undergo this process or does not have confidence on his personal views, he should rely on the interpretations of those who have spent their lives on this study and whose insight, piety and character are unquestioned in his eyes.

THIRD CAUSE

Being impressed with prevailing Philosophy

The third great wrong approach in the exegesis of the Qurān is to turn towards the Qurān after being overawed by the philosophical and intellectual concepts of the times setting them as standard for right and wrong and accordingly explaining the Qurān. This aberrance is actually part of the second cause but we give it a separate classification because in the current era, Western influence is playing havoc with our social conduct.

In the history of Islam there have always been some people who have felt impressed by the philosophy of their times without first acquiring proficiency in the science of Qurān and Sunnah. The philosophy impressed them to such an extent that they became deprived of the ability to think independently. When they turned towards the Qurān with this mind they found much against their ideal philosophy and they started interpreting the Qurān in that light rather than negate their own concepts. They tried to alter the words of Qurān to fit their views.

The same thing happened when the Greek philosophy became popular among Muslims. They studied it without first studying the science of the Qurān and Sunnah. Some people who had been overawed by that philosophy started to distort the Qurānic concepts to accommodate the Greek Philosophy. Some of them did it sincerely, and truly believed that the Greek philosophy could not be contradicted and the inherited interpretations of the Qurān would not be able to face the intellectual revolution brought about by the Greek Philosophy. So they hoped to accommodate the Tafsīr of the Qurān to Greek ideas, But this was a disfavour to Islam and only created an ideological confusion rather than do any real service to Islam. It created new sects, such as Mu'tazilah and Jahmiyyah. The result was that the Mu'tazillah scholars of Islam who were never impressed by any system or new concept brought against Islam, had to devote their time to contradict such people at the expense of the religious service. They pointed out to the intellectual drawbacks of the Greek Philosophy and thus contradicted, with detailed arguments, the deliberations of those who were interpolating the meanings of the Qurān under the influence of this philosophy. Thus, debates, discussions and literary writings became everyday affair, and book-loads of libraries came up supporting one view or the other.

The authentic scholars held that the Qurān was not any human product but it comprised the words of the Creator of this Universe Who was Aware of the minutest occurrences in this world, and no one else could be better informed than Him about the changing circumstances of this world. Hence, the teachings of the Qurān and the facts it reveals are universal, eternal and unchangeable. As for the laws, injunctions and ideologies that may change with the times, the Qurān has laid down comprehensive principles about them to be applicable at all times, and guidance may be obtained from them in every environment. But the things that are explicitly described by the Qurān or explicitly interpreted by the Holy Prophet ﷺ are not affected by the changing times.

History of science and philosophy testifies that their theories most of which are not based on definite observation keep changing in different times. The prevailing theories so enraptured minds that people were not prepared to listen to anything against those theories. But when fresh findings disproved them they were disgraced and regarded outmoded. The same happened to new concepts that replaced the older ones and the successive concepts. This has continued in the intellectual history of man and it will go on until the search for reality brings him face to face with absolute observation. Contrary to this, the realities towards which the Qur̄an has explicitly guided are presented by a Being who sees the entire universe and the happenings in it. Therefore, the temporary theories of science and philosophy cannot hold against the guidance of the Qur̄an. If one is impressed by a concept of the moment and then tries to mould the Qur̄an according to it, the same concept may turn out to be a relic of the days of ignorance, and one would feel ashamed to mention it even.

This resolute stand taken by the determined scholars came out to be true. Advancements in Science and Philosophy have shattered the theories of the Greck Philosophy. Not only many of its natural, basic and astronomical concepts have been proved wrong but the structure of metaphysical concepts raised on their basis has also fallen to the ground. Those people who had been impressed by it and tried to mould the Qur̄an and Sunnah according to it, if they had been alive today, would have been ashamed and abashed.

However, it is very surprising that those who always take a narrow approach try, even today, to explain the Qur̄an and Sunnah, in the frame of the western mind rather than learn from history. They are bent on ignoring the established and accepted principles of exegesis. They strive to adopt only one principle and that is to eke out meanings in the words of Allah that fit the western mind. They do not care whose words they are interpolating? They do not give a thought how durable the ideologies are for whose sake they play with the words of Allah.

They do not worry what would happen to their interpolations once fresh ideas overrun them.

THE QUESTION OF MIRACLES

A famous western philosopher disclosed the law of Absorption in seventeenth century, a theory about the Universe and everything in it gained Universal popularity. This was known as Mechanical Concept of Life. In plain language it can be summarised in the words that the entire universe is so bound together in the system of Cause and Effect that it cannot deviate even a hair's breadth from it. For example, the nature of fire is to burn, and it is not possible to separate this nature from the fire. Hence it can never happen that while fire is raging yet it does not burn things which it should because of its nature.

When this view was acknowledged the world over the western thinkers began to ridicule every such incident that did not follow this rule and came to be called Super Natural, and went against their theory of Cause and Effect. So they declared as 'Superstition' every thing that did not observe natural process. More than the theory the ridicule with which they held the Super Natural overawed the Revivalists of Islam. When they found that most of the miracles of the Prophets عليهم السلام mentioned in the Qurān do not conform with these theories they began to twist the words of the Qurān in a manner that these miracles may be said to follow natural phenomena rather be irregular and deem to be 'Super Natural'. It would then not attract western ridicule. For instance, it is the nature of Fire according to the "Cause and Effect" theory, to burn but the Qurān asserts that the Fire was cooled down when Prophet Ibrāhim عليه السلام was thrown into it. Confronted with this assertion, some Revivalists of Islam have just denied the occurrence of the incident. They played with the words of Qurān in such a manner that they completely changed the meanings of the Qurān which no scholar of the Qurān and Sunnah could imagine for the last thirteen centuries. Thus, Sir Syed Aḥmad Khan violated the established consensus of the Muslim Ummah and tried to find excuses for his interpolation. He writes:

"In their times (that is the times of earlier scholars of Islam) 'Natural Senses' had not developed. There was nothing to tell them of the Law of Nature and stop them from erring." Hence these causes and similar other causes were such that they (the scholars) could not pay due attention to these words of the Qurān. For instance....there is no conclusive evidence about the story of Sayyidina Ibrāhim عليه السلام that he was actually thrown into the fire, but they did not observe it.⁴⁸

But the fact is that apart from Prophetic Traditions and narrations, the words of the Qurān about this incident are:

قَالُوا حَرِّقُوهُ وَانصُرُوا آلِهَتَكُمْ إِنْ كُنْتُمْ فَاعِلِينَ ○ قُلْنَا يَانَارُ
كُونِي بَرْدًا وَسَلَامًا عَلَىٰ إِبْرَاهِيمَ ○ وَأَرَادُوا بِهِ كَيْدًا
فَجَعَلْنَاهُمُ الْأَخْسَرِينَ ○

They said "Burn him and help your gods if you must do anything." We said: "O Fire! Be you coolness and safety 48: Muqaddamah Tafsīr Qurān, Sir Syed Aḥmed Khan v1, p17.

for Ibrahim." And they intended a guile against him, but We made them the worse losers. (Al-Anbiya, 21: 68-70)

قَالُوا ابْنُوا لَهُ بُيُوتًا فَأَلْقُوهُ فِي الْجَحِيمِ ۖ فَأَرَادُوا بِهِ كَيْدًا
فَجَعَلْنَاهُمُ الْأَسْفَلِينَ ۝

They said, "Build for him a building, then cast him into Hell-fire." "So they sought a plan against him, but We made them low". (As-Şaffāt, 37:97-98)

The clear and explicit words of the Qurān were interpolated only to accommodate Sayyidina Ibrāhīm's ﷺ safe emergence from the fire to the prevalent "Natural Sense" of the West. Hence for the sake of this "Natural Sense", Sir Syed Ahmad Khan and his henchmen not only violated all principles of Exegesis of the Qurān and gave imaginary meanings to their words but also damaged the fundamental belief of the bodily resurrection of man, declared the realities of Devils, Jinns and Angels as superstition and rejected all the miracles of Prophets عليهم السلام. For this purpose, they turned the Qurān into a collection of poetic allegories and parables. On reading their interpretations it seems that instead of narrating the incident in the lives of the Prophets عليهم السلام in its simple style, the Qurān has presented them in allegoric puzzles which were disclosed to the devotees of the West for the first time after thirteen hundred years. To clothe the explicit words of the Qurān with meanings that suit them seems to be a sport for them. Countless examples of this are found in their exegesis and the purpose of their effort and struggle in this direction in the words of Sir Syed Ahmad Khan is as follows.

"When miracles are considered to be superhuman or 'supernatural' we deny them and consider their occurrence as impossible. It is like to betray an oral commitment and openly declare that there is no proof of the occurrence of such an incident which is supernatural and which is called a Miracle. Then, even if we do accept them as within the powers of God, it will serve no purpose.⁴⁹

Contrary to this, the view of the scholars of Islam is that the occurrence of Miracles is not unreasonable. They are, of course, uncommon and not regular happenings. When Allah wishes to expose the Truth of any of His Messengers before the common and illiterate men He makes such amazing and uncommon things happen at their hands that every one realises that the Messenger is truly from Allah. But, because the legal tender in the west is the coin of "Natural Sense", Sir Syed felt shy of admitting it as did his henchmen.

It was about that time that the authority of Allah was manifesting itself. Earlier theories were being proved wrong in the light of new researches and Einstein had laid the foundation of his Theory of Relativity which had turned the tables on the previous scientific theories. The drums of Atomic science were beaten loud and clear on the basis of this theory in the twentieth century and the Laws of Gravity and Cause and Effect were rejected which in turn put an end to the discussion on the difference between Natural and Supernatural. A great and widely acclaimed scientist of the present time, Sir Arthur Eddington writes:

Scientific researches do not indicate an intrinsic constituent and inseparable quality or substance and nature of things.⁵⁰

49: Tafsīr ul Qurānī Sir Syed Aḥmed Khan v1, p10.

50: Eddington: The Nature of Physical world. p303. Adopted from Mazhab and Science by Mawlana 'Abdul Bārī Nadwi p86. Lahore 1976.

In this way an important result of elimination of Law of Motivity in the extrinsic world is that there is no more an apparent distinction between natural and supernatural.

How this great revolution occurred in the scientific rules? The answer is provided in the writings of a renowned scientist of modern times Sir James Jeans:

The great seventeenth century achievement of Galileo and Newton was recognised that change, alteration or creation of every subsequent thing is the inevitable result of its past state so much so that the history of the entire expanse of nature, upto its end point is the essential and inevitable result of its beginning as it was on the first day.

The essential consequence of this conception was the movement which understood the entire material world as a machine. This state of affairs continued till the end of the nineteenth century, and the sole objective of natural science came to convert and transform the universe into mechanics.

It was in the last months of the nineteenth century that Max Plank of Berlin laid the foundation of Quantum Theory which developed into a universal principle of modern physics, and later on initiated a new era replacing The Mechanical era of Science.

Initially, the theory of Plank did not reveal that in the Universe of Nature the process of continuity exists. But in 1917 Einstein asserted that Plank's theory in fact bears great revolutionary consequences and in the words of James Jeans: This theory will replace the law of Cause and Effect which was considered thus far as a Universal guiding principle. It was a determined and unshaken theory of science until now that Nature cannot take a single step out of the laws of cause and effect. After the cause 'A', the effect of 'B' should inevitably follow. But now the discoveries in science suggest that although there are several possible effects of 'A' in the form of 'B', 'C' or 'D', yet it is also true that the possibility of 'B' following 'A' is greater than of 'C' or 'D' appearing after 'A'.

James Jeans theorarised that except for this probability or strong assumption, occurrence of any so-called effect after a so-called cause can neither be established with certainty nor be predicted:

Rather This is a matter which lies on the knees of gods whatever gods there may be.⁵¹

In short, the science that devolved in the light of atomic resarches completely replaced the older notions that attributes can never be separated from the things of this universe, for instance the quality or nature of fire to burn other things. To day, science states that while fire does burn things and there is a strong probability that it will heat and burn, yet if ever it happens otherwise it would neither be against intellect nor the scientific rules, Hence, the scientists of today can at the most plead ignorance about miracles but cannot deny them as impossible in principle. This is perhaps why western people are turning towards things which they used to call Superstition by considering them Supernatural. The trend has gone to the extent that regular faculties for learning magic are being established in some universities of the West.

It has always been with the modernists that they promptly conform their opinion in line with the general thinking of the times, and build thereof a whole structure of ideas and thoughts without investigating the matter thoroughly. The same has happened in connection with the Miracles that at a time when Sir Syed Aḥmad Khan and his henchmen were declaring them as impossible although the general western attitude was to reject them, yet all scholars of science and philosophy had not toed in with Hume and Huxley in rejecting them. There were a large number of renowned scientists who believed in the Miracles, notably Newton, Freud, Simpson, Kelon and Lister. The famous German scientist Lotze has written several articles in support of Miracles and proved that miracles are in no way against common sense or science.⁵²

The extracts of scientists quoted in the preceding lines have not been presented in support of the truthfulness of the Qurān because the Truth of Qurān is independent of such support. It was True when the scientists were making fun of the supernatural events and it is True even today when the scientists themselves admit the possibility of supernaturals. If the scientific concepts change again tomorrow, its Truth will remain unaltered. We have presented these quotations only to emphasize how weak and undurable was the foundation of those who had tried to fashion the exegesis of the Qurān in line with prevailing concepts. They had tried to measure in the temporary scale a discourse the knowledge of which encompasses all fields of past and future and before which every human effort is no more than a child's play.

52: Encyclopaedia Britannica pp587, 588, 1950, Article on Miracles. The writer Alfred E Garvie has discussed exhaustively the need and possibility of miracles. He has asserted that miracles in no way defy intellect or science. The following books on this subject are worth reading: (1) Siratun Nabi v3p117 etc. 'Abdul Bārī Nadwī. (2) Mauqaful 'Aql wal'Ilm wal'Ālam, Shaikh Mustafa Ṣabri Bek. (3) Islam aur Mu'jizāt, Mawlana Shabbir Ahmad 'Uthmāni رحمه الله عليه.

Hence, instead of subjecting the Qurān to our own concepts, we must seek true guidance from it. It should be read as it was read by the Prophet ﷺ and his Companions رضى الله تعالى عنهم rather than through the spectacles of current concepts. Instead of being overawed by the prevalent thoughts, we must use those principles in interpreting the Quran on natural and reasonable principles of exegesis. We must present to the world with complete Faith and self confidence whatever is established conclusively instead of being shy and hesitant. The prevailing concepts may be altogether against it, yet the Qurān is True and if prosperity is the fate of humanity it will ultimately reach this Truth even after a thousand stumbling steps.

AGAINST REASON OR OBSERVATION

In this connection, a mental confusion may arise if we follow the established principles and continue to attribute to the Qurān is against clear observation. If we insist on the existing interpretation of the Qurān, it would amount to attributing to Allah that which have been disproved by absolute and unfailing observation.

It should be understood that the exegesis on originating from the Prophet ﷺ or consensus of the Companions has never been proved to be against intellect or sound observation. Scientific research and discoveries have gone through hundreds of changes over the last fourteen centuries but no authentically proved exegesis of the Qurān ever went against observation. Since Qurān is word of Allah and the Prophet Muhammad ﷺ was sent to interpret it through his words and deeds, every interpretation given by him is in accordance with the guidance of Allah, and hence it can never go against sound reason and clear observation.

However, there are two ways of committing an error in this matter.

- 1: Those people who are impressed easily by prevailing concepts make haste in declaring a thing as 'Against reason'. This is an established fact that every thing that is astonishing cannot be against reason, nor can every such thing be called impossible the causes of which have not been understood. Such a thing may be called improbable, extraordinary or astonishing, but to call it impossible is itself unreasonable. It is beyond comprehension of a man who is unfamiliar with science or technology, how a wireless set carries the voice of a person thousands of miles away. A villager may refuse to accept this fact if he is told of it. But this does not make hearing that sound against reason or impossible. Some commentators do not keep this in view when writing an exegesis of the Qur'an, and term every such thing against reason or impossible as may just be astonishing or at the most against habit or improbable, while confirmation of such things in the Qurān should not be surprising. We have explained in the beginning of this book that Wahy (Divine Revelation) towards the Prophets begins at the point where intellectual power fails. The real purpose of Wahy and Prophethood is to tell man that which he could not fathom merely by his intellect. Hence, without the agency of Wahy and Prophethood, human reasoning and intellect could never have perceived the realities of Resurrection and the Hereafter, accountability and reckoning, Paradise and Hell, Angels and so on. If on the other hand, these things could have been known by intellect alone there was no need to send Prophets عليهم السلام and divine revelations and scriptures to them. Hence, if we believe in Wahy and Prophethood, we shall also have to believe that through them we would know many such things as could not be known through intellect and reason alone.

When it is agreed that confirmation of such facts in the Qurān and Hadith is essential in relevance to their subject, we cannot reject an established interpretation merely because it is astonishing unless it is factually against reason and impossible. But no such thing has yet been traced in the established interpretations of the Qurān as may be impossible or against reason, nor would it happen until the Last Day. Further details in this connection will be discussed in the next chapter on "Principles of Exegesis."

- 2: The other error sometimes made is that although an existing interpretation of the Qur'ān is not certain either in the context of the Qurān or from an authentic saying of the Prophet ﷺ or from a consensus of the Ummah yet such an exegesis becomes so popular among the people that they regard it as certain and final interpretation. When such an interpretation is later proved wrong through sound reasoning or observation some ignorant people continue to insist on them, and some others suppose that likewise, the Qurān itself or its established interpretation may also be wrong. Hence, on such occasions we must see to what degree such an interpretation belongs and we must not consider it as final only on the basis of its general popularity.

The subject has been further discussed in detail under the "Principles of Exegesis" as to what should be the correct way to be adopted when it is an apparent contradiction between the reasoned and recorded arguments?

FOURTH CAUSE:

MISUNDERSTANDING THE QURĀNIC SUBJECT

The fourth wrong committed in the exegesis of the Qurān is that the subject of the Qurān is not correctly understood. People try to find such subjects in it as are outside its narrations. For instance, some people tax their brain to prove all scientific and physical realities and laws from the Qurān. They think that Qurān will be defective if these scientific realities could not be proved from it. So they sit down sincerely to prove scientific facts from the Qurān and to this end do not hesitate to attribute wrong meanings to the words of the Qurān. The fact is that science is not the real subject of the Qurān. Mention of realities of this universe, whenever found in the Qurān, has come up as a secondary subject. Thus, if we find a scientific fact mentioned in the Qurān, we must believe in it. But, to try to deduce a scientific fact or rule from it is akin to finding details of law in books of medicine.

The Qurān is not vague or ambiguous on its purpose but it has clarified in many verses the purpose of its revelation. For instance, the following verses need attention in this context,

قَدْ جَاءَكُمْ مِنَ اللَّهِ نُورٌ وَكِتَابٌ مُبِينٌ ۝ يَهْدِي بِهِ اللَّهُ مَنِ
اتَّبَعَ رِضْوَانَهُ سُبُلَ السَّلَامِ وَيُخْرِجُهُم مِّنَ الظُّلُمَاتِ إِلَى
النُّورِ بِإِذْنِهِ وَيَهْدِيهِمْ إِلَى صِرَاطٍ مُسْتَقِيمٍ ۝

Indeed there has come to you from Allah a Light and Book manifest, whereby Allah guides those who follow His good pleasure into the ways of peace, and brings them out from the depths of darkness into light by His decree, and guides them to the straight way. (Al-Mā'idah, 5:15-16)

يَا أَهْلَ الْكِتَابِ قَدْ جَاءَكُمْ رَسُولُنَا يُبَيِّنُ لَكُمْ عَلَى فَتْرَةٍ مِّنَ الرُّسُلِ أَنْ تَقُولُوا مَا جَاءَنَا مِن بَشِيرٍ وَلَا نَذِيرٍ فَقَدْ جَاءَكُمْ بَشِيرٌ وَنَذِيرٌ

O People of the Book! Now there has come to you Our Messenger, making things clear to you, after an interval (of cessation) of the Messengers lest you should say "There has not come to us any bearer of glad tidings, nor any warner." Indeed there has come to you now a bearer of glad tidings and a warner. (Al-Mā'idah, 5:19)

وَأَنْزَلْنَا إِلَيْكَ الْكِتَابَ بِالْحَقِّ مُصَدِّقًا لِّمَا بَيْنَ يَدَيْهِ مِنَ الْكِتَابِ وَمُهَيِّمًا عَلَيْهِ فَاحْكُم بَيْنَهُم بِمَا أَنْزَلَ اللَّهُ وَلَا تَتَّبِعْ أَهْوَاءَهُمْ عَمَّا جَاءَكَ مِنَ الْحَقِّ لِكُلِّ جَعَلْنَا مِنْكُمْ شِرْعَةً وَمِنْهَاجًا وَلَوْ شَاءَ اللَّهُ لَجَعَلَكُمْ أُمَّةً وَاحِدَةً وَلَكِنْ لِّيَبْلُوَكُمْ فِي مَا آتَاكُمْ فَاسْتَبِقُوا الْخَيْرَاتِ إِلَى اللَّهِ مَرْجِعُكُمْ جَمِيعًا فَيُنَبِّئُكُمْ بِمَا كُنْتُمْ فِيهِ تَخْتَلِفُونَ ۝

And We have revealed to you (O Prophet) the Book with the truth, confirming that which was before it of the Book, and a guardian thereof. So judge between them according to what Allah has revealed and follow not their caprices by forsaking the truth that has come to you. To every (people) We have appointed a law and a way (of ritual). And if Allah had willed, He would have surely made you all a single community; but (He willed otherwise) that He might try you in what He gave you. So outstrip one another in virtuous deeds. To Allah is the return of all of you, so He will then inform you of that wherein you used to differ. (Al-Mā'idah, 5:48)

وَكَذَلِكَ نَفَصَّلُ الْآيَاتِ وَلِتَسْتَبِينَ سَبِيلُ الْمُجْرِمِينَ ○

And thus do We explain the revelations in detail, that the way of the sinners may be shown up clearly.

(Al-An'am, 6:55)

كِتَابٌ أَنْزَلَ إِلَيْكَ فَلَا يَكُنْ فِيْ صَدْرِكَ حَرَجٌ مِنْهُ لِتُنذِرَ بِهِ
وَذِكْرَى لِلْمُؤْمِنِينَ ○

This is a Book revealed to you (O Prophet) let there be no impediment in your heart therefrom — that you may warn thereby (the disbelievers), and this is an admonition to the Believers. (Al-A'raf, 7:1)

أَوْعَجِبْتُمْ أَنْ جَاءَكُمْ ذِكْرٌ مِنْ رَبِّكُمْ عَلَى رَجُلٍ مِنْكُمْ
لِيُنذِرَكُمْ وَلِتَتَّقُوا وَلَعَلَّكُمْ تُرْحَمُونَ ○

Do you wonder that admonition should come to you from your Lord through a man from among you, that he may warn you, and that you may fear (Allah) and that you may be shown mercy? (Al-A'raf, 7:63)

تِلْكَ آيَاتُ الْكِتَابِ الْحَكِيمِ ○ هُدًى وَرَحْمَةً لِلْمُحْسِنِينَ ○
الَّذِينَ يُقِيمُونَ الصَّلَاةَ وَيُؤْتُونَ الزَّكَاةَ وَهُمْ بِالْآخِرَةِ هُمْ
يُوقِنُونَ ○

These are verses (āyāt) of the Wise Book. A guidance and a mercy for the good-doers, who establish the Ṣalah and pay the Zakāh, and of the Hereafter they are convinced. (Luqman, 31:1-4)

تَنْزِيلُ الْكِتَابِ لَا رَيْبَ فِيهِ مِنْ رَبِّ الْعَالَمِينَ ○ أَمْ يَقُولُونَ
افْتَرَاهُ بَلْ هُوَ الْحَقُّ مِنْ رَبِّكَ لِتُنذِرَ قَوْمًا مَّا أَتَاهُمْ مِنْ نَذِيرٍ
مِنْ قَبْلِكَ لَعَلَّهُمْ يَهْتَدُونَ ○

The revelation of the Book, therein is no doubt, is from the Lord of the worlds, or do they say, "He has forged it?" Nay, it is the Truth from your Lord (O Prophet) that you may warn a people to whom no warner came before you, that they may be guided. (As-Sajdah, 32:1-3)

تَنْزِيلَ الْعَزِيزِ الرَّحِيمِ ○ لِتُنذِرَ قَوْمًا مَّا أُنذِرَ آبَاؤُهُمْ فَهُمْ
غَافِلُونَ ○

(This Qurān) is a revelation of the Mighty, the Merciful, that you may warn a people whose fathers were not warned, so they are heedless. (Yā-sīn, 36:5-6)

إِنَّا أَنْزَلْنَا إِلَيْكَ الْكِتَابَ بِالْحَقِّ فَاعْبُدِ اللَّهَ مُخْلِصًا لَهُ الدِّينَ ○

Surely We have revealed to you (O Prophet) the Book with truth, so worship Allah, keeping your faith sincerely to Him. (Az-Zumar, 39:2)

وَكَذَلِكَ أَوْحَيْنَا إِلَيْكَ قُرْآنًا عَرَبِيًّا لِتُنذِرَ أُمَّ الْقُرَى وَمَنْ
حَوْلَهَا وَتُنذِرَ يَوْمَ الْجَمْعِ لَا رَيْبَ فِيهِ فَرِيقٌ فِي الْجَنَّةِ
وَفَرِيقٌ فِي السَّعِيرِ ○

And thus We have revealed to you an Arabic Qurān that you may warn the mother-town, and those around it, and that you may warn of the Day of Gathering, whereof there is no doubt, (when) a party will be in the Garden, and a party in the blazing Fire. (Ash-Shūra, 42:7)

ثُمَّ جَعَلْنَاكَ عَلَىٰ شَرِيعَةٍ مِّنَ الْأَمْرِ فَاتَّبِعْهَا وَلَا تَتَّبِعْ أَهْوَاءَ
الَّذِينَ لَا يَعْلَمُونَ ۝ إِنَّهُمْ لَن يَغْنَوْا عَنْكَ مِنَ اللَّهِ شَيْئًا وَإِنَّ
الظَّالِمِينَ بَعْضُهُمْ أَوْلِيَاءُ بَعْضٍ وَاللَّهُ وَلِيُّ الْمُتَّقِينَ ۝ هَذَا
بَصَائِرُ لِلنَّاسِ وَهُدًى وَرَحْمَةٌ لِّقَوْمٍ يُوقِنُونَ ۝

Then We established you (O Prophet) on a Shariah (Open way) of (Our) Command; so follow it, and follow not the caprices of those who know not. Surely they cannot avail you of anything against Allah, and surely the evildoers are friends of one another; and Allah is the Friend of the God-fearing. This (Qufān) is an enlightenment for mankind, and a guidance and a mercy for people who are convinced. (Al-Jāthiyah, 45:18-20)

اللَّهُ نَزَّلَ أَحْسَنَ الْحَدِيثِ كِتَابًا مُّتَشَابِهًا مَّثَانِيَ تَقْشَعِرُّ مِنْهُ
جُلُودُ الَّذِينَ يَخْشَوْنَ رَبَّهُمْ ثُمَّ تَلِينُ جُلُودُهُمْ وَقُلُوبُهُمْ إِلَىٰ
ذِكْرِ اللَّهِ ۚ ذَٰلِكَ هُدًى اللَّهِ يَهْدِي بِهِ مَن يَشَاءُ ۚ وَمَن يُضْلِلِ
اللَّهُ فَمَا لَهُ مِن هَادٍ ۝

Allah has (now) sent down the most excellent discourse, a Book alike throughout, oft-repeating (its teachings,) whereat shiver the skins of those who fear their Lord, then their skins and their hearts soften to Allah's remembrance. This is Allah's guidance He guides with it whomsoever He will. And he whom Allah sends astray, there is no guide for him. (Az-Zumar, 39:23)

These are just a few examples, and if one ponders over them it will be clear that the real purpose of the Qur̄an is to exhort man to prepare for the Hereafter, and to teach him to pass this life in accordance with the will of Allah. Then whatever it narrates of the historical facts or references of the Universe and galaxies are all meant to support and affirm the same basic theme. Hence, if we do not find a popular scientific fact in it, it should neither surprise us nor is anything wrong in it because that is not the theme of the Qur̄an. Similarly, if there be no mention of a past or future event, there should be no objection because it is not a book of history. However the Qur̄an describes here and there some incidents by way of lesson and admonition. This answers the objection of those non-Muslims who ask why the Qur̄an does not refer to the arts and sciences through which material advancement has been attained by the Western countries? It also removes the misunderstanding of those who try to somehow prove scientific theories or laws from the Qur̄an to cope with these objections. Such an attempt is like looking into a Law Book for a formula to make an atom bomb and an attempt by some other people to extract the theory of atom by distorting the legal phraseology of the book. Obviously, these other people are foolish if they attempt to discover the theory in a Law book. Similarly, if some one objects to the absence of scientific and engineering theories, it is foolish to distort the words of the Qur̄an to somehow extract those theories or laws from it. The correct answer to the objection is that the Qur̄an is neither a book of science or engineering nor material advancement is its theme, because a man can find that out through his intellect, wisdom, experiments and observations. That is why Allah has left it to man to investigate about these things. The Qur̄an has as its theme only what cannot be conceived through intellect and reasoning alone, but Divine guidance in the form of Wahy is essential for them. Thus, man has attained heights in the field of Science and Technology through his intellect, thinking, experiments and observations. But he could not progress in Faith and Belief, purity of heart and soul, goodness of character and deeds, devotion in worship and preparedness for the Hereafter. These things are not possible without the Wahy from Allah and are therefore, subjects of the Qurān. Man cannot attain them in spite of his excellences of intellect and thinking, nor can they be attained unless guidance from the Qurān is sought with sincerity.

We do not mean to say it is wrong to deduce a scientific fact from the Qurān. We also admit that there is a mention of scientific realities in the Qurān as a passing reference, hence, if we find any explicit scientific fact in the Qurān, there is nothing wrong in narrating it. But one must avoid the following errors in this connection:

- 1: Any scientific reality mentioned in the Qurān is only in passing. Its real object is to reflect on the supreme authority of Allah and to strengthen the Faith. Hence, it is totally wrong to consider the Qurān as a source of information on science.
- 2: Where no information of a scientific subject is found it would be wrong to distort the words of the Qurān to accommodate scientific facts into it. This is well understood by means of the following example:

When the scientists said that the Earth was stationary and other planets were revolving round it, some people tried to prove this theory from the Qurān, and cited the following verse:

أَمَّنْ جَعَلَ الْأَرْضَ قَرَارًا

Who made this earth a fixed abode. (An-Naml, 27:61)

Those people pleaded that the word (fixed abode) denoted that the Earth was stationary. However, Qurān only recalls the blessing of Allah that man lives on this earth restfully rather than be unstable on it, and has no trouble in sitting or lying down or moving about on it. Obviously, this blessing of Allah has nothing to do with the movement or not of the Earth. But, in fact, the blessing is bestowed on man irrespective of whether the earth is stationary or moving. Hence trying to prove from this verse that the Earth is stationary is uncalled for and an unnecessary introduction of new meaning into it.

Later on, when science advanced the theory of Rotation of Earth as opposed to its being stationary, some people again occupied themselves in finding proof for that in the Qurān, and the following verse was presented as an argument:

وَتَرَى الْجِبَالَ تَحْسَبُهَا جَامِدَةً وَهِيَ تَمُرُّ مَرَّ السَّحَابِ

And you shall see the mountains — you think them firmly fixed — passing away as the passing away of the clouds.... (An-Naml, 27:88)

These people translated the word (تمر) as referring to earth (feminine noun in Arabic) while it refers to mountains (and is the female singular of the plural noun mountains).

On this basis they advocated that this verse described the movement of the Earth because the movement of mountains in fact means the movement of Earth. The context of the verse shows clearly that it pertains to the happenings of the Last Day. The verse simply means that the seemingly unmoving mountains shall (on the Last Day) be floating in the atmosphere like the clouds.

The fact is that the Qurān is silent on the subject of rotation of Earth and there is no mention of it in the entire Qurān, because this is not part of its theme. We cannot prove or disprove movement of the earth from the Qurān. Hence, whichever view is adopted in the light of scientific arguments, the Qurān does not interfere; it poses no danger to Faith and Religion either way.

It should be noted here that often sincere attempts are made to show that the Qurān narrates scientific facts and the intention generally is to convince the non-Muslims that the discoveries which they had made after hundreds of years have already been foretold in the Qurān. But if this is done by violating the principle of exegesis, it is not being friendly to the Qurān. When they were trying to prove through the Qurān that Earth is stationary they considered it a great service to the Qurān, but if it was universally accepted that the Qurān speaks of a stationary Earth, what effect this would have had when science changed its views and said the earth rotates? Hence, only those things about science can be attributed to the Qurān which are explicitly proved in it; but those not clearly mentioned in the Qurān cannot be attributed to it. It was wrong to do so in the past, and it is wrong even today.⁵³

SOME IMPORTANT PRINCIPLES OF EXEGESIS

As has been stated already, exegesis of the Qurān and deduction of laws and commands from it form part of a very vast subject. In order to fully understand its principles a knowledge of Arabic language and literature, its grammar and composition, Hadith and Jurisprudence are essential. All these principles cannot be discussed in this book. The science of Principles of Jurisprudence comprises mostly the principles of deducing the Laws and Commands from the Qurān. It is essential for anybody wishing to acquire a detailed knowledge of this science, to learn it from the experts in this field. In these pages, however we wish to mention some of the broad principles of the exegesis of the Qurān that can be understood without a thorough proficiency in the science of principles of jurisprudence. These are the principles which if ignored, cause misunderstandings and sometimes a divergence into the wrong. These are not all the principles of exegesis of the Qurān but are some selected discussions on this subject according to the need of the present times.

1: THE NOBLE QURĀN AND ALLEGORIC MEANINGS

Sometimes a word is used not in its literal sense but in allegorical sense. For example, the real meaning of the word "lion" is "a wild carnivorous animal" but sometimes it is also used in the meaning of "a brave man". For instance, "Richard, the lion-hearted" does not mean that Richard had the heart of lion in his body, but that Richard was a brave person. Similarly, many other words are used in a certain context where the literal meanings do not apply but a proverbial reference is made. This style is employed in the Qurān too. This does not mean however, that everyone is at liberty to give to a Qurānic word a literal meaning or an allegorical meaning as he chooses. The scholars of Islam have framed an appropriate rule on which there is a general consensus. We must understand the rule here. The rule is that in the first place the literal meaning of a word of the Qurān would apply, and the proverbial or allegoric meaning would be adopted only when the literal meaning cannot be adopted due to a sound reason. Where there is no such reason, the proverbial meaning shall not apply. Following are the situations which serve as sound reasons for this purpose.

- 1: Reason or unfailing observation may show that the literal meaning does not fit. A detailed discussion will follow when the next principle on Reason and the Qurān is discussed.
- 2: The literal meanings of a sentence may have become obsolete from proverbial or allegoric point of view. For instance, it has been said about the unbelievers

فَقَلِيلًا مَّا يُؤْمِنُونَ ○

So little is that they believe. (Al-Baqarah, 2:88)

The literal meaning of the word قليل is small, little or not big, but in this sentence in a proverbial use it does not mean "they believe but only a little", but it means "they do not believe at all" and in this way the word قلیل is proverbially used in the negative sense. The English word 'few' or 'little' has the same implication.

3: The style of the Qurānic phrase may not allow for the literal meaning to be read. For instance, the Qurān says,

فَمَنْ شَاءَ فَلْيُؤْمِنْ وَمَنْ شَاءَ فَلْيُكْفُرْ

So let him who wills believe, and let him who will, disbelieve. (Al-Khaf, 18:29)

The exact literal meanings of these words would be that (God forbid) this is a permission from Allah to man to believe or disbelieve as he chooses. But further on it is said

إِنَّا أَعْتَدْنَا لِلظَّالِمِينَ نَارًا

Surely we have prepared for the evildoers a fire...

(Al-Kahf, 18:29)

These words make it obvious that the verse does not permit man to choose belief or disbelief at his will, but that after having known the consequences of either path, man is at liberty to remain in the state of disbelief or adopt the way of belief. In the former instance he would face the torment of Hell and in the later case he will receive the pleasure of Allah.⁵⁴

Except for the above situations it will not be correct to interpret any word in its proverbial sense in preference to its literal sense. This is an accepted principle and it is unquestionable that it is reasonable too. If a free hand is allowed to choose proverbial sense in the words of Allah, no verse of the Qurān will escape interpolation in its meanings, and every body would impose his self-conceived ideas on the Qurān on the plea that proverbial meanings of the words or phrases apply.

54: In order to avoid a detailed discourse in the meanings, we have used simple words to outline the principle. A detailed discourse may be seen in the Books of fiqh notably Bayḍāwī's "Uṣūl aur us Ki sharah and 'Abdul 'Azīz Al-Najāri's." Kashf al-Asrār.

The matter is not limited only to literal and proverbial meanings. Sometimes there may be more than one literal meaning of a word or a sentence. In such a situation the rule is that the meanings which are nearest, more explicit and readily understood shall be adopted. Distant or hidden meanings shall not be adopted unless any of the above mentioned situation exists in rejecting the nearest meanings, or these other meanings are known to have been applied by the Prophet ﷺ.

Thus 'Allāmah Badruddin Zarkashi رحمه الله عليه has said:

احدهما ان يكون احدهما اظهر من الآخر، فيجب الحمل على
الظاهر الا ان يقوم دليل على ان المراد هو الخفى دون الجلى
فيحمل عليه -

(The likelihood of more than one meaning of the text of the Qurān is) first, when one meaning is more clear than the other so only such clear meanings will be applied except there be a reason to prefer the rare meaning to the apparent. In the latter case, the rare meaning will be chosen.⁵⁵

This principle is so self-evident and reasonable that one cannot ignore it even in the common human discourses, to say nothing of the words of Allah. If this is ignored, it will not be possible to understand the other person's speech in its true perspective. Suppose a man reaches the Railway station and asks his servant "Go and buy the ticket." If now this servant goes and brings the Postage stamp instead of a Railway Ticket, he would be called a stupid person although both possibilities existed in the word "Ticket".⁵⁶ But it was the stupidity of the servant that instead of adopting the nearest and more apparent meanings he adopted the distant and inevident meanings. Similarly, if the ruler of a town orders an engineer to have a canal dug up at a particular place so that the surrounding area may be fertile, but the engineer builds a school claiming that the ruler meant so and in support of his view presents references from great writers and poets that they have used the word "canal" (قناة) allegorically in the meaning of "education institution", what would people say of such an engineer? He will be considered an insane person because his interpretation can only be correct if there exists a valid argument against the use of its literal meaning which does not exist here.

Some people have fallen a prey to grave aberrances in the exegesis of Qurān ignoring this principle. In olden times a group of renegades existed by the name of Qarāmiṭah or Bāṭiniyyah. They had built the entire structure of their religion in that they gave strange and rather funny meanings to every word of the Qurān. Thus they claimed that in the Qurān 'Ṣalāh' means 'submission to the leader' (Bāṭinī leader), 'Ḥajj' means 'visit to their leader and service to him', Ṣaum (Fasting) means 'To abstain from disclosing the secrets of their leader' 'Fornication' means 'disclosing a secret of the Bāṭinī People'⁵⁷ The 'Staff of Mūsa' means 'Victory of Mūsa' and 56: Actually this example is given in Urdu and the word ticket is used in Urdu for postage stamp also.

57: Al-Farq baynel firq, Abdul Qāhir al-Baghdadi al-Asfaraine, p296. Cairo.

the 'Shade of clouds' means 'Establishing their Rule.'⁵⁸

In the present time also there have been several authors who have defied this rule and dangerously stumbled in the path of exegesis. For instance, on the basis of a cursory knowledge of western philosophy in the beginning of nineteenth century some Modernists rejected all such things out of Islamic beliefs that were described by the Westerners as "Superstitions." To achieve that they made such interpolations in the Qurān that one shudders at the thought. In this way they have labelled about half the Qurānic verses as allegorical, metaphors and parables. For instance, the Qurān has described, at several places, the creation of Sayyidina Ādam ﷺ, the prostration of angels before him, and the transgression of Iblīs. But since at that time Darwin's theory of Evolution was becoming very popular in the West, and some incomplete information about it were being received in India also, those Modernists claimed that the story of Sayyidina Ādam ﷺ, angels, and Iblīs described in the Qurān is simply a parable, otherwise they have never really existed. Hence Sir Sayyed Ahmad Khan has written;

"By the word Ādam is not meant the particular being whom the people and the Mullahs of the mosque call Father Ādam, but by it is meant the mankind."⁵⁹

He further writes:

Four parties are named in this incident, Firstly Gods⁶⁰ secondly the Angels (that is, angelic traits), thirdly Iblis or Satān (that is, beastly traits), fourthly Ādam (that is, mankind which is a composite of all these traits and includes men and women both.) The purpose of the story is to describe human nature by means of human faculty of expression.”

The question arose that the Qurān has stated about the angels that they remain busy in praising and glorifying Allah. How is it so? In reply Sir Sayyed writes.

“Whatever traits describe the task to keep on doing the same task, and this is their praise and glorification. The faculties of sleep, speech, burning, flowing, freezing cannot do anything other than inducing sleep, speech, burning, flowing and freezing respectively.”

The question then arose what was meant by Ādam's abode in Paradise, eating from the forbidden tree, and his descent from there to the earth? Note the jugglery of “Allegory and Parable” in reply to this question:

“Right from the beginning we do not consider this story of Ādam and Iblīs as a real story, but just an expression of human nature in its own language. Hence, the stay of man in Paradise is an expression of a state of his nature when he was not bound to any Do's and Don'ts.... And his going near the Forbidden Tree and eating its fruit denotes the state of his nature when he became bound from that boundless state. The use of the word Descent is not specific for change of place alone.”⁶¹

The question still arose that Iblis refused to go in prostration because he was created out of fire and Ādam out of dust, what could it mean?

“Describing the beastly traits as creation from fire is exactly an expression of their nature of originating from internal and external heat."

61: Tafsīr ul-Qurān, Sir Sayyed Aḥmad Khan.v1, p51.

In the words of Sir Sayyed the whole incident is summarized as under:

"This Trait of mankind has been described by God in the metaphor of Garden, hence the entire nature has been described in the same metaphor of Garden. 'Tree' means reaching the age of maturity, eating the fruit is cognition of good and bad, covering the body with tree leaves is man's concealing his evils. But mankind was not allowed to reach the fruit from the Tree of Paradise, which proved that his is a mortal existence and not an eternal existence."⁶²

We do not feel the necessity of any scholastic review on these excerpts.⁶³

Just go through the story of Ādam and Iblīs in the Qurān and try to collaborate it with these interpolations and it will become quite clear what absurdities have been attributed to the Qurān just by ignoring the established principles about discriminating the real from the allegoric.

Similarly, the Qurān is full of descriptions about the blessings of Paradise. The picturesque gardens, green and colourful atmosphere, flowing rivers, elegant houses, beautiful and pure companions, delicious foods and fruits

62: Tafsīr ul-Qurān, Sir Sayyed Aḥmad Khan, v1, p159.

63: However, it has just reminded us of a famous leader of Baṭīniyyh, named Ubaidullah bin Al-Hasan Al-Qīrwānī who had written to one of his followers, "I make the bequest that you cast doubts and suspicions in the minds of people about the Qurān, Torāh, Zabūr and Injīl, invite them towards rescission of all religious laws, and erase the concept of Hereafter, Resurrection and Doomsday, Angels in the sky and Jinns on the earth. I further will that you invite people to the belief that there had been many a mankind that existed even before Ādam, because this will help you to prove this world as immortal."

have been mentioned in countless verses. But according to Sir Sayyed Aḥmad Khan all this is allegoric and metaphoric. The main purpose is to describe a 'high grade of bliss and comfort', These things have been described only to lure the illiterate people to dedicate themselves to worship. He writes:

"A trained mind thinks that the promises and warnings, Hell and Paradise do not exactly mean the self-same objects, but the extreme degree of happiness and comfort, in similitude, compatible to human understanding. This creates an ecstatic sense of blessings of Paradise and an urge to obey the Commands and abstain from the forbidden. The stupid Mullāhs or lustful devotees think that they would get innumerable beautiful women (Hūrs), drink wine, eat fruit, take bath in the rivers of milk and honey, and shall have all the luxuries they would wish. And due to these stupid and frivolous thoughts they keep himself busy day and night in obeying the commands and abstaining from the forbidden."⁶⁴

The truth is that if the principle about the Obvious and Allegoric, is set aside, there is not the worst of superstition and the meanest of action that might not be attributed to the Qurān. The Bāṭiniyyah had used the same tool to prove Zoroasteric belief from the Qurān, and even today there are many Christian priests who are using the distant and irrelevant interpretations of Qurānic verse to prove that it supports Christian faith. Hence, it is ironic that about half the Qurān becomes comprised of allegories and metaphors. If the growth of trees is termed as 'angels', the rivers stand for power of 'movement', fire is an expression for power of heat, 64: Tafsīr ul-Qurān. Sir Sayyed Aḥmad Khan v1, p35.

Ādam means 'mankind', Iblīs is the word to denote 'evil forces', then Hell could mean worldly afflictions, Paradise would stand for worldly comforts and even for "God" it may be said that it is not the name of a constant existant Being but it represents the reality of this universe, that is, matter or energy, and the conception of God given by the Qurān has been described by Muḥammad ﷺ to frighten the Beduins of Arabia and call them towards righteous deeds. In this way the weapon of 'Allegory and Metaphor' totally eradicates belief and religion, and even a belief in the existence of God does not remain necessary to practise the teachings of the Qurān. This is not our hypothesis but the Bāṭiniyyahs had actually made such claims through unchecked freedom in the use of allegories and metaphors.

'Allāmah 'Abdul Qāhir Baghdādī رحمه الله عليه writes:

"The famous leader of Bāṭiniyyah sect, 'Ubaidullah bin Al-Ḥasan Qirwānī has written in his book that 'reward and punishment of Hereafter are absurdities. By 'Paradise' is in fact meant the comforts and luxuries of this world, and 'Torment' represents the religious devotees remaining trapped in the whirlwind of Ṣalah, Fasting, Ḥajj and Jehād."⁶⁵

Hence, if one wants to benefit from the Qurān in its capacity of the Book of Guidance from Allāh, it would be extremely irrational, frivolous and risky that if there is anything in the Qurān against one's own views one may open the door of self-invented interpretations and claim that distant and allegoric meanings are to be adopted in preference to obvious and straightforward meanings. The present day authors who have used their pen for the exegesis of the Qurān without fulfilling the basic requirements of the science of exegesis have very often made this fundamental error in their writings. If the above mentioned principle is kept in view while reading the works of these authors, most of these errors would become easily manifest.

2: THE NOBLE QURĀN AND HUMAN RATIONALE

Some writers of the present era sometimes apply distant meanings to the texts of the Qurān and Hadith on the plea that their obvious meanings are against common sense and reason. Hence, they must be interpreted in a way that is not against reason. Since a great deal of errors are being made in this matter, a detailed discussion on the subject is being presented.

First of all, it should be understood that henceforth we shall call as 'Recorded arguments' those things that are proved from the Qurān and Hadith and as 'Human rationale' or 'logic' those things that we find through reason.

The main reason why misunderstandings arise in this connection is explained here. Our scholars have laid down in their books the rule that logic will be adopted if Recorded Arguments are against them. If the latter are not authentically documented they would be regarded as incorrect, and if their authenticity is unquestionable it would be said that their obvious meanings are not intended, and if another meaning can be informally adopted that will be taken as the intended meaning. If an informal explanation is not conceived it would be said that the true meanings have not been understood by us, and the reality is best known to Allah. It is this kind of Recorded Arguments that is termed as 'Mutashabihāt' (Doutful).⁶⁶

66: Imām Rāzi book Asās Taqdīs fi 'Ilm al kalām p72-73, Chapter 32. Mustafa al-Bābi. Egypt 1354 AH.

The above mentioned rule is well known to scholars but due to a lack of true understanding some writers have adopted the practice of declaring every such thing as against reason which goes against their self-conceived opinion while it has been fully explained by those who have framed this rule. Let us thoroughly understand this explanation. Mawlāna Ashraf Ali Thānvī رحمه الله عليه has described this rule very well in his journal 'Al-Intibā hāt-ul-Mufīdah..' We shall first mention this rule in his own words (translated) as below:

"There are four possible differences in the Recorded argument and Logic or Human Rationale. Firstly: Both may be certain and decisive. This does not exist nor it can exist because opposition among Truths is impossible.

Secondly: Both may be presumptive wherein although a combination is possible through obvious meanings only, but according to the rule of the language weight of the actual words will be put on the obvious. Recorded arguments will be subjected to the obvious, and logic will not be taken as conclusive.

Thirdly: Recorded argument may be certain and human rationale may be presumptive. In this situation undoubtedly the former will be preferred.

Fourthly: Logic may be certain and the recorded arguments be presumptive, proof-wise or reason-wise. Here the former will be preferred and the latter will be subject to interpretation. Hence this is the only situation where reason may have precedence over narration, and thus it cannot be used or claimed at every place."⁶⁷

In order to understand this rule it should first be kept in mind that human rationale or 'Reason' may be of three kinds:

(1) CONCLUSIVE REASON

These are such logical arguments that are absolutely conclusive and accepted by all people without the least demur. It is absolutely certain that there cannot be anything against them. For instance, two and two make four, is a conclusive logical argument which can never be refuted. Two and two can never be three or five just as it is impossible that a man may be present at a place and absent too at the same time.

(2) PRESUMPTIVE REASON

These are such logical statements that may not be absolutely certain but in view of reason and experience their truth may be highly probable. All intellectuals do not always come together to accept the truth of these statements, but differences in viewpoints have arisen in these matters due to different times and regions. For instance, Newton's Theory of Gravity, Einstein's Theory of Relativity, Darwin's Theory of Evolution, etc. Obviously, none of these were absolutely conclusive but these philosophers had formed an opinion on the basis of their intellect and experience which they considered to be more correct in view of the state of knowledge and environment of that period. But this view cannot be taken as absolutely correct. That is why many other philosophers differed from it. Some particular viewpoint captured their minds at a certain period of time but at another time the same view was rejected.

(3) CONJECTURAL HUMAN RATIONALE

These are those arguments that are based on conjecture or imagination rather than certainty or probability. For instance, until recently scientists thought that there was life on Mars. This was not based on any conclusive or presumptive reasons but on imaginary speculations.

Similarly, Recorded Arguments may also be divided into three kinds.

(1) CONCLUSIVE RECORDED ARGUMENTS

These are the arguments which are absolutely conclusive. Subjectwise their words are clear and explicit and their proof is also absolutely reliable. For instance, the Qurānic injunction لا تقربوا الزنا (Do not go even near adultery). This is a certain and conclusive argument that adultery is forbidden in Islam, because Muslims do not doubt that the Qurān is the word of Allah, and this verse conclusively proves that the Qurān prohibits adultery. Similarly, the matters that are proved from uninterrupted Prophetic Narrations⁶⁸ or absolute consensus are of the same kind.

(2) PRESUMPTIVE RECORDED ARGUMENTS

These are arguments that are not so conclusive as the first kind but whatever is deduced from them is correct in all probabilities. For instance, such traditions as are not uninterrupted but conform to the Principles of Hadith. Although it is incumbent to follow them in practice and 68: Un-interrupted or 'Mutawātir' traditions are those sayings of the Prophet ﷺ which had been reported by so many people at every period of time that it would be impossible to consider them all as liars. With regard to transmission such traditions are regarded as certain and conclusive. But the traditions whose reporters had been reduced to one, two or three at a certain period i.e. Akhbar-e-Āhad' are regarded as Presumptive, that is, their proof is not so certain as that of uninterrupted reports. However, if they fulfil the conditions of Principles of Hadith most probably they are correct, hence there is a consensus of the entire Ummah that it is obligatory to adopt them.

they should not be opposed, yet they are placed in the second grade because their transmission is not as certain and conclusive as the Qurān and uninterrupted traditions. Hence, if such a tradition goes against the Qurān and uninterrupted traditions, it would be interpreted in conformity with the Qurān or uninterrupted traditions. If such interpretation is not possible, it would be forsaken.

(3) CONJECTURAL RECORDED ARGUMENTS

These are such recorded arguments whose correctness is not even probable but are based on imagination and speculation, for instance those traditions that do not conform to the principles of Hadith.

Of the above six kinds, two (conjectural rationale and conjectural recorded arguments) are not reliable at all. Hence, we need not discuss them. Keeping the other four in view four possibilities of differences may occur in the logical and Recorded arguments.

- i) The first Possibility is that both (Recorded and Logical arguments) may be conclusive. This is only a hypothesis. Practically it has never happened so far. It is possible that a conclusive recorded argument may contradict a conclusive human rationale. If at all it appears to be so, then the recorded argument would be conclusive only as far as its transmission and precedent. But the argument would not be conclusive. And if the argument is conclusive the transmission and precedent would not be conclusive. It has never happened and shall never happen that a recorded argument be conclusive in all senses and yet be against conclusive logical argument: i.e. human rationale.
- ii) The second possibility is that the recorded argument be presumptive and human rationale be conclusive and the two may clash with each other. This is the situation about which scholars and intellectuals have said that reliance will be placed on Logical argument (or human rationale) and reason, and the recorded argument will be interpreted in a manner that it will be in conformity with the conclusive logical argument. For instance, the Qurān says:

الرَّحْمَنُ عَلَى الْعَرْشِ السَّتْوَى ar-Rahman (Allah) straightened on the Throne.

This is a Qurānic verse, hence it is conclusive but the translation is not conclusive because the word 'استوى' can have several meanings in idiomatic Arabic, and the meaning adopted here is not conclusive. Hence, this is an example of that recorded argument which is presumptive on argumental basis. On the other side, the meaning that is obvious (that is, straightening on the Throne) is against logical argument because "straightening" is a quality of body, and the conclusive arguments of intellect denote that Allah is not a 'body'. In this way the presumptive Recorded Argument is contradictory to Conclusive Logical Argument. Hence the exegetists of the Ummah unanimously adopted the latter, and all the scholars agreed that in this verse its obvious meanings are not intended. Then, some of them called it an allegory and said that it signifies power and authority etc., and some of them said that this verse is one of those "mutashābihāt" (doubtful) about whom Allah has said.....

وَمَا يَعْلَمُ تَأْوِيلَهُ إِلَّا اللَّهُ

But none knows its interpretation except Allah.

(Āl-Imrān, 3:7)

Similarly, in connection with the story of Zulqarnayn, the Qurān states

حَتَّىٰ إِذَا بَلَغَ مَغْرِبَ الشَّمْسِ وَجَدَهَا تَغْرُبُ فِي عَيْنٍ حَمِئَةٍ

Until, when he reached the setting-place of the sun, he found it setting in a miry spring. (Al-Kahf, 18:86)

This is also a verse of the Qurān, hence undoubtedly, the word of Allah. But the obvious meaning of this sentence creates an impression that the sun was actually setting in a muddy spring, but this is not correct in view of conclusive arguments of intellect and observation, because it is a reality that the sun and earth are separate spheres which do not meet each other at any point. Hence, this obvious meaning cannot be adopted. It would mean that the place where Zulqarnayn reached at that time was not inhabited beyond and it was all quagmire as far as the eye could see. Hence a viewer on that spot would feel that sun was setting in that quagmire. Although this interpretation is not as obvious from the words of this phrase as the previous one but since there is room for it in those words this verse is presumptive on the first meaning, and when it is placed before the conclusive arguments of intellect and observation, they are acceptable and the explanation of the verse is unanimously adopted which is in conformity with these conclusive arguments.

The third situation may be that the Recorded argument be conclusive and the logical argument or human rationale be presumptive. In this case, obviously the Recorded argument will be preferred because here the Presumptive Argument cannot supercede conclusive argument. For instance, Darwin claimed in his Theory of Evolution that the human race did not come into existence by itself, but animals passed through a chain of evolution with the passage of time and as a result they went through many stages until the last before transformation into human shape was monkeys or apes which ultimately envolved into human beings.

Obviously, Darwin's Theory was an Imaginative view, and the arguments advanced by him (if they can be called as 'arguments') were at the most presumptive arguments. But against it the Qurān makes an explicit statement:

يَا أَيُّهَا النَّاسُ اتَّقُوا رَبَّكُمُ الَّذِي خَلَقَكُمْ مِنْ نَفْسٍ وَاحِدَةٍ
وَخَلَقَ مِنْهَا زَوْجَهَا وَبَثَّ مِنْهُمَا رِجَالًا كَثِيرًا وَنِسَاءً

O mankind Fear your Lord, Who created you from a single person, and from him He created his mate, and from the twain He spread abroad many men and women.

(An-Nisā, 4:1)

and further stated:

وَإِذْ قَالَ رَبُّكَ لِلْمَلَائِكَةِ إِنِّي خَالِقٌ بَشَرًا مِنْ صَلْصَالٍ مِنْ
حَمِإٍ مَسْنُونٍ ۝ فَإِذَا سَوَّيْتُهُ وَنَفَخْتُ فِيهِ مِنْ رُوحِي فَقَعُوا
لَهُ سَاجِدِينَ ۝ فَسَجَدَ الْمَلَائِكَةُ كُلُّهُمْ أَجْمَعُونَ ۝

And (recall) when your Lord said to the angels, 'Surely I am creating a mortal out of a ringing clay of mud moulded. So When I have shaped him, and breathed into him of My spirit, fall you down before him prostrating — so the angels prostrated themselves all together.

(Al-Hijr, 15:28-30)

These and similar other verses explicitly prove that the origin of mankind was from a single person Sayyidna Ādam ﷺ whom Allah created from mud. These arguments of Qurān are conclusive. Hence, they absolutely refute the theory of Darwin, and to set aside the explicit statements of the Qurān in preference to this theory (which could be only Presumptive at the most), or seek distant explanations of the Qurānic verses cannot be correct.

The fourth situation may be that the Recorded Argument is presumptive and Logical Argument may also be presumptive. Here also the scholars and intellectuals are unanimous that the Recorded Arguments would be preferred, and until the reason is supported by conclusive observation, it would not be proper to read in the Qurān and Hadith anything but the apparent meaning. The reason is the same as has been described in detail under the heading "The Qurān and Allegory". Not only in the Qurān but in any discourse anywhere, the rule is that the real and not the proverbial meaning is adopted unless there is a compulsion. If a conclusive Logical Argument is against the obvious meaning the compulsion is obvious and in this situation adoption of Proverbial meaning is understandable. But if the Logical Argument is presumptive, adoption of proverbial or distant meanings do not form any compulsion, because the Presumptive Logical Arguments are never universal or eternal. One person may accept it and another may reject it. It may be commonly accepted at one time but may be called aberrance at another time. The history of philosophy and Science is full of many views of this kind. A philosopher at one time believes in a particular view and considers his presumptive arguments superior to all other arguments, yet another philosopher exactly at the same time considers an antagonistic view as correct and pleads the arguments related to it. As time passes on, it is found that the arguments of the earlier philosophers were all baseless and wrong. It is difficult to estimate how many such Presumptive Logical Arguments were subsequently rejected on the basis of Conclusive Logical Arguments or explicit observation. But in the fourteen hundred years, we will find only one or two cases of presumptive Recorded Arguments contradicted by Conclusive Logical Arguments. Hence if the door of interpretations in the Recorded Arguments is opened on the basis of every Presumptive Argument of Intellect, the result will be nothing but to turn the Qurān and Hadith into plaything. Mawlana Ḥifzur-Raḥmān Siyuhārvī has written an excellent note as under.

“In fact Islam teaches that for such scientific discussions wherein the subject has reached the stage of certainty and observation, and Qurānic Sciences and Divine revelations do not contradict them (because the Qurān never contradicts Observation and the obvious) they should be accepted without hesitation because denial of such realities would be nothing but prejudice and short-sightedness. And the subjects that have not yet reached such limit of certainty and resolution as to be called observation and self evident they should not be given allegorical meanings in the Qurān, and attempts to mould them according to the latest Researchers are not lawful. One should wait for the time till those subjects expose their realities in a manner that their denial would mean the denial of observation and self evident, because this is an undeniable fact that the scientific observations had to be given up a number of times but the Sciences of Qurān have never had to change.”⁶⁹

Hence the fundamental principle is that in case of a contradiction in the Presumptive arguments of Reason and Records, preference will be for the Recorded Presumptive Arguments, and it will be incorrect to seek uncommon explanation for the Recorded Arguments on the basis of Intellectual Presumptive Arguments. However, we must remember Presumptive Arguments by themselves are not all alike, but they lie in different grades. Accordingly some presumptive arguments are more forceful than others. For instance, it is presumptive that the earth revolves and it is also presumptive that a creation "Neanderthal"⁷⁰ existed in this earth before mankind. Obviously, the force attained by the former is not attainable by the latter. Also, take the example of a Presumptive Recorded Argument quoted in Ṣaḥīḥ Bukhārī, Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim and all other books of Ḥadīth and an argument that is recorded with authentic narrations and precedents but not quoted in the popular books of Ḥadīth. Obviously, the former will have a greater force than the latter. Similarly, there may be different grades in the presumptive arguments.

Now, if there is an Intellectual Presumptive Argument of first grade and a Recorded Presumptive Argument of second or third grade a scholar may prefer the former to the latter and interpret the Recorded Argument in a manner that though it may sound uncommon in reflection to obvious meanings of the words yet in conformity with Logical argument. However, this interpretation should not be described in a conclusive and established manner until that Logical Argument is proved by Observation or certainties. Rather it should be said that it is cited as an explanation which is more reasonable in view of Logical Arguments.

But since it is difficult to bring these grades of Presumptive Arguments within the framework of established laws it is not for everyone to decide which presumptive argument is in what grade. Such a decision can be made only by a person having full grip on the Recorded and Logical Arguments, and a deep insight in the Sciences of the Qurān and Ḥadīth. In this matter, sometimes the opinions of scholars also differ.

70: Encyclopaedia Britannica 1950, v14, p764, Topic 'Man'.

This will be better understood by an example. The Qurān states that when Zulqarnayn constructed the wall to stop Gog and Magog, he said;

هَذَا رَحْمَةٌ مِّن رَّبِّي فَإِذَا جَاءَ وَعْدُ رَبِّي جَعَلَهُ دَكَّاءَ وَكَانَ
وَعْدُ رَبِّي حَقًّا ۝

“This (wall) is a mercy from my Lord, but when the promise of my Lord comes to pass, He shall make it into powder, and the promise of my Lord is ever true.

(Al-Kahf, 18:98)

In interpreting this verse most commentators have said that by “promise of my Lord” is meant the Last Day and the phrase means that the wall will break when the Last Day is near and Gog and Magog will come out. Although the Qurān has mentioned the words “promise of my Lord” and not explained it further but since this phrase has been used in the Qurān at many places in the meaning of “Last Day”, the commentators have adopted the same meaning here. So, this interpretation is not conclusive but presumptive.

On the other hand, geographical and historical researches indicate that the wall of Zulqarnayn has broken down long ago. Even this research is presumptive because the exact, conclusive and certain location of this wall is very difficult.

However, a person who is dexterous enough to compare Logical and Recorded Argument and also has a true insight in these matters may conclude that these historical and geographical findings are grade one presumptive, and the above interpretation of the verse is grade two presumptive. Hence, in view of these findings there is no harm in concluding that “Promise of the Lord” in this verse may also apply to the time when the wall was predestined by Allah to break. Anwar Shah Kashmirī has expressed his inclination towards the same interpretation that Zulqarnayn did not mean to point to a sign of the end of the world, but it was a general statement that the wall would break when the Lord would like, and the coming out of Gog and Magog towards the approach of the Last Day mentioned in the Qurān has nothing to do with the breaking of this wall.⁷¹

But, as stated above, this grading of the Presumptive Arguments is very delicate and it needs due and relevant proficiency and insight in the Logical and Recorded knowledge. Hence a great deal of caution, understanding and fear of God is needed, and a hasty decision through glitter of a prevalent theory often leads a man astray.

This has been the correct approach in recognizing logical and Recorded Argument that the 'ulamā have adopted. There has never been an objection on it.

3: INJUNCTIONS OF SHARI'AH AND REASONING

A very unfortunate use of reason and intellect in the exegesis of the Qurān is to deny a religious injunction proven in clear and explicit words simply because we cannot understand the underlying wisdom behind it. The preponderance of western thoughts these days has led people to resort to self interpretation even in the explicit Qurān and Hadith commands on which the Muslim Ummah has had a consensus over the last 1400 years, simply because these are against their temperament. They advance the reason that the religious laws are no longer expedient for our times. For instance, the Qurān has explicitly proclaimed the punishment for theft as under.

وَالسَّارِقُ وَالسَّارِقَةُ فَاقْطَعُوا أَيْدِيَهُمَا

And (as for) the thief, man or woman, cut off the hands of both... (Al-Mā'idah, 5:38)

The Western writers have been raising objections over this and other punishments proclaimed by Islam, and amputation of hands of the thieves is being termed as very severe, rather beastly. Hence the Modernists in the Islamic world who are ever apologetic to Westerner's objections are anxious to find ways of amending those Islamic punishments to please them. Hence they have been constantly trying to distort the meaning of the above verse. One of our contemporary writers has gone to the extent of writing in one of his articles that in this verse 'thief' means 'capitalists' and amputation of hands means 'to seize their factories.' According to him the verse does not describe the punishment for the thief but advocates that all the industries owned by capitalists must be nationalized!

The same applies to those people who are anxious to allow usury, gambling and intoxicants etc in some form or the other. Their argument is that the prohibition of these things in the present time is unreasonable.

Hence, as a matter of principle we must understand what the relation between the religious injunctions and reason is. What is the scope of reason and intellect in religious injunctions and what are its limitations?

The fact is that all the commands of the Qurān and Hadith are in conformity with commonsense, and each of them can be shown with irrefutable arguments that there is no better way to reform and prosperity for men. However, since there are many misunderstandings in this matter, this discussion will have to be divided into several points. Here, are a few introductory remarks and only after a full understanding thereof can a correct result be achieved. But those who really want a satisfactory research in this matter are requested that they should not make a hasty decision after reading just one part of this discussion, but they must once read the entire discussion with full attention and a cool mind.

(1) UNCHECKED REASONING VERSUS GUIDANCE AND ABERRANCE

As has been stated above, no doctrine of the Qurān and Hadith is against commonsense. But we find that the intellectual level of every person is different from the other. So, which of them should discriminate good from bad? If decision of the matters of the world and law making is done by unchecked reasoning which is free from all kinds of religious restrictions, the world would face an anarchy leading to total destruction of humanity. The reason is that if human mind is freed from all sorts of limitations and restrictions, it would also be unable to prove those moral realities which even a child of noble character recognises. For instance, having illicit relations with one's real sister is such a repulsive crime that no religion or people would tolerate it so much so that even the worst of the apostates regarded it as deplorable. But if you set to prove this act to be unlawful on the basis of free and unchecked reasoning, it would not be possible to do so. On the basis of pure intellectual reasoning the question that whenever a sister does every thing to give comfort to her brother, including cooking meals for him, preparing his bed, sewing his clothes, nursing him in sickness she is looked upon with praise and honour in the society. But if the same sister offers herself to her brother to satisfy his sexual lust, she receives the curses and abuses of the whole world. If the matter is left to be decided on the basis of pure and unchecked mental reasoning she can rightly ask why sexual comfort is denied to her brother when he can receive other comforts from her? Within the limitations of moral and social values this question appears to be alarming, rather repulsive but a mind that does not bind itself to any limitations cannot be satisfied simply by telling it that this act is morally very repulsive. The question is what is wrong about it purely from intellectual point of view? You may say that it might lead to the problem of racial intermixing. But in the modern days of birth control this problem would not arise, and supposedly racial intermixing does occur you have to prove on purely intellectual grounds that this is a bad thing. A free thinker may say that there is nothing against racial intermixing and it is only a religious and moral taboo.

One might say that this is an extreme degree of shamelessness. But pure and free intellect would say that these concepts of modesty and shamelessness have been invented by religion, morals or society. From the intellectual point of view it is strange that if a woman marries a stranger and submits herself to him she is considered modest, but if she submits herself to a person with whom she has spent her childhood and youth, she would be charged with obscenity? You might say that human nature is against this act, but a free mind would say that there is no intellectual argument for it to be unnatural. In fact this appears unnatural because society has condemned it for many centuries. If these social bonds are broken and purely intellectual thought is applied there would be nothing bad in it. In short, if you want to solve this problem on purely intellectual grounds, it will never be solved.

And this is not just an hypothesis. Now-a-days this free thinking has already raised several such questions. In olden days also whenever anybody tried to solve social problems through pure intellect and free thinking he got lost in the labyrinth of intellectual questions and answers. A study of the Bāṭiniyyah sect is a living example. A famous leader of this sect 'Ubaidullah bin Al-Ḥasan Al-Qirwānī has written in his book As-Siyāsatul-balāgh-ul-Akīd wan Nāmūs al-A'zam.

"Who can be more surprising than those people who claim to possess intellect yet they act foolishly. They have a beautiful sister or daughter but hold it unlawful for themselves to have sex with her and hand her over to a stranger. If these fools had used their intelligence they would have realized that they themselves more deserved their sister or daughter than a stranger did. In fact the reason for ignorant behaviour is that their teachers and guides have prohibited them the pleasures of this world.⁷²"

No matter how many curses you may hurl on this base and repulsive idea, yet you will not be able to give a convincing argument to refute it purely on the basis of intellect. The fact is that all those intellectuals of the world who plead for free thinking even together cannot give a satisfactory intellectual argument against this view.

The disgusting fact here is that this 'Ubaidullah Qirwānī was not an open rejector of the Qurān, but like others of the Bāṭiniyyah, he used to interpret it on the basis of unchecked free thinking. And he claimed that the obvious meanings of the Qurān are not the intended meanings but it is all allegoric and metaphoric expressions or parables.

Likewise, it would not be possible to prohibit sexual abuse through pure intellectual reasoning because reason cannot answer the question what is wrong with sex with mutual consent of man and woman? It is on this argument that mutually agreed fornication is not unlawful in Western Laws. Rather, quite recently the British Parliament legalized voluntary homosexuality and the members applauded the legislation!

The reason for this law-making again was that on the basis of pure intellect there was nothing wrong in this act.

This is not surprising because, it is an essential attribute of man-made laws that they have always failed to guide man to peace and tranquility. The reason is obvious: the intellectual level of everyone is different from every other. Even if a general trend of a time may unite the people of that time to realise the good or bad of any act, the mental caliber of another time may form a different opinion for the same act, because intellect has no way to determine values.

Hence, despite innumerable intellectual arguments over several years, legal experts have been compelled to concede that they have been unable to decide what standards to fix for evaluating the good or bad of a thing in the process of law-making? A renowned legal expert of our time Dr. George Whitecross Paton has said:

“What interests should an exemplary legal system protect? This is the question of values in which legal philosophy plays its part... But however much we desire the help of philosophy, it is difficult to obtain. No agreed scale of values has ever been reached indeed. It is only in religion that we can find a basis, and the truths of religion must be accepted by faith or intuition and not purely as the result of logical arguments."⁷³

The same author continues to describe a very interesting story of those opinions and thoughts which different thinkers have expressed about the purpose of Law, its philosophy and its moral bases, but these opinions and thoughts have been so contradictory to each other that he stated:

"What should be the purpose of Law? In this connection the opinion and concepts are as numerous as the number of authors on subject, because it will be exceptional to find such writers as may not have laid down an exemplary aim for the statute."

He further details how the philosophers of Law, in every period of time, had been increasing the complexities of this entangled string through the efforts of their intellect and thinking.

In the end he writes:

"The Orthodox natural law theory based its absolutes on the revealed truths of religion. If we attempt to secularize jurisprudence, where can we find an agreed basis of values." (p126)

In short, if intellect is allowed a free hand by setting aside the guidance of Divine Revelations, there will be no basis left for discriminating good from bad or vice versa. It will have mankind in such a dark abyss of aberrance and foolishness where even a tiny ray of reform or guidance could not enter. The reason is that human intellect without the guidance of Divine Revelation (Wahy), although regarded as 'Free and independent', yet it becomes a slave to man's sensual desires which is the worst form of mental servitude. Those who claim to follow pure intellect and reason in everything are actually suffering from the highest degree of self-deception. Those who openly admit that their intellect is not independent but a slave of their sensual desires are more courageous and truthful. A group of modern thinkers is mentioned in the discussion of philosophy of Law. Their philosophy is known as Non-cognitivist Ethical Theory. In the words of the famous legal expert of our time Dr. Friedman this philosophy is summarised as under:

“Reason is and ought only to be the slave of the passions and can never pretend to any other office than to serve and obey them.”

Dr. Friedman concludes the results of this thinking:

“A simple injunction, modesty, yawning, rather the concepts of good or bad, or the phrases like ‘ought’ and ‘worthy’ are purely emotive and there cannot be such a thing as ethical or moral science.”⁷⁴

Notwithstanding their philosophy, what they say is correct that independent of Divine revelation (Wahy) there remains nothing of reason or moral. After that man's existence, his deeds and actions are all governed by his passions and desires and they take him wherever they want to. Even if his conscience pricks, he is not able to go against his passions. In England the step to legalise homosexuality was taken in the same state of compulsion. Some thinkers disliked it and even the conscience of the movers of the law was not satisfied. But as slaves to their passions, they could not set aside the demand for this law. How admonishing are the following words of recommendation of Wolfenden Committee on the basis of which this law was passed:

“Unless a deliberate attempt is made by society acting through the agency of the law to equate fear of crime with that of sin, there must remain a realm of private morality and immorality which in brief and crude terms is beyond the law.”⁷⁵

But the Qurān which will not leave mankind wandering in the labyrinth of passions, and which is a guide to the clear and straight path, is explicit that man's natural disposition is bestowed on both, good and bad passions. It will not leave its followers in frightful darkness. In its terminology independent reasoning free of guidance from Wahy is termed as caprice (Hawā), and about which it has stated as under:

وَلَوْ اتَّبَعَ الْحَقُّ أَهْوَاءَهُمْ لَفَسَدَتِ السَّمَاوَاتُ وَالْأَرْضُ وَمَنْ فِيهِنَّ.

And had the truth followed their caprices, the heavens and the earth and whosoever is between them would have certainly corrupted. (Al-Mumineen, 23:71)

أَفَمَنْ كَانَ عَلَىٰ بَيِّنَةٍ مِّن رَّبِّهِ كَمَنْ زُيِّنَ لَهُ سُوءُ عَمَلِهِ وَاتَّبَعُوا أَهْوَاءَهُمْ ۖ

Is he who has a clear proof from his Lord like those to whom their evil deeds are made alluring and they follow their caprices? (Surah, Muhammad, 47:14)

وَلَا تُطِيعُ مَنْ أَغْفَلْنَا قَلْبَهُ عَن ذِكْرِنَا وَاتَّبَعَ هَوَاهُ وَكَانَ

75: Friedman: Legal Theory, London, 1967 p46.

أَمْرُهُ فُرُطًا ۝

And obey not him whose heart We have made to neglect
Our remembrance and his affair has become all excess.

(Al-Kahf, 18:28)

فَلَا يَصُدُّكَ عَنْهَا مَنْ لَّا يُؤْمِنُ بِهَا وَاتَّبَعَ هَوَاهُ فَتَرْدَى ۝

So let not him, who believes not in it, and follows his own caprice, bar you from it, lest you perish.

(Tā-Hā, 20:16)

وَمَنْ أَضَلُّ مِمَّنِ اتَّبَعَ هَوَاهُ بِغَيْرِ هُدًى مِّنَ اللَّهِ

And who is more astray than he who follows his caprice without any guidance from Allah? (Al-Qaṣaṣ, 48:50)

فَلِذَلِكَ فَادْعُ وَاسْتَقِمْ كَمَا أُمِرْتَ وَلَا تَتَّبِعْ أَهْوَاءَهُمْ

Therefore you (O Prophet) invite them to this (religion) and be steadfast as you are commanded; and follow not their caprices. (Ash-Shūrā, 42:15)

أَفَكُلَّمَا جَاءَكُمْ رَسُولٌ بِمَا لَا تَهْوَىٰ أَنفُسُكُمْ اسْتَكْبَرْتُمْ

Is it then that whensoever there came to you a Messenger with what your souls desired not, you showed arrogance. (Al-Baqarah, 2:87)

In short, Islam is not based on an intellect that is a slave to caprices, but on the intellect that is bound by guidance from Allah and is aware of the limitations of its activity. And this is what forms a balanced mind.

(2) PRUDENCE BEHIND ISLAMIC INJUNCTIONS AND THEIR PLACE IN RELIGION

This does not mean that the commands proclaimed by Allah are against the intellect. But the fact is that the commands of Allah fully conform to common sense, and experience shows that there can be no better means to reform and prosperity. Hence every command of Allah has many expediencies in it and benefits for mankind. But it is not essential that our limited faculty of reasoning should encompass those expediencies. Who can comprehend the knowledge and understand the wisdom of the Creator of universe Who has before Him all that is present in the earth and skies and all the events of past and the future? Hence it is quite possible that we do not understand the wisdom behind an injunction of the Qurān and Sunnah. But this does not mean that we reject the injunction because of that. If man had been able to know what benefits him there was no need to send the Messengers and Divine Scriptures. This was done only to educate mankind on matters the cognition of which is not possible through intellect alone. Hence, if one believes in Allah, His Omnipotence, His limitless knowledge, His Messengers and the Divine Scriptures revealed by Him, one cannot escape admitting that it is not essential to know the expediencies of His injunctions. It will not be a reasonable attitude to reject such of His injunctions as are beyond one's intellectual comprehension.

This can be well understood through an example. Everywhere in the world the laws the law-makers have their reasons for framing, the laws and it is in accordance with them that the law is enforced. But it is not necessary that every individual of the country be aware of all the considerations of that law. Evidently a majority of people are not aware of the merits of the limitations imposed through such a law. Can the law made by the best brains of the country, after due consideration of all its implications, be said to be worthless or wrong because a few illiterate rustics cannot comprehend the advantages of that law? If an ignorant person refuses to comply with the law simply on the basis that the expedient advantages of that law are beyond his comprehension, his place would be nothing but prison.

Besides, one can conceive some relationship between the knowledge of an illiterate person and an expert in law, but no relationship can be established between the limitless knowledge of the Creator of this Universe and an ordinary human being. How can it be appropriate for a man to reject an explicit Command of Allah or interpolate and misinterpret it on the ground that he cannot understand the advantages therein.

(3) INJUNCTIONS DO NOT DEPEND ON EXPEDIENCIES

There has always been a consensus in every period of time that religious injunctions do not depend on their expediences but on the motives behind it. There are many people in our time who do not understand the difference between "Expedience (Prudence)" and "Motive". It seems proper to clarify this briefly.

"Motive" is an essential cause for enforcement of Law. It is like an obvious sign which bids the followers of that law to comply as soon as they have observed the sign. "Expedience" is the advantage and consideration before the law makers when framing the law. For instance, the Qurān has proclaimed prohibition of alcoholic drinks, and made intoxication as the essential basis of prohibition. Any drink that causes intoxication is forbidden.

There are many expediencies in this prohibition, one of which is that intoxicated people may not indulge in such acts as are against human dignity and honour. In this example the Qurān's expression "Abstain from (alcoholic) drinks" is a command 'Intoxication' is the motive of the command, and preventing people from evildoings on losing their senses is the expedient in it. Now, the command of prohibition would depend on its motive, that is, Intoxication, and anything that causes intoxication would be considered as forbidden. The command would not depend on the expedient behind it. Hence, it is wrong for anybody to plead that he should not be forbidden alcoholic drinks because he does not lose his senses or gets out of balance after taking it. Or if it is argued that at present advanced methods of brewing alcoholic drinks have minimized the harmful effects and a large number of drinkers do carry out their normal duties without suffering intoxication, hence it should now be permissible, obviously this plea would not be accepted.

Similarly, the Qurān and Sunnah command their followers that during a journey they should offer only half of Ṣalah (which is known as 'Qaṣr' قصر) to alleviate their worship. In this example 'Qaṣr' قصر is a command, journey is its motive and saving from hardship is the expediency. Now, the command will depend on its motive, that is, the journey and not on the expediency. Hence if some one says that now-a-days due to aeroplanes and comfortable train coaches, the journey has become easy and the hardship of earlier times does not exist, therefore the command for "Qaṣr" no longer exists, his plea would not be accepted. As slaves of Allah our task is to obey the Command on its motive. To keep in view the expediences and considerations in obeying these commands is not our prerogative.

This rule does not apply only to Islamic Laws, but it is practiced in all the prevalent laws of today. For instance, the government has made a law, in order to check traffic accidents. When a red light is seen at a crossing, every vehicle must stop. Here "stop" is a Law, red light is its motive, and prevention from accidents is the expediency behind the law. Now the command will be obeyed on its motive, the red light, and not on the expediency of prevention from accidents. If a driver feels that there is no apparent danger of an accident and violates the red light, he will be a law-offender and liable to punishment. Hence it is essential to stop at the red light even if there is no danger of an accident.

Thus, observance of the laws depends on the motives and not on expediences. When this holds good for the common laws of the world, the commands of Allah deserve all the more to be so respected. One reason for this is that we cannot comprehend all the expediences of every religious law; hence if the injunctions are subjected to expediences it is possible that we may choose only a single benefit while there may be many other expediences too. The second reason is that expedience is generally not an unchanging thing so that every one may take his own decision in dealing with a particular strategy. If an injunction is held dependent on expediences, the laws can never be implemented because then every person would be free to make an excuse that he did not comply with such and such order because its expediences were not obvious. For instance, if every driver is given the freedom to decide at a crossing whether there is a danger of accident or not and he would stop when he sees a danger otherwise he may proceed even on a green light. This will only result in extreme degree of misrule and maladministration. Similarly, if the prohibition of wine is dependant on its expediency rather than motive (intoxication), then every one will say that he is not liable to the prohibition because he is not intoxicated and his work is not hampered. The prohibition will then be played with.

Contrary to this, the motives of all the commands are so evident that every one can see that a motive exists, and hence defiance of law can be easily checked. It is only through subjecting the laws to their motives that social administration, peace and tranquillity, and law-abiding spirit can be produced in this world.

It is for this reason that many scholars of Muslim Ummah have written voluminous books to explain expediences and strategies behind Islamic injunctions, and have told about every injunction as to what benefits can be derived from it. But neither has anyone claimed that he knows the expediences of all Islamic injunctions nor has anyone suffered from the misunderstanding that the injunctions will be obeyed after considering the expediences and strategies behind them. For instance, Shāh Wali Ullah Dehlavi wrote his book Hujjat-ul-lahil Bāl-ighah for the sole purpose of clarifying the expediences inherent in religious laws and he has categorically refuted those who deny the expediences of religious laws. But alongwith it he states:⁷⁶

لا يحل ان يتوقف فى امثال احكام الشرع اذا صحت بها

76: Hujjat-ul-lahil Bāl-ighah, Maktaba Salfiyah, Lahore, 1395, AH v1, p129. Also chapter Bab-al-Farq Bain-al-Maṣāleḥ wal Sharā'i.

الرواية على معرفة تلك المصالح لعدم استقلال عقول كثير من الناس فى معرفة كثير من المصالح ولكون النبى صلى الله عليه وسلم اوثق عندنا من عقولنا ولذلك لم يزل هذا العلم مضمونا به على غير اهله -

“It is certainly not right to hesitate in complying with authentic religious injunctions because we do not know expediences behind them. The mental calibre of many people is such that they cannot comprehend many of these expediences and for us the Holy Prophet ﷺ is more reliable than our intellect. That is why attempts have always been made to protect this science (of expediences in religion) from incompetent people.”

(4) THE REAL PURPOSE OF QURĀNIC INJUNCTIONS IS TO SET TO OBEDIENCE

Another thing to be kept in view about the injunctions of the Qurān is ‘worship of Allah’ The Qurān says:

وَمَا خَلَقْتُ الْجِنَّ وَالْإِنْسَ إِلَّا لِيَعْبُدُونِ ۝

And I have not created the jinn and mankind but to worship Me. (Az-Zāriyāt, 51:56)

And the way of such worship has also been clarified by the Qurān, that it depends on total submission to Allah and His Messenger ﷺ. It says:

اتَّبِعُوا مَا أُنزِلَ إِلَيْكُمْ مِنْ رَبِّكُمْ وَلَا تَتَّبِعُوا مِنْ دُونِهِ أَوْلِيَاءَ

Follow (O mankind) what has revealed to you from your Lord, and follow no protectors besides Him. (Al-A’rāf, 7:3)

يَا قَوْمِ اتَّبِعُوا الْمُرْسَلِينَ ۝ اتَّبِعُوا مَن لَّا يَسْأَلُكُمْ أَجْرًا وَهُمْ
مُهْتَدُونَ ۝

O my people! Follow the Messengers. Follow such as ask of you no reward, and they are rightly guided.

(Yāsīn, 36:20-21)

وَاتَّبِعُوا أَحْسَنَ مَا أُنْزِلَ إِلَيْكُم مِّن رَّبِّكُمْ

And follow the best (the Qurān) that has been revealed to you from your Lord. (Az-Zumar, 39:55)

وَهَذَا كِتَابٌ أَنْزَلْنَاهُ مُبَارَكٌ فَاتَّبِعُوهُ وَاتَّقُوا لَعَلَّكُمْ
تُرْحَمُونَ ۝

And this (Qurān) is a blessed Book that We have revealed, so follow it, and be God-fearing that you may be shown mercy (Al-An'ām, 6:155)

فَآمِنُوا بِاللَّهِ وَرَسُولِهِ النَّبِيِّ الْأُمِّيِّ الَّذِي يُؤْمِنُ بِاللَّهِ
وَكَلِمَاتِهِ وَاتَّبِعُوهُ

Therefore believe in Allah and His Messenger, the "Um̄mi" Prophet who believes in Allah and His words (Commandments): and follow him....

(Al-A'raf, 7:158)

It is Qurān that has clarified the purpose of man's creation and subjecting him to different commands is to see who follows Allah and His Messenger and who does not.

الَّذِي خَلَقَ الْمَوْتَ وَالْحَيَاةَ لِيَبْلُوَكُمْ أَيُّكُمْ أَحْسَنُ عَمَلًا

(Allah it is) Who created death and life, that He may try you, which of you is best in conduct. (Al-Mulk, 67:2)

وَمَا جَعَلْنَا الْقِبْلَةَ الَّتِي كُنْتَ عَلَيْهَا إِلَّا لِنَعْلَمَ مَنْ يَتَّبِعُ
الرَّسُولَ مِمَّنْ يَنْقَلِبُ عَلَى عَقْبَيْهِ

And We appointed not the Qiblah which you (O Prophet) have had except in order that We might know who followed the Messenger, from him who turned back on his heels. (Al-Baqarah, 2:143)

And when the duty of man is just to obey Allah and His Messenger, and his trial is based on this obligation, it becomes obligatory on him to submit to whatever explicit Command he receives from Allah. Thereafter he is not entitled to accept it if he likes it, and reject if he dislikes it.

وَمَا كَانَ لِمُؤْمِنٍ وَلَا مُؤْمِنَةٍ إِذَا قَضَى اللَّهُ وَرَسُولُهُ أَمْرًا أَنْ
يَكُونُوا لَهُمُ الْخِيَرَةُ مِنْ أَمْرِهِمْ

And it is not for a believing man or a believing woman, when Allah and His Messenger have decreed a matter, to have the choice in their matter.

(Al-Ahzāb, 33:36)

Hence if someone hesitates in accepting the explicit command of Allah and His Messenger on the plea that he is unable to comprehend the strategy and expedience in it, he is in fact following his passions or the devil rather than his intellect.

وَمِنَ النَّاسِ مَنْ يُجَادِلُ فِي اللَّهِ بِغَيْرِ عِلْمٍ وَيَتَّبِعُ كُلَّ شَيْطَانٍ
مَّرِيدٍ ۝

And among mankind is he who disputes concerning Allah, without knowledge, and follows every rebellious Satan. (Al-Hajj, 22:3)

Such a person will be a loser not only in the Hereafter but also in this world.

وَمِنَ النَّاسِ مَنْ يَّعْبُدُ اللَّهَ عَلَى حَرْفٍ فَإِنْ أَصَابَهُ
خَيْرٌ اطمأنَّ بِهِ وَإِنْ أَصَابَتْهُ فِتْنَةٌ انقلبَ عَلَى وَجْهِهِ خَسِرَ
الدُّنْيَا وَالْآخِرَةَ ۚ ذَٰلِكَ هُوَ الْخُسْرَانُ الْمُبِينُ ۝

And among mankind is he who worships Allah upon the very edge — so that if good befalls him he is contented with it, but if a trial befalls him he turns round on his face. He loses this world and the Hereafter. That is indeed a manifest loss. (Al-Hajj, 22:11)

Hence, although every commandment of Allah and His Messenger has behind it countless expediences yet it is not for man that he should know the real purpose of compliance to these commands. Like a true servant of Allah his real object should be obedience to Allah, His pleasure and submission to His Commandments. When prohibition of usury was revealed, the disbelievers objected to it and said:

قَالُوا إِنَّمَا الْبَيْعُ مِثْلُ الرِّبَا

They say "Trade is just like usury."

(Al-Baqarah, 2:275)

Many intellectual arguments could have been given against this saying and the difference between trade and usury could have been explained. But ignoring all that the Qurān gave one genuine reply:

وَأَحَلَّ اللَّهُ الْبَيْعَ وَحَرَّمَ الرِّبَا

But Allah has permitted trading, and forbidden usury.

(Al-Baqarah, 2:275)

So, when Allah permitted one thing and forbade the other, there remained no room for intellectual arguments. It should be sufficient for you that the two of them have different injunctions.

The Qurān has described the story of Ādam and Iblīs at tens of places. In this incident, it has been mentioned that in refusing to prostrate before Ādam, Iblīs argued, "I am better than Ādam. You created me from fire and him from mud." What is wrong in this argument from the point of view of reasoning? But, the same Intellectual argument became the cause of his disgraceful expulsion from Paradise. The reason was that submission to one's own arguments after receiving clear and explicit injunctions from Allah is in fact enslavement to one's passions.

(5) CORRECT METHOD OF INTERPRETING THE QURĀN AND TRADITIONS

So, when man is obliged to submit to the commands of Allah the simple way to do it is to adopt the obvious meaning in the clear and explicit commands of the Qurān and Sunnah. Misinterpretation and interpolation should not be done simply because the obvious meanings do not please oneself. Allah has revealed His Book for our guidance and also because we cannot comprehend His commands only through our intellect and reasoning. If we read our own meanings in the interpretation of the Qurān, we will be following our own whims and the purpose of the Qurān will be defeated.

The Qurān is an extremely exalted Book, but the case with man-made rules is that as soon as they are passed by Parliament, judges become bound to follow them as they are. Even if a law appears to be wrong in a judge's knowledge and experience, he is compelled to follow it as it is. There is no room for him to make such interpretations of law which are not obvious from its words and phrases. In the present 'Principles of Law' there is a constant discussion on 'Interpretation of statutes'. The summary of this discussion, as adopted from A Text Book of Jurisprudence by Paton is as under:

"Three fundamental rules have been suggested for the interpretation of statutes in English law-suits. The first principle is called 'Literal Rule'. It means that wherein the meanings of a legal clause are quite obvious it will be taken as it is, irrespective of its result. The second principle is called 'Golden Rule' which means that the words of the statute will always be given its common meanings unless it creates confusion or it openly clashes with other clauses of the Law. The third principle is called 'Mischief Rule' which emphasises on determining as to what is the general policy of this Law and eradication of which mischief is aimed at."

Further on, this third principle has been explained by Paton.

"The concept that the intention of the Parliament and the purpose behind that must be followed does not allow us much liberty with the words of the statute. This is because it is an established fact that the subjective intention of Parliament cannot be considered while interpreting the statutes. Rather, even the intention of the Parliament has to be derived from the statute framed by it."⁷⁷

This is the state of Law which human intellect has drafted and about which the experts of Law themselves admit according to Paton.

It would be exaggerative to say that every man has a valid reason for each of his action. On the contrary, it happens very often that we perform an act and think later. This attitude is not confined to the situations similar to jumping away to a side to save ourselves from a speeding car, but very often it also occurs when we create social customs and habits. Rather, if a reasonable policy has already been framed at the time of forming a statute or an institution, even then it happens quite frequently that the result of such a statute is quite different from the purpose which prompted the formation of that statute.⁷⁸

But a judge, despite knowledge that the required result cannot be achieved from the existing structure of Law, is bound to obey the law as its words present it. He has no right to mould it through meanings not obvious from the words even though they may be nearer to the required results. Rather, as Paton says:

"If unjustified laws are in force somewhere, the legislature can abrogate them but the judge is bound to follow those laws no matter how much 77: Paton, A Text Book of Jurisprudence, p217.

78: Paton, A Text Book Jurisprudence p21.

he dislikes the rules of such laws."⁷⁹

A judge is not a law-maker but interpreter of Law. His status is not that of framer of laws but of one who obeys the Law, and he can interpret it only within the limits of obedience. He has no authority to cross those limits over to Reform and Amendment.

This is the state of those man-made Laws wherein thousands of possibilities of intellectual errors exist in which neither the Law-maker is above suspicion nor can mind and thoughts of the Law makers be said to be free of errors. There is no guarantee too, that they have given due thought and consideration to all possible results of that law.

Then again, these are the laws made by men who do not even know what changes the coming days would bring, nor do they know whether their expected results would be achieved through this Law or not.

So, when obedience to the Laws made through conjecture and assumption is so essential, what reason, moral and justice would support the idea of seeking uncommon and ambiguous meanings to one's liking or disliking in the laws made by the Creator of this universe. He is the Creator Who is fully aware of changing circumstances of time, and Who knows the benefits and losses of man and expediences in it?

(6) CHANGES OF TIME AND RELIGIOUS LAWS

Another misunderstanding must also be removed here. Now-a-days it is common to hear almost every modernist say that no Law should ever be static but it should be dynamic in accordance with the circumstances. It is particular with Modernist mind that if anything is bad in some sense then it is bad in every sense. Its very name becomes an abuse. And if a thing is good, it will be valued highly and its use here and there becomes a fashion. The same is the case with the terms Static and Dynamic. To denounce the former and praise the latter has become the scientific fashion of today. Every Modernist will detest everything called Static and shall rejoice with the label of Dynamic on anything. That is why no moral or religious idea in the ideological system of the west has remained static. Rather they have subjected it to grinding on the lathe of Dynamism, and no religious belief or moral principle has escaped it.

The fact is that neither the continuous Static condition is beneficial for mankind nor a perpetual Dynamic state. Whereas in order to lead a good life in this world, man needs to keep changing his practical strategies, it is also essential that he should possess some principles and laws which should not be altered under any circumstances. At any period of time, even the biggest power on earth should not amend it, otherwise under the camouflage of change beastly and sensual desires can take him to the extreme limits of mischief, violence and moral bankruptcy where he would take off all the garments of human morality and join the ranks of nude animals. If there be freedom of changing at will, every intellectual principle, every moral system and every legal order by labelling it as Dynamic, the result cannot be anything except the moral destruction, human degradation, anxiety and agitation that has become the destiny of the Western society of our time.

When it is agreed that all intellectual principles and legal orders should not be dynamic but there must be some laws that should never change, the only problem remains to chose the orders of the law that should remain Static and which of Dynamic. If this problem is considered by pure Intellect' the limitations therein have already been thoroughly exposed. Even if we try, we can never achieve such static rules and laws which would be unanimously accepted by all human beings. This is because the intellectual decisions and results of individual thinking are different from one another. Thus one person or group would resort to one principle as static and a second person or group to another, and the problem will remain as it was. Hence the solution to this problem lies in seeking guidance from the Being Who created mankind, and also knows the secrets of their inner selves. The way to seek this guidance is to turn towards His revelations and to the traditions of His Prophet ﷺ.

When we turn towards the Qurān and Prophetic traditions we see that they clearly and explicitly describe injunctions but are content to describe the broad principles only in some cases, and avoid subsidiary details. The Qurān and the Messenger of Allah, Muḥammad ﷺ are not confined to any region or time but cover every place and time, the injunctions that do not change with time have been described in the Qurān and Hadith clearly and explicitly and sometimes their subsidiary details have also been determined. Contrary to this, as for the injunctions that were liable to be affected by the change of time, the Qurān and Prophetic Traditions describe some general universal principles in the light of which learned persons of every time may determine and establish the subsidiary details.

Thus the injunctions that are explicit in the Qurān and Hadith, and on whom the Ummah has had a consensus, are absolutely unalterable and obligatory for every period of time. If that were not so they would not have been explicitly ordained through the Qurān and Hadith. However, those injunctions which are not explicitly ordained in the Qurān and Traditions and there has not been a consensus of the Ummah, there is room for ijtihād in accordance with the principles of the Qurān and Traditions of the Prophet. Changes of times can influence such injunctions and it is about these injunctions that the jurists have said:

الاحكام تتغير بتغير الزمان

"Injunctions keep changing with the change of Time."

If on the other hand, there was room for alterations and amendments with change of time in the clear and explicit injunctions of the Qurān and Prophetic traditions, there was no need for sending the Messengers and revealing the Divine Scriptures. Just one injunction would have been sufficient, 'Formulate your own injunctions and Laws according to the circumstances of the time.' Hence, the person who points out at changes of Time in spite of clear and explicit injunctions of the Qurān or, on the same basis, is eager to give self-conceived meanings and alter and interpolate the explicit injunctions of the Qurān and Prophetic Traditions, he is in fact unaware of the basic purpose of sending the Prophets and of revelation of Divine Scriptures.

(7) MEANING OF CHANGE OF TIME?

At this stage it is essential to have a clear conception of what is meant by "change of time." The change of time that influences the religious injunctions is that change due to which the Motive⁸⁰ of an injunction changes. For instance, jurists of earlier days ruled that if a person hires a horse and does not settle with the owner of the horse what distance he would travel on it and what the fare would be then this deal would be void and unlawful. But now-a-days with the invention of metered taxis this injunction does not remain valid. People do not settle anything with the taxi-driver before sitting in it, and none of them knows what the total fare would be, yet this dealing is lawful. The reason is that the Motive behind the maxim described by earlier jurists, according to their statement was a great possibility of dispute between the parties concerned if the fare and distance were not settled beforehand. Now the time has changed and with the invention of metres the practice has become that the parties agree to go by the metre. Hence the chance of a dispute does not exist, which was Motive for making the deal as unlawful. Thus, with this change of time injunction also changed.

Contrary to this, when the motive of injunctions is unaffected no change in the injunctions can be made on the basis of general trend of the Time. There is no room in Islam for the concept that if an evil spreads it should be endorsed as lawful and permissible, and if the good things are abandoned, they should be forsaken. This defeated mentality ultimately leads to the very passion-worship against which the Qurān has been revealed and to free from enslavement of which the Holy Prophet ﷺ was sent.

(8) APPROPRIATE SPHERE OF ACTIVITY OF INTELLECT AND REASON

The summary of the above discussion is that it is not at all correct to seek distant and uncommon meanings through distortion and interpolation of the Qurān and Prophetic Traditions after being impressed by general trend of the times or to present an excuse of change of Time. The injunctions explicitly ordained in the Qurān and Prophetic Traditions are those which are not affected by the change of Time, no matter how strange and alien they might appear to those influenced by changes in Time and wave of passions. Hence, on these occasions introducing intellectual explanations in religious injunctions is not common sense but is slavery to passions which is nothing but extreme veering off the path.

The fact is that commonsense itself demands that the limits of human brain should be recognized and no such burden beyond its endurance be put on it. In this universe, the capacity and capability of everything except Allah has some limitations beyond which it does not work. Intellect is also a component of this universe and its capabilities are also not unlimited. Allah has guided mankind through Divine Scriptures and Prophets towards the same realities and injunctions in search of which human intellect could stumble. Hence, to forward intellectual expediences against the explicit injunctions of these Scriptures and Prophets is like testing an aeroplane engine on the principles of train engine.

In the end, it is also essential to keep in mind that the above discussion does not at all mean that intellect is left with no application in human life after having established Faith in the Qurān and Traditions. The reason is that, of all the deeds which a man has to face, there are very few which religion has decreed as obligatory, incumbent, traditional, desirable, forbidden or detestable. But there are innumerable actions which have been termed as allowable. It is the sphere of these allowables which forms an expansive ground for reason and intellect wherein religion does not interfere. To adopt one or to leave another of these allowables has been left to the descretion of intellect and reason, the use of which can take man to highest achievements of material progress and scientific discoveries, and allow him to reap rightful benefits out of them. As against this, interference with the Divine injunctions has resulted in the scientific and technological advancements to have caused torment and disruption instead of benefiting mankind. This has resulted from the fact that the burden placed on intellect had been beyond its capacity, and which a human being cannot bear without absolute submission to Divine Revelations.

The great scholar of the philosophy of history Ibn Khaldūn has given a very beautiful description in this connection, as under.⁸¹

فاتهم ادراكك و مدركا تك فى الحصر، واتبع ما امرك الشارع
من اعتقادك و عملك، فهو احرص على سعادتك، واعلم بما
ينفعك لانه من طور فوق ادراكك و من نطاق اوسع من نطاق
عقلك وليس ذلك بقادح فى العقل ومداركه، بل العقل ميزان
صحيح، فاحكامه يقينية لا كذب فيها، غير انك لا تطمع ان ترن

81: Muqaddamah, Ibn Khaldūn.

به امور التوحيد و الأخره و حقيقة النبوة و حقائق الصفات
الالهية و كل ما وراء طوره، فان ذلك طمع في محال، و مثال
ذلك مثال رجل رأى الميزان الذى يوزن به الذهب، فيطمع ان

"Hence you are wrong in relying on your knowledge and information (whatever We know encompasses the knowledge of all creation) but you must follow the beliefs and deeds explained by the interpreter (the Prophet ﷺ) because he is your greatest well-wisher and knower of your welfare. His knowledge is higher than yours and is obtained from a source better than the sphere of your intellect. And this is not a defect for intellect and its know-how. Rather, intellect is in fact a correct criterion whose decisions are certain and free of falsehood. But this criterion is not large enough to allow you to weigh the matters of unity of Allah, Prophethood, attributes of Allah or any other thing which is outside the scope of reason. It is like a person may wish to weigh a mountain on the scale that weighs gold. Evidently (when the mountains would not weigh in it,) it would not be said that the scale is false. But it would be said that every scale has a limit beyond which it cannot work. Similarly the scale of human intellect also stays still at a certain point and cannot cross its limits."

Similarly, the Qurān and Prophetic Traditions have left many things to the deliberation and deductions of the jurists. Hence, for those who are competent in this task, deduction of injunctions in the light of Qurān and Traditions and laws of religion provides another vast field for the use of intellect and reason. Jurists in all times have been tried for their genius in this field. However, one should not be tempted to interpolate the Qurān and Hadith and try to weigh a mountain on the scale for weighing gold.

To end the discussion we quote 'Allāmah Shabbir Aḥmad 'Uthmānī:

It is not the intention to decry thought and reason as useless and absurd. Or that their application is a religious sin. But yes! We do not permit an individual that he should put his inept reasoning and intellect at par with the pure and clear, true and accurate, high and exalted teachings of the Prophets عليهم السلام on which very often his own conscience pricks him from inside. Against this it is essential that man should base his intellectual knowledge on the sayings of Allah and His Messengers and submit to them. Whatever they have said, he should take it as the panacea or cure for the diseases of his soul and submit to it by all means saying:

سمعا و طاعة

I hear it, and I submit to it.

وَالَّذِينَ يُحَاجُّونَ فِي اللَّهِ مِنْ بَعْدِ مَا اسْتُجِيبَ لَهُ حُجَّتُهُمْ
دَاحِضَةٌ عِنْدَ رَبِّهِمْ وَعَلَيْهِمْ غَضَبٌ وَلَهُمْ عَذَابٌ شَدِيدٌ ۝

And those who argue concerning Allah after He has been acknowledged, their argument is void with their Lord, and upon them is wrath, and for them is a severe chastisement.⁸² (As-Shūra, 42:16)

CHAPTER-4

SOME EXEGETES OF EARLY ERA

We had intended to describe a detailed and expansive history of the Science of Exegesis, but due to several reasons the idea had to be abandoned. In addition, proper books on this subject have been published too.⁸³ Hence, instead of a complete history of the Science of Exegesis we wish to give a description of only some commentators belonging to the first era and whose references occur in very large numbers in the books of exegesis. The purpose of this description is that if the following discussions are kept in view while making an exegesis of the Qurān, it will be easier to make true deductions from the sayings of these people.

‘ABDULLAH IBN ‘ABBĀS

There is of course a large group of the Companions of the Holy Prophet ﷺ who are known for their service to exegesis of the Qurān. But among them ‘Abdullah bin ‘Abbās ؓ has attained a distinctive position. The basic reason is that Holy Prophet ﷺ had specifically prayed for proficiency in exegesis for him. It is related in several traditions that the Prophet ﷺ placed his hand on the head of ‘Abdullah bin ‘Abbās ؓ and prayed:

83: For instance, Tārīkh ul-Qurān and Tārīkh at-Tafsīr, Professor ‘Abdus. Šamad Šarīm.

اللهم فقهه فى الدين و علمه التاويل -

O Allah give him the comprehension of religion and bestow on him the knowledge of exegesis.

And at another time the Prophet ﷺ said,

اللهم بارك فيه و انشر منه -⁸⁴

O Allah give him abundance in it and spread Your religion through him.

And according to some narrations the Prophet ﷺ addressed him in the words

نعم ترجمان القرآن انت -⁸⁵

You are a good interpreter of the Qurān.

That is why the Companions used to remember him with the titles of ترجمان القرآن (Interpreter of the Qurān),⁸⁶ البحر (Ocean of Knowledge), (great Scholar), the great. Even eminent Companions used to turn towards him in matters of exegesis despite his young age, and his opinion was widely respected.

He has himself said, "After the death of the Prophet ﷺ I said to one of the Ansārs that there were still a number of Companions alive, so we should seek knowledge (of religion) from them, He replied, 'Do you think that people will need your knowledge (for which you are preparing from now)?' And hence he did not accompany me and I set on the task alone. I used to go to different Companions and learn many things from them. Some times I would go to a Companion and if he was resting at noon time I would wait outside his door while hot wind used to blow sand on my face when the Companion used to come out he would say, 'O cousin of the Prophet ﷺ why did you trouble yourself? You should have sent for me and I would have come to you' I replied, 'No, it was my duty to come to you.' Then I used to ask him about the Ḥadith for which I had gone to him. This practice continued. The Anṣār Companion who had refused to join me in this campaign lived a long time afterwards until he saw me in the state that people had surrounded me and were asking me questions. At that time he said, 'This young man was more clever than me.'"⁸⁷

84: Al- lṣā bah, Ḥāfīz Ibn Ḥajar v2.

'Ubaidullah bin 'Ali bin Abi Rāfi' has stated that Ibn 'Abbās used to go to Abu Rāfi' ﷺ and ask him what did the Prophet ﷺ do on such and such day? With him used to be another man who used to write whatever was said by Abu Rāfi' ﷺ.⁸⁸

A time came when there was always a large number of students around him and he taught them the exegesis of the Qurān, the Prophetic Traditions and Juridical maxims etc.⁸⁹

It was for these reasons that 'Abdullah bin 'Abbās was called "Imām-ul-Mufasssīrīn" (The leader of commentators) and a great many narrations have been quoted from him in connection with exegesis of the Qurān. However, a large part of these narrations are weak in authenticity. Hence, in order to benefit from his narrations they must be verified according to the rules of Ḥadith. Certain things in this connection must be remembered — They are,

- 1: The most reliable narrations of Ibn 'Abbās are those reported in the sequence of Abu Ṣāliḥ from Mu'āwiyah bin Ṣāliḥ from 'Ali bin 'Ali Ṭalḥa from Ibn 'Abbās. In 87: Al-Ṣābah, v2, p323. Ref: Musnad Dāramī and Musnad Ḥārith bin Abi Usāmah. Tazkiratul Ḥuffāz, Zahbī v1, p38.

the times of Imām Aḥmad a collection of exegesis of Ibn ‘Abbās was available in Egypt with this line of transmission. Imām Aḥmad used to say about it, “It will not be extraordinary if anyone travels to Egypt only to obtain a copy of this exegesis.” Later on, however, this transcript became extinct but many commentators and Traditionists have reported excerpts from it in their books. Imām Bukhārī has quoted many of its narrations in his Ṣaḥīḥ, and Ḥāfiẓ Ibn Jarīr, Ibn Abi Ḥātim and Ibnul Munẓir have also reported many narrations in the same sequence.⁹⁰

- 2: A misunderstanding by Goldzi'her: At this point it would be proper to invite attention to a misunderstanding created by the famous Orientalist Goldzi'her in his book “Mazāhib ut Tafsīr-al-Islāmi”, as is to be expected.

“The Muslim critics of Ḥadīth themselves admit that ‘Ali bin Abi Ṭalḥā himself did not hear these exegetic remarks from Ibn ‘Abbās which he has mentioned in this book. This is the verdict of the Islamic critics of Ḥadīth about the collection of exegesis of Ibn ‘Abbās which is regarded as most acceptable.”⁹¹

But Goldziher has omitted to say that whereas expert critics of Ḥadīth have written that while Ali bin Abi Ṭalḥā had not heard these narrations from Ibn ‘Abbās, ‘Ali bin Abi Ṭalḥā had adopted some of these reports from Mujāhid and some from Sa‘īd bin Jubayr. Ḥāfiẓ Ibn Ḥajar states.⁹²

بعد ان عرفت الواسطة وهى ثقة فلا ضمير فى ذلك -

When intermediate link is found and is reliable, no problem then remains.

Apart from this sequence of 'Ali bin Talḥā the narrations of Ibn 'Abbās have other narrations which are either absolutely correct (ṣaḥīḥ) or good (Ḥasan) They are for example, Abu Thaur from Ibn Jurayḥ from Ibn 'Abbās or, Ḥajjāj bin Muhammad from Ibn Jurayḥ from Ibn 'Abbās, or Qāys from 'Aṭā' bin Sāib from S'ad bin Jubayr from Ibn 'Abbās, or Ibn ul Ishāq from Muḥammad bin Abi Muḥammad from 'Ikrimah or Sa'id bin Jubayr from Ibn 'Abbās, etc.'

3: The narrations of Ibn 'Abbās reported from following sources are weak.

- a) Muḥammad bin Sā'ib Al-Kalbī from Abi Ṣāliḥ from Ibn 'Abbās; and when Muḥammad bin Marwān-as-Suddyi-as-Saghīr reports from Kalbī this is regarded by authorities as a false sequence. Of the commentators Th'alaba and Wāḥidī have reported a vast number of narrations from this sequence.
- b) Ḍaḥḥāk bin Muzāḥim from Ibn 'Abbās. This is weak because Ḍaḥḥāk is not known to have met Ibn 'Abbās and if Bishr bin 'Ammārah from Abi Rūq be the reporter from Ḍaḥḥāk, the sequence becomes weaker because Bishr bin 'Ammārah himself is weak, and if Juwaibir be the reporter from Ḍaḥḥāk it becomes weaker because Juwaibir is most unreliable.
- c) 'Aṭiyyah al-'Aufī from Ibn 'Abbās: This is weak because of low profile of 'Aṭiyyah al-'Aufī. However, some people consider it as good (Ḥasan) because Tirmizī has appreciated the reports of 'Aṭiyyah. A detailed discussion in this matter will follow in the report on 'Aṭiyyah al-'Aufī.'

- d) Muqātil bin Sulaymān from Ibn ‘Abbās: This is also weak due to low profile of Muqātil whose state will be discussed later.⁹³

TRUTH ABOUT THE PREVALENT EXEGESIS OF IBN ‘ABBĀS (TAFSĪR IBN-‘ABBĀS)

- 4: A book by the name of Tanwīr-ul-miq'yās fī Tafsīr Ibn ‘Abbās has been published in our times which is generally considered as exegesis of Ibn ‘Abbās. Its Urdu translation has also been published, but it is wrong to ascribe it to Ibn ‘Abbās because this book has been based on the reported sequence of Muhammad bin Marwān-as-Suddy from Muhammad bin Sā'ib al-Kalbī from Abi Šāleḥ from Ibn ‘Abbās.⁹⁴

We have stated in the foregoing lines that this has been regarded by Traditionists as a ‘chain of falsehood’ and hence cannot be relied upon.

‘ALI ﷺ IBN ABU TALIB

Sayyidina ‘Ali ﷺ holds a very high place in the exegesis of the Qurān. Since the first three caliphs had died early, only a few exegetic narrations have been reported from them, but Sayyidina Ali ﷺ remained busy in the learning of Islam for a very long time and there are many narrations reported from him. His eminent position in the Science of Exegesis can be estimated from the fact that Abu Tufayl says:

“I saw ‘Ali delivering an address in which he said, ‘Ask me questions about the Book of Allah, because, By God! There is no verse of the Qurān about which I do not know whether it was revealed at night or during the day, on the ground or on the mountain".⁹⁵

Since Sayyidina Ali عليه السلام had settled in Kufah (Iraq), his teachings mostly spread in that area, and most of his narrations have been reported by people of Kūfah.

ABDULLAH BIN MAS'ŪD رضي الله عنه

He is also one of those Companions from whom a large number of exegetic narrations have been reported. In fact narrations are even more than Sayyidina 'Ali عليه السلام Hāfiz Ibn Jarīr etc, have reported him saying as under:

والذى لا اله غيره ما نزلت آية من كتاب الله الا وانا اعلم فيمن
نزلت و اين نزلت، ولو اعلم مكان احد اعلم بكتاب الله منى تناله المطايا لأتيه -

"By the Being save whom there is none worthy of worship, I know of every verse of the Book of Allah about whom it was revealed and where it was revealed. If I know the address of a person who knows the Book of Allah more than I know, I will certainly go to him provided the camels can reach that place."⁹⁶

The famous Tābi'ī Masrūq bin Al-Ajda' states 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd used to recite a Surah before us and spend most of the day in its interpretation and relating Prophetic Traditions about it."⁹⁷

And Masrūq has also said "I had been benefitted from many Companions, but after deep thinking found that the knowledge of all the Companions was limited in six of them, namely, Sayyidina ‘Umar, Sayyidina ‘Ali, Sayyidina ‘Abdullah bin Mas‘ūd, Sayyidina Zayd bin Thābit, Sayyidina Abu Darda and Sayyidina Ubayy bin Ka‘b رضي الله تعالى عنهم. Then I pondered again and found the knowledge of these six dependent on Sayyidina ‘Ali and Sayyidina ‘Abdullah bin Mas‘ūd ﷺ.”⁹⁸

UBAYY BIN KA‘B

He is also one of those Companions who were renowned in the science of Exegesis and Recital. The Prophet ﷺ had said about him.

أَقْرَأُهُمْ أَبِي بِنِ كَعْبٍ

The greatest Recitor (among the Companions) is Ubayy bin Ka‘b.⁹⁹

His eminent status can be assessed from the fact that the great commentator Sayyidina ‘Abdullah bin ‘Abbās took lessons from him. Sayyidina Mu‘ammar states.

عامة علم ابن عباس من ثلثة: عمرو و علي و أبي بن كعب

“Most of the learning of Ibn ‘Abbās have been derived from ‘Umar, ‘Ali, and Ubbay bin Ka‘b ﷺ.”¹⁰⁰

There are some reports that indicate that he was the first commentator whose exegesis was compiled in book form. There was a large transcription of his book from which Abu Ja‘far Rāzi used to narrate from Rab‘i bin Anas from Abī-Al-‘Āliyah. Ibn Jarīr, Ibn Abi Ḥātim, Aḥmad bin Ḥanbal and Ḥākim have reported from this 98: Muqaddimah Nasbur-Rāyah, al-Kautharī v1, p30.

transcription. Ḥākīm had died in the year 405 AH., hence this transceiption was present upto the 5th century Hijri.¹⁰¹

In addition to the above mentioned Companions, narration related to exegesis of the Qurān have also been reported from Zayd bin Thābit, Mu‘āz bin Jabal, ‘Abdullah bin ‘Amr, Abdullah ibn Umar, Sayyidah ‘Āyshah, Jābir Abu Mūsā Ash‘arī, Anas and Abu Hurayrah رضى الله تعالى عنهم.

101: Al-Itqān, v2, p189.

AFTER THE COMPANIONS رضى الله تعالى عنهم

The Companions رضى الله تعالى عنهم of the Holy Prophet ﷺ had established centres at different places for the teaching of the Qurān. As a result of their teachings and training a large group of their followers were able to render prominent service to the Science of Exegesis. A brief introduction to some of them is given here, because they are frequently referred to in the books of exegesis.

1: MUJĀHID

His full name is 'Abul Ḥajjāj Mujāhid bin Jabr-al-Makhzūmī (Born 21 AH, Died 103 AH).¹⁰² He was a student of 'Abdullah bin 'Abbās and was his favourite pupil. He read the Qurān thirty times with him and learnt its exegesis three times. Qatādah said about him.¹⁰³

اعلم من بقى بالتفسير مجاهد

Mujāhid is the greatest of the living of exegetes.
And Khaṣīf has said

اعلمهم بالتفسير مجاهد -

“Mujāhid is the greatest scholar of exegesis.”¹⁰⁴

It is said that a collection of his exegesis is still safe in the Khadīviyah Library of Egypt.¹⁰⁵

Although Mujāhid is among the Tabi'īn (followers of Companions) yet the Companions used to respect him. He has himself stated:

صحبت ابن عمرو انى ارید ان اخدمه فكان هو يخدمنى -

"I remained in the company of Ibn 'Umar and I wanted to serve him, but he used to serve me."¹⁰⁶

Sayyidina Ibn 'Umar رضي الله عنه once held the stirrup of his horse and said, "How I wish that my son Salim and my slave Nafe' had a memory like you."

He died in the year 103 AH while he was in prostration (Al-Bidāya wan-Nihayāh by Ibn Kathīr. V.9, P.224.)

2: SA'ĪD BIN JUBAYR

He is a renowned follower of Companions. He took lessons from 'Abdullah bin 'Abbās, 'Addullah bin 'Umar, 'Abdullah bin Zubayr, Anas, 'Abdullah bin Mughfal and Abu Mas'ūd al-Badri.¹⁰⁷

He is known for his dedication and piety. Very frequently he used to weep during Ṣalah at night so much that it resulted in a weak vision.¹⁰⁸

Ḥajjāj bin Yusuf martyred him in 94 A.H. which incident is well known in history of Islam. On the desire of caliph 'Abdul Mālīk bin Marwān he had written an exegesis of the Qurān, which the caliph had kept in safe custody in the royal treasury. After a time this exegesis came into the hands of 'Aṭā' bin Dinār (Died 126 AH) who used to narrate from this exegesis as "Mursals"¹⁰⁹ from 106: Ḥilyat-ul-Auliya by Abi Nu'aym v3, p285,286.

Sa'īd bin Jubayr. Hence all the narrations of Sa'īd bin Jubayr quoted by 'Aṭā' bin Dinār are termed by the Traditionists as "Wijādah" and are not much reliable.

Many of Sa'id ibn Jurayr's narrations are Mursal (that is medium of Companion is missing). But his Mursal are reliable. Yaḥyā ibn Sa'īd has said:

"I like Sa'īd bin Jubayr's Mursals more than those of 'Aṭā and Mujāhid."¹¹⁰

3: 'IKRIMAH

He is known by the name of 'Ikrimah Mawlā Ibn 'Abbās. He was a slave presented to Ibn 'Abbās as a gift by Husayn bin Abi-al-Har Al-'Ambarī. Ibn 'Abbās worked very hard to educate him and then freed him. Apart from Ibn 'Abbās he has reported narrations from Sayyidina 'Ali, Hasan bin 'Ali, Abu Hurayrah, Ibn 'Umar, 'Abdullah bin 'Amr, Abu Sa'īd Khudrī, 'Uqbah bin 'Āmir, Jābir, Mu'āwiyah and some other Companions.¹¹¹

'Ikrimah himself stated that he spent forty years in pursuit of knowledge.¹¹² Thus he travelled to Egypt, Syria, Iraq and even to Africa.¹¹³ Imām Sha'bī had stated that in his time there was no scholar of the Qurān greater than 'Ikrimah.¹¹⁴ Qatādah stated that four persons among the followers of Companions were the greatest scholars. 'Aṭā, Sa'īd bin Jubayr, 'Ikrimah and Ḥasan Baṣrī.¹¹⁵

TRUTH ABOUT OBJECTIONS ON 'IKRIMAH

Some Traditionists have made certain objections on 'Ikrimah. The famous Orientalist Goldziher has tried to 110: Tahzīb ut Tahzīb. p14, v4.

111: Tahzīb-ul-Tahzīb v7, p264.

112: Tazkirat-ul-Huffāz by Zahbi v1, p90.

113: Al-bidāyah wan-Nihāyah by Ibne Kathīr v9, p245.

114: Tahzīb-Tahzīb V7 p.266, and Miftāḥus Sa'ādah, v.1, p410.

blow out of proportion these objections and attempted to create an impression that even this renowned student of Ibn 'Abbās was not reliable in exegetic narrations.¹¹⁶ But the fact is that scholars, after thorough scrutiny and research, have refuted these objections. Ḥāfiẓ Ibn Hajar has made a vast and elaborate discussion on this subject in Muqaddimah Faṭḥ-ul-Bārī. He has stated that several Traditionists have written books on the explanation of 'Ikrimah and have scrutinised objections raised against him. They include Ḥāfiẓ Ibn Jarīr, Imām Muḥammad bin Naṣr Maruzi, Abu 'Abdullah bin Mandah, Abu Ḥātim bin Hibbān and Abu 'Umar bin 'Abdul Barr.¹¹⁷ Then Ibn Hajar has said that the objections being raised against 'Ikrimah depend on three allegations. Firstly, that he had attributed some wrong things to Ibn 'Abbās. Secondly, by his belief he was a Khārijī (Schismatic). And thirdly, he used to accept gifts and rewards from rich people.

As far as the third allegation is concerned that he accepted gifts and rewards from the rich people, it is not a valid reason for rejecting his reports. As for the other two, Ibn Hajar has concluded that these allegations could not be proved at all. Whatever incidents have been attributed to him have all been scrutinized and investigated one by one in full detail, and refuted with arguments by Ḥāfiẓ Ibn Hajar. For instance, the allegation of falsehood is based on a misunderstanding, that some times he heard a narration from two different persons, and on one occasion he quoted one of them and on another occasion he quoted the other person while reporting it. On this, some people thought that he used to invent Ḥadith although both narrations were correct. He himself has said:

117: Hadi as Sāri (Muqaddamah Faṭḥ al Bārī, Ḥāfiẓ Ibn Ḥajr, v2, p192, Chaptar 9, letter 'Ain (ع).)

أرأيت هؤلاء الذين يكذبونني من خلفي، أفلا يكذبونني في وجهي-

These people who falsify me in my absence why do they not falsify me on my face?

He meant to say that he would explain the fact if they talk to him face to face.

Similarly, Ibn Hajar showed that the allegation that he was a Khārijī could not be proved through any authentic source. However, in some juristic cases he had adopted the views which were similar to those of Khārijīs. It was due to this fact that some people alleged him to be a Khārijī.

Imām 'Ijlī says,

عكرمة مولی ابن عباس رضی الله عنهما مکی تابعی ثقة برئى ع
مما يرميه به الناس به من الحرورية -

“ ‘Ikramah is the freed slave of Ibn ‘Abbās, belongs to Makkah, and is a reliable follower of Companions. He is absolved of the allegations of being a Khārijī which people have brought against him.”

And Ibn Jarīr Ṭabarī has said,

“If a person, to whom a wrong belief has been attributed, could be declared unacceptable for testimony on this basis, we shall have to abandon most of the Traditionists because almost all of them are attributed things they did not like.”¹¹⁸

That is why almost all the scholars of Ḥadith

118: These sayings are reported by Ḥafīẓ Ibn Hajar. Details may be seen in Ḥadī as Sārī, v2, p192-196, Chapter 9.

(Traditionists) have cited narrations from 'Ikrimah. Imām Bukhārī is very strict in matters of scrutiny of Traditions and had dropped all doubtful reporters, yet he has adopted 'Ikrimah's reports in his Ṣaḥīḥ. About Imām Mālik it has been said that he did not like 'Ikrimah, but in the chapter Kitābul Ḥajj he has quoted 'Ikrimah's report.¹¹⁹ It is also said about Imām Muḥammad Ibn Sīrīn that he used to taunt at 'Ikrimah, but Khālīd al-Ḥazzā has stated as under:

Every such tradition about which Muhammad bin Sīrīn says: ثبت عن ابن عباس (It is reported from Ibn 'Abbās) he had heard it 'Ikrimah. He did not name him because he personally disliked him".¹²⁰

In short, it is a proved fact that 'Ikrimah's reports are acceptable and most scholars of Ḥadīth have quoted him without any hesitation.

GOLDZIHHER'S CONFUSION

Here it seems appropriate to point to a confusion in the mind of Goldziher. He has narrated an incident that when 'Ikrimah died there were not enough people even to carry his coffin. On the other hand, a famous poet Kuthayyir 'Azzah also died the same day and in his burial a large group of Quraysh was present. Goldziher has inferred two things from this incident. One, that in those days Muslims in general had a greater regard for a public poet than for the Traditionists and two, that people of Arabia considered a slave (even though he was freed) to be far inferior to a pure Arab.¹²¹

But this imaginative expression of Goldziher is based on the malice and prejudice so he never felt ashamed of circulating unconfirmed reports. The fact is that the very story is baseless that there were many people in the funeral of Kuthayyir and almost none in the funeral of 'Ikrimah. According to Ibn Hajar.

والذى نقل انهم شهدوا جنازة كثير وتركوا عكرمة لم يثبت لان
ناقله لم يسم -

“And the report that people participated in the bier of Kuthayyir and not of 'Ikrimah has not been proved because this has been narrated by an unknown person.”¹²²

And even if we accept the fact that very few people were present in the burial of 'Ikrimah, it is not surprising in view of the circumstances under which 'Ikrimah had died. In every historical narration it is mentioned that the government had issued orders for his arrest, due to which he had gone into hiding and died in that state. Obviously, very few people must have got the news of his death and hence the low attendance. No wise person can deduce from this that he enjoyed less respect in the eyes of the people than a poet. In the unbiased historical expressions it is explicitly mentioned that it was on the lips of people in general that:

مات أفقه الناس وأشعر الناس -

Today the greatest jurist has died and also the greatest poet.¹²³

Noteworthy is the ridiculous trend of research by the Orientalists that they are quick to infer on the basis of a minor unauthentic incident. The question arises: Was the bier of 'Ikrimah the only thing to test the respect of people

122: Tahzīb-ul-Tahzīb v7, p273.

123: Al-bidāyah wan-Nihāyah v9, p245.

for the Traditionists? Do the innumerable incidents of the lives and deaths of hundreds of thousands of other Traditionists throw no light on this subject? Is this the only incident in the history to determine the behaviour of general public with scholars of slave origin? Do they not get any guidance in this subject from the extreme popularity and respect attained by thousands of slaves, other than 'Ikrimah, after their scholastic achievements? Did 'Ikrimah not get great respect when he was alive?

In fact, reference to such baseless allegations in a scholarly book is nauseating.¹²⁴

Here we have mentioned them so that the low standard of research and the way of thinking of those people who remain busy to satisfy their passions of malice and prejudice, should also be known to our readers.

4: ṬA'WŪS رحمه الله عليه

His full name is 'Abdur Raḥmān Ṭa'wūs bin Kaisān al Himyari al Jundi. He belonged to the city of Jund in Yemen. He was also a slave. He attained his education from 'Abdullah bin 'Umar, Zayd bin Thābit, Zayd bin Arqam and many other Companions. But his narrations reported from Sayyidah 'Āyshah رضى الله عنها and Mu'āz bin Jabal and the Caliphs are 'Mursal'. In his time he was famous for his piety and dedication to Allah apart from his scholastic and eminent status. He performed Ḥajj forty times. Imām Zuhri has said, "If you had seen Ta'wūs you would have agreed that he cannot tell a lie." 'Amr bin Dinār has said about him, "I have not seen a person more unconcerned about the property of others."¹²⁵

124: We will shortly see the report on the funeral of Ṭa'wūs and the lives of Traditionalists about many of whom were slaves originally.

125: Tahzīb ut-Tahzib, v5. p9-10.

‘Allāmah Nawawī writes, “There is a consensus of all the scholars that he was highly honourable, venerated, full of dignity, excellence of knowledge, piety, power of memory and cautious approach.”¹²⁶ Ḥāfiz Abu Nu‘aym Isfahāni has described his virtues and piety and his writings in great detail in Hilyat ul Awliya. He died in Mina or Muzadlifah in the year 105 AH. And every class of people, from government officials to scholars and saints and the crowd participated in his funeral. The attendance was so large that the Caliph had to send the police to control it. Sayyidina ‘Abdullah bin al Hasan bin ‘Ali bin Abu Tālib kept his bier constantly on his shoulder even though his cap fell down and his shirt was torn.¹²⁷

5: ‘ATĀ BIN ABI RABĀH

During the era of Tabi‘īn (followers of companions) four dignitaries by the name of ‘Aṭā had been very popular. They were ‘Aṭā bin Abi Rabāḥ, ‘Aṭā bin Yāsir, ‘Aṭā bin al-Sā’ib and ‘Aṭā al-Khurāsānī. The first two of these are unanimously regarded as “reliable” and there had been some comment on the other two. But whenever only ‘Aṭā is written in religious books, it refers ‘Aṭā bin Rabāḥ only. His full name is Abu Muḥammad ‘Aṭā bin Abi Rabāḥ Al-Makkī Al-Qurayshī. He was the Maulā (Freed slave) of Ibn Khaysam al-Qurayshi. He was born in the last days of Caliphate of ‘Uthmān and died in 114 A.H. He was educated by ‘Abdullah bin ‘Abbās, Abdullah bin Zubayr, and Sayyidah ‘Āyshah رضى الله تعالى عنها and other Companions ﷺ and their followers. He was mainly popular as a jurist. It is said that in his time he was the greatest scholar on Ḥajj rites.¹²⁸ He was highly acclaimed for his devotion to Allah and piety. Ibn Jurayj said, "For twenty years the floor of the mosque was his bed." Muḥammad bin 'Abdullah ad-Dibāj said, "I have not seen a Mufti (one authorized to pass a verdict on religious laws) better than 'Aṭā. His assembly was always enlightened with remembrance of Allah whose continuity was never broken. If a legal question was asked during it he used to give an excellent answer."¹²⁹

However, his narrations lack authentication of a direct relay through the Companions. Even from Ibn-'Umar whom he has reported most frequently his direct audition is not proved. Similarly, he did not hear the narrations directly from Abu Sa'īd Khudrī, Zayd bin Khālīd, Umm Salmah, Umm Hānī, Umm Kurz, Rāfi' bin Khadīj, Usāmah, Jubayr bin Muṭ'am Abu Dardā and Faḍal bin 'Abbās.' Hence his direct narrations from all these people are "Mursal" (without direct audition from a Companion). Imām Ahmad considered his Mursal as the weakest of all Mursal because he used to accept narration from everyone and anyone.¹³⁰

6: SA'ĪD BIN AL-MUSAYYIB

His full name was Sayyidina Sa'īd bin Al-Musayyib bin Ḥazn al-Qarshī al-Makhzūmī.¹³¹

He was the son-in-law of Sayyidina Abu Hurayrah رضي الله عنه. Hence many of Abu Hurayrah's narrations have been reported from him. He was such a pious and devoted person that for forty years there was no 'call for Ṣalāh' which he did not hear while he was already present in the mosque.¹³² and performed Hajj forty times. He never accepted any reward from any rich person. For his livelihood he depended on his trade of oils. Imām Mālik has quoted him as saying. "Some times I used to travel several days and nights just to learn a single Tradition."¹³³ He was born in the third year of Sayyidina 'Umar's caliphate. Hence he has heard traditions from many Companions. He used to report too often indirectly (as Mursal) from the Companions whom he did not hear directly. But his Mursal were accepted even by those 'ulamā who normally rejected Mursal Aḥādith. For example, Imām Shāfa'ī did not consider Mursal valid for reporting but he said, "Ibn Musaiyyib's Mursal narrations are fairly authentic for us." The reason is that he always reported from reliable narrators only.¹³⁴

But Imām Nawawī has refuted that his Mursal were acceptable to Shāfa'ī without preconditions. He says "For us his Mursal are subject to the same conditions as those of other eminent Tabi'ī that is, it would be accepted only if it is supported by a proven narration or another Mursal or by the sayings of some Companions or after the Companions by the deliberations of most of the jurists", otherwise, no."¹³⁵ This discussion is, however, related to Shāfa'ī School of thought. For Hanafīs his mursal are acceptable without pre conditions. There are different reports about his death from 91 AH to 105 AH.

7: MUHAMMAD BIN SĪRĪN

His full name is Abu Bakr Muḥammad bin Sīrīn. His father Sīrīn was the freed slave of Sayyidina Anas رضي الله عنه and his mother Ṣafya was the freed maid of Sayyidina Abu Bakr Ṣiddīq رضي الله عنه. At the time when Sayyidina Abu Bakar رضي الله عنه purchased her, three of the respected wives of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم applied fragrance to her, and eighteen of the Companions of Badr joined the celebration. They included Ubayy bin Ka'b who made the Supplication to Allah and the others said Āmīn. Among the children of Sayyidina Sīrīn six are well known. They are Muḥammad, Ma'bad, Anas, Yahya, Ḥaṣṣah and Karīmah. All six of them are reliable reporters of Ḥadīth. Of them the most popular and eminently placed is Muḥammad bin Sīrīn whose wonderful life needs to be recorded in book form. His piety and dedication is exemplary. Hishām bin Ḥasan said, "When we stayed in the house of Ibn Sīrīn we heard him laughing during daytime (because he had a jolly and delightful nature), and weeping at night." It was due to his piety and dedication that he had to bear the hardships as a prisoner. During his imprisonment the jail warden offered him permission to go home at night and come back in the morning every day. But he replied, "By God! I shall not aid in being mistrustful to the Sultan."¹³⁶

It was during his imprisonment that the renowned Companion and his father's master Sayyidina Anas رضي الله عنه died. He had left a will that his body should be given bath by Muḥammad bin Sīrīn. People came to him and mentioned the will, he said, "I am a prisoner." People said, "We have obtained permission from the Sultan." Muḥammad bin Sīrīn replied, "The one who imprisoned me is not the Sultan but the man whose right I have to pay." So the people got permission of that man, and then Muḥammad bin Sīrīn gave bath to Sayyidina Anas رضي الله عنه.¹³⁷

Anyhow, Muḥammad bin Sīrīn is unanimously accepted as Imām of exegesis, traditions and law. He is known to have met Sayyidina Anas, Abu Hurayrah 'Imrān bin Husayn, 'Abdullah bin 'amr and Zayd bin Thābit رضي الله عنه. He has also reported as indirect narration (i.e. Mursal) from those Companions whom he never met. But his Mursal are accepted by many of those who do not otherwise rely on Mursal as an argument, for instance Imām Ibn Taymiyyah says,

و محمد بن سيرين من اروع الناس في منطقه مراسيله من اصح المراسيل -

"Muḥammad bin Sīrīn is the most cautions of persons in his discourses and his Mursal are the most reliable of all Mursal."¹³⁸

He died in Baṣrah on 9 Shawwāl 110 AH.¹³⁹

8: ZAYD BIN ASLAM

His full name is Abu 'Abdullah Zayd bin Aslam Al-'Amrī (D.136 AH) He belonged to Madina and was a freed slave of 'Abdullah bin 'Umar رضي الله تعالى عنه. He has reported narrations from Ibn 'Umar, Abu Hurayrah, Sayyidina 'Āyshah, Jabir, Anas and Salamah bin Al-Akwa' etc., رضي الله تعالى عنهم. He was a great scholar in the science of exegesis and is unanimously regarded as reliable. He conducted teachings in the Masjid Nabawi. He was so popular that his son ‘Abd-ur-Rahmān stated that whenever his father sent him to any of his students, he used to kiss him on his forehead and say, “By God! your father is dearer to us than our entire family. If we are told that any of our family or Zayd bin Aslam would die and if we are given a choice to, we shall wish that Zayd bin Aslam should live.”¹⁴⁰

Abu Hāzim said, “We attended the assemblies of Zayd bin Aslam with forty jurists. Our humblest disposition was that we used to offer solace to each other with our possessions, and in his assemblies never saw two persons arguing on useless topic or disputing with each other.”¹⁴¹

Sayyidina Zayd bin Aslam has been generally accepted as reliable. However, ‘Ubaydullah bin ‘Umar says, “I do not know of anything bad in him. However, he used to interpret the Qurān very often on his own views.” And Sufyān bin ‘Uyaynāh said, “Zayd bin Aslam was a noble man but his memory was a bit defective.” Apart from these two persons, no one else has passed adverse comments on him.

Hafiz Zahabī states that there was an exegesis written by him which his son ‘Abdur Raḥmān bin Zayd bin Aslam used to quote.¹⁴² But it should be understood that ‘Abdur Raḥmān bin Zayd bin Aslam is a weak narrator despite his piety and devotion, and most of the Traditionists have called him “unreliable”¹⁴³ Hence the exegetic narrations of Zayd bin Aslam reported by his son ‘Abdur Raḥman are not fully reliable.

9: ABUL 'ĀLIYAH'

His full name is Abul 'Āliyah Rufai' bin Mehrān Ar-Riyāhī. He belonged to Baṣrah and was born in the days of paganism but embraced Islam two years after the death of the Prophet ﷺ. He had met Sayyidina Abu Bakr رضي الله عنه, and he has reported Aḥādith from Sayyidina 'Alī, Ibn Mas'ūd, Ubayy bin Ka'b, Ibn 'Abbās, Abu Mūsā, Abu Ayyūb and Abū Barzah رضي الله تعالى عنهم. He was a renowned Qārī (Recitor) of the Qurān. He was also a freed slave of a woman of Banī Rabāḥ,¹⁴⁴ but Sayyidina Ibn 'Abbās always offered him a seat by his side on the cot while other Quraysh sat on the floor, and would say, "knowledge upholds the nobility of man in this manner."¹⁴⁵ There is a consensus of scholars on his reliability. He died in 93 AH.¹⁴⁶ He was the first one to make the call for Ṣalah in the region of Māwarā un-nahr;¹⁴⁷ (the area beyond the river).

10: 'URWAH BIN AZ-ZUBAYR

He was the son of Sayyidina Zubayr bin 'Awwām رضي الله عنه. He is one of the seven renowned jurists of Al-Madinah, and a nephew of Sayyidah 'Āyṣhah رضي الله تعالى عنها. That is why he has reported many traditions from her, and has been considered most reliable in reporting them. It is agreed by the 'Ulamā that he was dignified, knowledgeable, learned and reliable.¹⁴⁸ His son Hishām has said, "My father always observed fasts and died in the same state in 94 AH".

Ibn Shawzab stated that 'Urwah used to recite one

11: ḤASAN BAṢRĪ

His full name is Abu Sa'īd Al-Ḥasan bin Abi al-Ḥasan Yasar Al-Baṣrī. He was the freed slave of Zayd bin Thābit رضي الله عنه (and according to some people of Jamil bin Qutaibah.) His mother Khayrah was the freed slave-woman of the Prophet's ﷺ wife Umm Salmah رضي الله تعالى عنها and was therefore, sometimes breastfed by her. He was born two years before the martyrdom of Sayyidina 'Umar رضي الله عنه. He had met many Companions and also gained religious knowledge from them. His eminent status with regard to learning and piety is unquestionable. His devotion and dedication, and his prudent sayings and writings are very popular. At the same time as that he was a great warrior too, and took part in several battles.¹⁵⁰ During the reign of Sayyidina Mu'āwiyah he had remained the scribe for the governor of Khurasān, Rabi' bin Ziyād.

He has narrated many Traditions as Mursal (that is, he has not mentioned the link of the Companion whose Traditions he narrated). There has been a severe difference of opinion among scholars of Ḥadith on the question of the reliability of such Aḥādith so that some accept them while others reject them. Imām Ibn ul-Madīni has said, "If the Mursals of Ḥasan are reported from reliable narrators then they are true and they are very rarely unreliable." Imām Abu Zar'ah said, "All those traditions, which Ḥasan Baṣri has reported with the words 149: Tazkirat-ul-Ḥuffāz, v1, p59.

150: Tahzīb ul-Asma, v1, p161 refe 122.

'The Messenger of Allah said...' but without naming the line of transmission, I have found them correct after scrutiny, except for four of them where I could not trace the Companion's link." Imām Aḥmad has however termed the Mursal of Ḥasan Baṣrī and 'Atā as the weakest of all Mursal.¹⁵¹ He died in 110 AH.

12: QATĀDAH

His full name is Abul Khaṭṭāb Qatādah bin Di'āmah As-Sudūsī Al-Baṣrī. He was born blind, yet his memory was so sharp that he himself had said, "I never asked a Traditionist to report a Tradition a second time, and my ears never heard a thing which my heart did not memorise." He also said, "There is no verse of the Qurān about which I had not learnt something (that is, a narration or report) already." Imām Aḥmad said, "Qatādah is a great scholar of exegesis." In addition, he also had a great knowledge of the Arabic language, literature, history and geneology. However, the Traditionists have said that sometimes he adopted 'Tadlīs'¹⁵² in the narrations. He died of plague in the city of Wāsiṭ in 118 AH.¹⁵³

13: MUḤAMMAD BIN KA'B AL-QURAZĪ

His full name is Muḥammad bin Ka'b bin Saleem bin Asad Al-Qurazī. His Kunyah is Abu Hamzah or Abu 'Abdullah.' His father belonged to the tribe of Banu Qurayzah and was excused in the battle of Banu Qurayzah due to his childhood. It is said that Muḥammad bin Ka'b al-Qurazī was born in the life time of Prophet ﷺ. He has reported several traditions from Sayyidina 'Alī, Ibn Mas'ūd, Ibn 'Abbās, Ibn 'Umar, Abu Hurayrah, Jābir, Anas, Barā bin 'Āzib, Mu'āwiyah, Ka'b bin 'Ujrah, Zayd bin Arqam, Mughīra bin Shu'bah 'Abdullah bin Jā'far and several other Companions رضى الله تعالى عنهم.

Imām Ibn Sa'd said, "He was reliable and a scholar of many traditions." Imām 'Ijlī said, "He is reliable and pious and a great scholar of the Qurān." 'Aun bin 'Abdullah stated, "I have not seen a scholar of exegesis of the Qurān greater than him."¹⁵⁴ 'Allāmah Nawawī said, "There is consensus on his reliability."

In the beginning he had settled in Kūfah (Irāq) but later on returned to Madinah. He died somewhere between 108 and 120 AH.¹⁵⁵

14: 'ALQAMAH

His full name is Abu Shubayl 'Alqamah bin Qays bin 'Abdullah Nakh'ī. He was resident of Kūfah (Irāq) and was born during the life time of the Prophet ﷺ. He has reported traditions from many Companions but he was a favourite student of Sayyidina Abdullah bin Mas'ūd ؓ, so much so that he had a great resemblance in appearance and character with Ibn Mas'ūd. Hence in the matter of narrations of Ibn Mas'ūd great reliance is placed on him and Sayyidina Aswad. He was a sweet voiced recitor of the Qurān and Sayyidina Ibn Mas'ūd used to send for him specially for hearing his recitals of the Qurān. Once he recited the entire Qurān in one night. He is unanimously regarded as reliable and had attained a highly eminent place in the science of jurisprudence. About his death there are different reports that he died between 62 AH and 73 AH.¹⁵⁶

155: Tahzīb-ul-Asmā, v1, p90.

He was a very humble person and generally remained busy in household tasks. He did not like to have his own circle of students and used to say, "I do not like that people walk after me and say to each other that he is Alqamah. After his death his entire heritage was a copy of the Holy Qurān and a horse in addition to a house."¹⁵⁷

15: ASWAD

His full name is Abu 'Amr Aswad bin Yazīd bin Qays Al Nakh'ī. He also belonged to Kūfah (Irāq) and was also a favourite student of 'Abdullah Ibn Mas'ūd, a nephew of 'Alqamah and maternal uncle of Ibrāhīm Nakh'ī. 'Allāmah Nawawī states, "There is consensus on his reliability and eminent status." He was renowned for his piety and devotion. It is said that he travelled to the Ḥarmayn¹⁵⁸ eighty times for Hajj or 'Umrah. His son 'Abdur Raḥmān used to offer 700 raka'āt in Ṣalāh every day, yet it was said that he was the weakest worshipper among the family members of Sayyidina Aswad.¹⁵⁹

Sayyidina Ibrāhīm Nakh'ī stated, "Aswad used to recite complete Qurān in two nights of Ramaḍān and slept only between Maghrib and 'Ishā. He kept so many fasts that his body used to turn pale and purple. When 'Alqamah said to him why did he put so much hardship to his body, he would say, "I want the comfort of the Hereafter for the body." And sometimes he said, "O Abu Shabl, the affair (of Hereafter) is very serious." He died about 75A.H.¹⁶⁰

16: MURRAH AL-HAMDĀNĪ

His full name is Abu Ismā'īl Murrah bin Sharāhīl. Al-Hamdānī Sakaski Al-Kūfi, and in his time he was known by the titles of "Murratut-Ṭayyib" (Murrah, the Pure) and "Murrat-ul-Khayr" (Murrah the Good). He saw the times of Prophet ﷺ but could not see him and is thus known as one of the *Mukḥḍarmīn*¹⁶¹ He has reported from many Companions, for example, Sayyidina 'Umar 'Uthmān, 'Alī, Huzayfah and Abū Zarr etc. He received much knowledge from 'Abdullah bin Mas'ūd. Thus we find a large number of Ibn Mas'ud's narrations reported by him in the books of exegesis. He is unanimously considered as reliable. His devotion in worship of Allāh was so extreme that historians write, "The number of his prostrations were so many that earth had eaten his forehead." He is said to offer between five to six hundred raka'āt daily.¹⁶² Ḥāfiẓ Zahabī has written "He had an insight in exegesis." He died about 90 AH.¹⁶³

But it should be remembered that his narrations in the books of exegesis are immensely reported by Suddī who is reported weak as we shall soon see.

17: NĀFI'

His full name is Abū 'Abdullah Nāfi' bin Hurmuz and according to some Nāfi' bin Kā'ūs. He belonged to Nishapur and was a freed slave of 'Abdullah bin 'Umar رضي الله عنه. He was an eminent follower of Companions (Ṭābi'ī). He gained most of his knowledge from Sayyidina Ibn 'Umar, Abu Hurayrah, Abu Sa'id Khudrī, Abu Lubābah, 161: One who lived in the times of the Holy Prophet ﷺ but did not see him.

Rāfi' bin Khadīj رضي الله تعالى عنها and Sayyidah 'Āyshah رضي الله تعالى عنها. Of all the students of Sayyidina Ibn 'Umar, two have been regarded as most reliable, his son Sālim bin 'Abdullah and his slave Nāfi'. 'Allāmah Nawāwi stated that there was consensus on the eminence of his status and reliability. And according to Imām Bukhārī, "Of all the reports, the most correct report is in the sequence Mālik from Nāfi' from Ibn 'Umar."¹⁶⁴ Sayyidina Ibn 'Umar himself has said, "Allah has granted us a great favour through Nāfi'." Ibn Hajar has written, "No error could be detected in all the Traditions reported by him."¹⁶⁵

Imām Mālik who was his favourite student says about him that he was a very humble person, generally wrapped himself in a black sheet and talked very little. Sayyidina Nāfi' himself said, "I served Ibn 'Umar for 30 years. After that Ibn 'Āmir asked him to sell me to him for 30,000 dirhams. Then Ibn 'Umar said to me that he feared the dirhams of Ibn 'Āmir might not put him into a serious trial, therefore, you are free from now." He died in 117 A.H.¹⁶⁶

18: SHA'BĪ

His full name is Abu 'Āmir bin Sharāḥīl Ash-Sha'bī Al Ḥimyari. He is one of the famous jurists from the Tābi'i of Kūfah ('Irāq). He had met about five hundred Companions. His memory was extra-ordinarily strong. He never memorized a Ḥadith by first writing it down. He used to say "Whenever any one recites anything to me it is at once committed to my memory. The thing that I remember least is poetry, yet if I start reciting poetical verses I can do it for a whole month and no verse will be repeated." He is one of the eminent teachers of Imām Abu Ḥanīfah, and his own eminent status is universally accepted. Imām Aḥmad and Imām 'Ijlī have stated that even his Mursal are reliable because he reported as Mursal only the correct narrations.¹⁶⁷

19: IBN ABI MULAYKAH

His full name is Abu Muhammad 'Abdullah bin 'Ubaydullah bin Abi Mulaykah Al-Tamīmī Al-Makkī. During the caliphate of Abdullah bin Zubayr he was the chief judge (Qāzī) of Makkah and the Muazzin (who calls to prayer) in the Mosque Al-Haram. Afterwards Ibn Zubayr appointed him the Qāzī of Ta'if. He has reported Traditions from many Companions, and according to him, he had met thirty Companions.¹⁶⁸

During his stay at Ta'if he also benefitted from the knowledge of Ibn 'Abbās. According to Ḥafīẓ Zahabī كان "اماماً فقيهاً حجةً فصيحا مفرها متفقا على ثققه".

There was consensus on his reliability. He died in 117 A.H.¹⁶⁹

20: IBN JURAYJ

His full name is Abul Walīd 'Abdul Malik bin 'Abdul 'Azīz bin Jurayj Al-Qurayshi Al-Makkī. His time was among the successors of the followers of Companions.' He had been a student of Ṭā'ūs 'Aṭā' bin Abi Rabāḥ, Mujāhid, Ibn Mulaykah and Nāfi' etc. In particular he lived with Sayyidina 'Aṭā' for 17 years. When people asked 'Aṭā' whom should they approach for religious matters after his death, he pointed to Ibn Jurayj and said, "Ask from him if he be alive." That is why he has been called أثبت (most reliable of all the people) for the narrations of ‘Aṭā.’ His special trait is that he was the first regular writer of religious sciences who compiled the various sciences for the first time. He has said, مَا دُونَ الْعِلْمِ تَدْوِينِي أَحَدٌ. “No one compiled religious doctrines as I did”, he was in a very high esteem in the matter of dedication and devotion. He used to keep fasts daily except for three days in a month.¹⁷⁰ Imām ‘Abdur Razzāq says, “Whenever I see Ibn Jurayj offering Ṣalāh, I feel certain that his heart is filled with the fear of Allah.”¹⁷¹

Most Traditionists have considered him reliable. However, some scholars have also expressed minor doubts and raised small objections against him. For instance, Imām Mālik has said, “Ibn Jurayj is Ḥaṭīb-ul-layl”, that is, he accepts all sorts of narrations, right or wrong, Yaḥyā bin Mu‘īn states that he is unreliable in the matter of Zuhri’s narrations, because he sometimes used to cite weak reporters. Hence, scholars of Ḥadīth have established that his narrations which begin with the prefix of حَدَّثَنِي (I heard the Ḥadīth or) مِنْ (from) are doubtful. But on the whole he is a reliable reporter, hence a large number of his narrations are quoted in the six correct books of Ḥadīth.¹⁷²

21: DAḤḤĀK

His full name is Abu Qasim Ḍaḥḥāk bin Muzāḥim al Hilālī. He belonged to Khurāsān. Ḍaḥḥāk means the one who laughs much and he was so named because he remained in his mother’s womb for two years and had already grown his teeth when he was born and he was laughing.¹⁷³ He was born during the times of the Companions but his reports directly from any Companion are doubtful. Even his reports from Ibn ‘Abbās are ‘Mursal’. ‘Abdul Mālīk bin Maisarah states, “Ḍaḥḥāk never met Ibn ‘Abbās. However, he had met Sa‘īd bin Jubayr at Rey, and he studied exegesis of the Qurān from Sayyidina Sa‘īd”.¹⁷⁴

Most scholars have regarded him as reliable. Only Shu‘bah and Yahyā bin Sa‘īd al-Qaṭṭān have called him as weak. But firstly, these two are known to be more strict in their scrutiny of people¹⁷⁵, and secondly their scrutiny was perhaps aimed at establishing that he never met any Companion yet he used to report directly from them. But by himself he was reliable. Ḥāfiẓ Zuhābī has said about him,

وثقه احمد وابن معين و ابو زرعه وغيرهم وضعفه يحيى القطان
وشعبة ايضاً، وهو قوى فى التفسير (المعنى فى الضعفاء للذهبي، ص ٣١٢، ج ١)

That is Imām Aḥmad, Ibn Mu‘īn and Abu Zur‘ah have called him ‘Reliable’ and Yahyā al-Qaṭṭān and Shu‘bah have said that he was weak and he was strong in Tafsīr.¹⁷⁶

Ibn Hajar has written

“صدوق كثير الارسال”

“He is truthful but reports from Mursal too often.”

The narrations of Ibn ‘Abbās as reported by him¹⁷⁷ have been considered ‘weak’ by Traditionists as we have already stated. However, his own exegesis is acceptable. He died sometime between 103 And 106 AH.

WEAK OR DISPUTED COMMENTATORS OF EARLY ERA

The above mentioned personalities are those about whose reliability there is a near consensus, and they are frequently referred to in the reports and narrations of exegesis. Apart from them, we have talked in detail about Sayyidina ‘Abdullah bin ‘Amr, Wahb bin Munabbih and Ka‘b ul-Aḥbār when discussing “Isra‘īliyyāt.” We now present a brief introduction of some of those commentators of the times of Ṭābi‘īn (Followers of Companions) or Ṭaba‘ Ṭābi‘īn (Followers of Ṭābi‘īn) who are considered either as “weak” or there is a significant difference of opinion about their reliability.

SUDDĪ

In the books of exegesis two persons are well-known by the name of Suddī. Separate description of both of them will be more appropriate:

1. THE SENIOR

Abu Muhammad Ismā‘īl bin ‘Abdur Rahmān bin Abī Karīmah-Suddi al-Kūfi (died 127 AH). He is known as As-Suddī-al-Kabīr and if the books of exegesis refer only to “Suddī,” the reference is to him. He was called “Suddī,” because he used to sell sheets on the platform by the door of Grand-mosque of Kūfah. In Arabic language such platform outside the door is called ‘Suddah’. Hence he was called Suddī.

He had a special aptitude for the exegesis of the Qurān, hence the books of exegesis are full of his sayings and narrations. How much reliable he is in the matter of science of exegesis and reporting is disputed by the scholars. Some of them have supported him. For instance Yahyā bin Sa'īd al-Qaṭṭān says, لَا بَأْسَ بِهِ مَا سَمِعْتُ أَحَدًا يَذْكُرُهُ إِلَّا بِخَيْرٍ

"There is no harm in his narrations. Whomsoever I heard talking about him it was nothing but good."¹⁷⁸

Imām Aḥmad said, "He is reliable." Imām Ibn 'Adi says, "In my view he is right and truthful about Ḥadith. There is no harm in him." Imām 'Ijlī said, "He is a reliable scholar and reporter for exegesis." Imām Naṣā'ī called him "Righteous."¹⁷⁹ Imām Bukhārī also appears to consider him reliable because he has not reported any comments against him in his Tārīkh Kabīr but he has quoted Isma'īl bin Abi Khālid as saying that Suddi was a greater scholar of the Qurān than Sha'bi and he has also quoted Yahyā bin Sa'īd al Qaṭṭān as above saying. After the two quotations he has made no adverse comment.¹⁸⁰ Imām Muslim also took him as reliable and has quoted him in his Ṣaḥīḥ.

On the other hand, many other scholars have commented on him. For instance, somebody said to Imām Sha'bī, "Suddī has a major share of knowledge of the Qurān." In reply to this Sha'bī said, "He has received the major share of being ignorant of the Qurān." Yahyā bin Mu'īn called him weak. Imām Abu Zar'ah called him Lenient which is a minor degree of reliability. Imām Abu Ḥatīm said, "His narrations may be written but should not be regarded as conclusive." Sājī said, "He is truthful but should be ignored". Imām 'Uqaylī states, "He is weak and is aggressive against Abu Bakr and 'Umar." Imām Ṭabarī stated that inferences from his narrations are not desirable. Imām Jauzjānī said, "He is truthful but should be ignored. He is a liar and abusive."¹⁸¹

178. We have reproduced the translation of the sayings nearer to the meanings for our readers to understand easily. The technical words can be understood by Scholars of Ḥadith only.

Imām Fallās has quoted 'Abdur Rahmān bin Mahdī as saying, "He is weak." And Ḥusain bin Wāfid Al-Marūzī states, "I have heard the narrations from Suddī, and I left him when I heard he was using offensive language against Abu Bakr and 'Umar رضي الله عنه, and I never went to him again."¹⁸²

Considering all this discussion Ibn Hajar has concluded that, "He is truthful but confused in reporting and is also blamed for being a Shi'ā."¹⁸³

His wordings are, The word صدوق is spoken for a person who is not a liar but his memory is also not upto the standard. Hence his correct position is that in respect of memory he does not come upto the standard of Traditionists, and he is also blamed to be a Shi'ā. Only Imām Jauzjānī has called him a liar.

2. THE JUNIOR

The other person known by the name of Suddī is Muhammad bin Marwān As-Suddī who was the freed slave of 'Abdur Rahmān bin Zayd bin Khattāb رضي الله عنه.¹⁸⁴

His narrations number fewer than those of Suddī Kabīr. In order to distinguish him from Suddī kabīr he is called as Suddī as-Saghīr. He also belonged to Kūfah (Iraq) and is unanimously considered as "weak". He was the student of renowned historian Kalbī (whose life we will see shortly). Imām Bukhārī has stated that his narrations should never be quoted. Imām Ibn Mu'īn said, "He is not reliable." Imām Aḥmad says, "I met him when he was too old, hence I left him." Zahabī said, "Traditionists have blamed him as a liar."¹⁸⁵ At another place he wrote, "He is an extremely exaggerating narrator."¹⁸⁶ Imām Nasa'ī states, "He is rejected for narration,"¹⁸⁷ Abu 'Ali Ṣāliḥ bin Muḥammad said, "He was weak and also he invented Tradition."¹⁸⁸

Earlier, we have stated when dealing with the transcript with Ibn 'Abbās of Tanvīr-ul-Miqyās-fī-Tafsīr Ibn 'Abbās is reported by Suddī Saghīr and 'Allamah Suyūṭī has called its report as a "chain of falsehood", and hence it is not reliable.¹⁸⁹

MUQĀTIL

Again, there are two persons known by this name. One is Abu B.ṣṭam Muqātil bin Ḥaiyyān, and the other is 'Abul Ḥasan Muqātil bin Sulaymān. Both belonged to the same town Balkh, to the same time and both reported from the same kind of teachers. Hence sometimes a confusion arises between the two. Of these, the former (Muqātil bin Ḥaiyyān) is considered reliable because of his sound opinion, and is an eminent scholar, but his references in the books of exegesis are very few. If Books of exegesis refer only to Muqātil it means the other Muqātil bin Sulaymān because he is the one known as a commentator, and his sayings and opinions are mostly found in the books of exegesis. Hence, we will speak of him in some detail.

189: Al-Itqān, V2, p189.

Muqātil bin Sulaymān (died 150 AH) had written an exegesis, references which are made frequently in the books of exegesis. Some scholars have praised him but most of them have regarded him as unreliable. Among those who praise are Imām Shafa'ī who said, "People are dependant on Muqātil for exegesis". And Baqiyyah said, "Shu'bah was frequently asked about Muqātil. I always found him speaking good of Muqātil." And Muqātil bin Haiyyān used to call him the 'Ocean of knowledge.'

But leaving aside these few words of praise, most of the Traditionists have bitterly argued against and criticised him. The first objection is that he used to report unfounded narrations. Waki' says, "We intended to visit Muqātil, but he himself arrived in our town. We met him but found him to be a liar, hence we did not write anything from him." Imām Jauzjānī says about him, "He is an obstinate liar." Imām Ibn Mu'īn said, "He is not reliable." And, "He is nothing." 'Amr bin 'Ali (Fallās) said, "Rejected for narration and liar." Imām Ibn Sa'īd states, "The traditionists kept away from him and called him one rejected." 'Abdur Rahmān bin Hākam says, "He was a story-teller and people have given up his narrations." Abu Hātim and 'Ijlī called him as rejected for Hadith Imām Nasā'ī called him a liar and on another occasion he said, "Four persons are very well-known for inventing false traditions and attributing them to the Prophet ﷺ, and one of them is Muqātil." Imām Dārquṭnī writes, "He lies." Imām Hākim said, "He is not reliable in the eyes of scholars." 'Abduṣ Ṣamad bin 'Abdul Wārith has written, "Muqātil came to us and narrated some traditions claimed to be derived from 'Aṭā' then he narrated the same through Dahhāk, and then through

'Amr bin Shu'ayb. We asked him from whom he had heard those traditions? He said that he heard them from all of them, but soon he said that he did not remember from whom he heard them¹⁹⁰. Imām Bukhārī has written, "He is nothing at all".¹⁹¹ 'Abdullah bin Mubārak praised his devotion but did not accept his narrations.¹⁹²

The other objection against him is that he belonged to the Mujassimah sect (that is, they used to liken the attributes of Allah to those of His creations, and also believed Him having bodily organs etc). 'Abbās bin Muṣ'ab Marḥūzī says, "Muqātil bin Sulayman was originally from Balkh, then he came to Maru, and here he started story-telling in the grand mosque of the town. It was here that debates took place between him and Jahm bin Ṣafwān (the founder of Jahmia sect). Hence they wrote books against each other." And Imām Abu Ḥanīfah says, "Two foul views have penetrated among us from Eastern side, one is the view of Jahm who was among the Mu'aṭṭalah,¹⁹³ and the other was Muqātil's view which was based on allegories. Jahm exaggerated in negating the attributes of Allah until he made Him non-existent. And Muqātil exaggerated in positiveness of attributes so he made Him similar to His creation."¹⁹⁴

Ḥafīẓ Shamsuddin Zahbī has categorised him among the weak narrators and stated Muqātil bin Sulayman Balkhī is in a very poor condition. Waki' and Nasā'ī also call him a liar.¹⁹⁵

Ibn Hajar has concluded that:

190: Tahzīb ut Tahzīb, v10, pp282-285.

191: at-Tarīkh al-kabīr, v4, p14 (part 2) refer 1976.

192: Miftāh us-Sa'ādah, Kübra Zadah, v1, p404.

194: Tahzīb al Tahzīb, refer as above.

195: Al-Mughni fi Ad-ḍu'afā, Zahabī, v2, p675.

كذبوه وهجروه ورمى بالتجسم

the scholars have called him a liar and gave up his narrations and he is also blamed for belonging to Mujassimah sect.¹⁹⁶

Despite such harsh criticism and arguments against him, his sayings are too frequently mentioned in the books of exegesis. The reason is that although he was not reliable in reporting the traditions yet he was a well-informed person, and because his greatest pre-occupation in life was exegesis and he had gathered information from different methods, some useful things are found in his exegesis. That is why the commentators have spoken of his knowledge also, so if the researchers find something useful they may accept it otherwise reject it. Opinions of some scholars in this connection are as under:

He had some books which he used to read but I think he had some knowledge of the Qurān....
Imām Aḥmad.¹⁹⁷

انما جمع مقاتل تفسير الناس وفسر عليه من غير سماع

Muqātil had collected the exegesis of different people and made his exegesis accordingly but he did not hear them directly from anyone Ibrāhīm Nakh'ī.

196: Taqrīb ut Tahzīb, v2, p272, refe 134.

197: Tarīkh Baghdād, Khaṭīb, V13 p161. He has related an incident. A fly pestered Khalifah Mansūr again and again always resting on his face, so he was very uneasy. At that moment Muqātil arrived and the Khalifah asked him if he knew why Allah had created the fly. Muqātil said, "That He may debase tyrants through it." The Khalīfah bore the taunt silently. (V13 p161)

كان حافظاً للتفسير لا يضبط الاسناد

He remembered the exegesis but did not know the source..... 'Abbās bin Muṣ'ab Marḡẓī

- ☆ I saw a book of Muqātil with Sufyān bin 'Uyaynah and asked him, "Do you quote Muqātil's narrations in exegesis?" He said, "No but I take help from them." Na'im bin Hammād.
- ☆ There is wonderful information in it, only if its narrations were through authentic sources... 'Abdullah bin Mubārak,
- ☆ If the things he describes could be called knowledge, he would be a greater scholar-Hammād bin 'Amr.
- ☆ He used to learn from Jews and Christians from their Books, Imām Ibn Ḥibbān.
- ☆ He has a high status among the commentators and he had vast knowledge, but Traditionists have called him weak in narrating the Traditions...Khalīlī.¹⁹⁸

Hence, generally his exegesis should not be relied upon. However, from the standpoint of language and literature, history and stories, references of the previous Books, some general useful information is found in it and the research scholars may benefit from it. That is why commentators in general did not feel shy to refer to them.

RABĪ' BIN ANAS

His name is Rabī' bin Anas Al-Bakrī Al-Ḥanafī. He originally belonged to Baṣrah but afterwards migrated to Khurāsān. Hence he is called Baṣrī and also Khurāsānī. He has quoted narrations from Sayyidina Anas, Abul 'Āliā and Ḥasan Baṣrī. Imām 'Ijlī, Abu Ḥātim and Nisa'ī, have used 198: Tahzīb ut Tahzīb, v10, pp280-284. Mīzān ul-I'tidal, v4, p173. The report from Tahzīb ut Tahzīb are traced to sunnah in Tārīkh Baghdad, Khaṭīb, pp160-169.

the word "ليس به بأس" "صدوق" ¹⁹⁹ which is minor grade of affirmation. However, Yahyā bin Mu'īn says, كان يتشيع ويفرط "He was a Shi'a and committed excess". Imām Ibn Hibbān has counted him among the "reliables" but at the same time he has said "there was a great deal of inconsistency in his narrations cited by Ibn Abī Ja'far Rāzi." ²⁰⁰ Ibn Hajar has summarised in these words, "صدوق له اوهام رمى بالتشيع" "He is truthful, but we get doubts in his reports of Traditions and he is also alleged to be a Shi'a." ²⁰¹

‘ATĪYYAH AL-‘AUFĪ

His full name is Abul Hasan ‘Atiyyah bin Sa’d bin Junādah al-‘Aufī al-Jadlī (died 111AH). He belonged to Kūfah (Iraq) and was among the Tabi‘īn (followers of Companions). He had reported narrations from Abu Sa‘īd Khudrī, Abu Hurayrah, Ibn ‘Abbās, Ibn ‘Umar and Zayd bin ‘Arqam رضي الله عنه. Imām Nisā’ī has called him weak. ²⁰² Imām Aḥmad, Yahyā bin Sa‘īd al-Qaṭṭān, Hushaym, Abu Ḥātim, Ibn ‘Adī, Jauzjānī, Ibn Hibbān, Abu Dāwūd and Sājī have also considered him as weak. Only Ibn Sa‘d has said about him.

له احاديث صالحة ومن الناس من لا يحتج به

"He reports correct traditions but some people do not authenticate them".

Imām Abu Zur‘ah has called him, "لَيْن" Which is a minor grade of affirmation. Yahyā bin Mu'īn has called him, "صالح" Righteous which is also a minor affirmation.

199: Tahzīb ut Tahzīb, v3, p239. and al-Jarah ut Ta’dīl, Ibn Abi Hātim, v1, p454. (part 2) Refe 2054. Daccan.

200: Tahzīb ut Tahzīb, v3, p239.

202: Kitāb ud Du‘fā wal Matrūkīn Nasa’ī, Tārīkh us Saghīr, Bukhārī, p401.

There are four kinds of objections against him. Firstly, he has exaggerated when recounting the line of transmission. Imām Aḥmad and Ibn Ḥibbān have explained it thus: "He used to go to Kalbī and ask him about exegesis and quoted him but because Kalbī is regarded weak and defamed, so he gave Kalbī the Kunyah of Abu Sa'īd, and whatever he heard from Kalbī he reported in the name of Abu Sa'īd. Since 'Aṭīyyah Aufī had heard some Traditions from Abu Sa'īd Khudrī, the unknowing people attributed Kalbī's narrations also to Khudrī."²⁰³

The second objection is that he was a Shi'a, and the third is that he used to make errors in reporting the narrations. The fourth objection is that he was a Mudallis (one who withholds the name of his Shaikh) Ibn Hajar said,

صديق يخطئ كثيراً، كان شيعياً مدلساً

"He was truthful but was very erratic. He was a Shi'a and Mudallis."²⁰⁴

Hāfiẓ Shamsuddin Zahabī has counted him among the weak and said about him,

تابعي مشهور مجمع على ضعفه

He is a renowned Tabi'ī and there is consensus that he is weak.²⁰⁵

However, Imām Tirmizī has considered some of his narrations as 'Ḥasan'²⁰⁶ but in Tirmizī's phraseology 'Ḥasan' is every such Tradition whose line of transmission does not contain any narrator accused of lying, and it is reported by more than one method.²⁰⁷

203: Tahzīb ut Tahzīb, p225-226.

204: Taqrīb ut Tahzīb, v2, p24.

205: Al-Mughni fi Ad-du'afa, v2, p436, Refe 4139.

206: Al-Itqān, v2, p189.

207: Kitāb-ul-ʿIlal Tirmizī.

Hence, even with Tirmizī's complement the objection made on 'Aṭīyyah 'Aufī are not condoned and his weakness as a Traditionist persists.

'ABDUR RAḤMĀN BIN ZAYD BIN ASLAM'

His full name is 'Abdur Raḥmān bin Zayd bin Aslam al-'Adavī al-Madanī (died 182 AH). He was the son of Zayd bin Aslam whose account we have gone through the preceding pages. Most of the Traditionists have considered him weak. Only Imām bin 'Adī has said, له احاديث حسان، وهو ممن احتمله الناس وصدقه بعضهم وهو

ممن يكتب حديثه

He has reported ḥasan Aḥādith and he is among those narrators who have been tolerated. And some have affirmed them, and the Traditions from him can be cited. All other critics have taken him as weak, as enumerated below:

ضعفه علي جدا

(Ali ibn Madini has called him very weak).²⁰⁸

Imām Nasa'ī: weak.²⁰⁹ Imām Aḥmad and Imām Abu Zayd: weak. Imām Abū Dawūd: all sons of Zayd ibn Aslam are weak. Imām Abu Ḥatīm: personally, righteous, but in Ḥadith, very weak. Imām Ibn Khuzaymah said:

ليس هو ممن يحتج اهل العلم بحديثه لسوء حفظه، وهو رجل
صناعته العبادة والتقشف -

He is not one of those, persons whose narration the scholars may cite because his memory was weak.

208: At Tārīkh al-Kabir, Bukhārī, v3, p284.

209: Kitāb-ul-Du'afā wal Matrūkīn, Tārīkh as-Saghir, p296.

His real merit was devotion and piety.

Imām Ibn Hibbān says:

كان يقلب الاخبار وهو لا يعلم حتى كثر ذلك فى روايته من رفع
المراسيل و باسناد الموقوف فاستحق الترك

He used to alter the narrations unintentionally so much so that there are many examples where he has made Mursals into Marfu' and Mauquf into Musnad, hence he should be forsaken.

Imām Ṭaḥāwī states:

حديثه عند اهل العلم بالحديث فى النهاية من الضعف

In the eyes of Traditionists his narrations are very weak.

In addition, severe criticism is reported about him from Imām Mālik, Imām Ibn Mu'īn, Darawardī, Ma'an, Imām Ibn Sa'd, Sājī, Ḥākim, Abu Nu'aym and Jauzjānī. Ibn Joṣī has written,

اجمعوا على ضعفه

There is consensus that he is weak.²¹⁰

Ibn Ḥajar's conclusion about him is that he was 'weak'.²¹¹

KALBĪ

His full name is Abu Naḍar Muḥammad bin Sā'ib bin Bāshr bin 'Amr bin 'Abdul Ḥārith bin Abdul'Uzzā al-Kalibī (died 146 AH). He was related to the tribe of Banu Kalb and was from Kūfah. He was well-known as 210: Tahzīb ut Tahzīb v6 pp177-179. Mizān ul I'tidāl, v2, p564.

211: Tahzīb ut Tahzīb v1 p480.

a historian and in geneology and exegesis. There is a consensus of scholars that he was weak and unreliable. Only Ibn 'Adī has said about him, "All his narrations are correct except those pointed out by me, particularly those reported by Abu-Ṣāliḥ. He is famous for exegesis and nobody else has written a longer commentary. And some reliable persons have quoted his narrations and endured his exegesis. However, his Traditions are Munkar, rejected." All other scholars have censured him severely.

The most serious allegation against him is that of reporting false Traditions. Mu'tamar bin Sulaymān has quoted his father as saying, "There were two liars in Kūfah. One of them was Kalbī." In exegesis, most of his reports are borrowed from Abu Ṣāliḥ but Abu Janāb Kalbī has stated that Abu Ṣāliḥ has stated on oath that he never spoke anything of exegesis to Kalbī. Sufyān Thaurī states, "Once Kalbī himself admitted that the narrations of Ibn 'Abbās which he reported from Abu Ṣāliḥ were all lies and should not be quoted. Some traditions have been narrated by Sufyān Thaurī on the authority of Kalbī. From this some people got the impression that Kalbī must be authentic because a Traditionist of the status of Sufyān had cited him. But this has been clarified by Abu Ḥatim in these words, "Sufyān Thaurī never meant to cite the narration of Kalbī, but he sometimes narrated Kalbī's versions in his assembly in expression of surprise. On this some of his listeners reported them from Sufyān Thaurī.²¹² Qurrah bin Khālīd has said, "People generally believed that Kalbī was a liar."

212: All these narrations are quoted from Tahzīb at Tahzīb. However, Zahabī reported from Sufyan Thaurī that he once said to the people "Beware of Kalbī." They said, "But you quote him." He said, "I can distinguish his truth from falsehood."

The other objection is that he was an extremist Shi'a. Abu Juz says, "I have heard him saying that Jibrīl عليه السلام once came with Wahy for the Prophet ﷺ who had come out for some work and Sayyidina 'Alī عليه السلام was sitting there so Jibrīl revealed that Wahy to 'Alī." When this saying of Abu Juz was repeated before the great Traditionist Yazīd bin Zarī' he said, "I did not hear this from Kalbī but I have seen myself that he was beating his chest and saying 'I am a Saba'ī, I am a Saba'ī.'" The same has been reported by Hāfiz Zahabī from Hummām. And Ibn Hibbān said, "Kalbī was a Saba'ī. He was one of those who used to say Sayyidina 'Alī عليه السلام has not died, he will come again in this world and he will fill it with justice and fairplay when it will be full of tyranny and injustice. These are the people who say Amīr-ul-Mu'minīn (Ālī) is in it," when they see a cloud.

In short, Kalbī is the weakest commentator of the earlier era. Imām Aḥmad was asked, "Is it proper to study the exegesis of Kalbī?" His reply was "No". After a long account of Kalbī, Hāfiz Zahabī has written, لا يحل ذكره في الكتب فكيف الا حتاج به؟ "Even his mention in the books is not proper, how then would it be correct to cite him."

In the end, one of his witticisms is being presented just for a diversion. Kalbī himself used to say, "I have exhibited the excellence of my memory as nobody could have done, and also that of my forgetfulness as nobody could have done. The example of my memory is that I had memorised the whole Qurān in six or seven days. And the case of forgetfulness is that one day I held my beard in my fist to trim it below the fist but through foregetfulness I cut it off from above the fist."

Many other names are found in the books of exegesis, but those mentioned in this chapter are the ones who are referred to frequently. And it will not be wrong to say that the basic source of later exegesis are these commentators, and most of the exegesis revolve round the narrations and reports of these people. Hence, by knowing about these people great insight will be obtained in the study of all such exegesis where the method of exegesis by narrations is adopted, namely, Tafsīr Ibn Jarīr, Tafsīr-ad-Durrul-Manthūr, and Tafsīr Ibn Kathīr etc, or those Tafsīr in which the sayings of ancient commentators have been reported without proper citation, for instance, Rūḥul Maʿānī Tafsīr Qurṭabī and others.

SOME EXEGESIS OF LATER TIMES

As has been stated in the beginning of this chapter, we have confined ourselves to the introduction of some of those commentators of the first era on whose narrations and sayings are based the entire science of exegesis. Whatever exegesis were written in the later periods and in whichever style the scholars of Islam rendered their services to the Qurān, is a lengthy subject that calls for writing a separate book. Nobody can claim to have fulfilled the due right of exegesis of the Qurān, but it is also an undeniable fact that the lovers of Islam have worked hard and with love and devotion in service of this great Book. Hence it can be claimed without any fear of contradiction that neither have so many exegeses of any book been written, nor so many translations made, and as much service rendered to it from different aspects although no universal organization was present at anytime for this purpose.

Anyhow, today it has become very easy to obtain benefit from the Qurān in the light of these services. Whoever wants to know the exegesis of any verse of the Qurān, libraries are available to him. If an introduction is made only of those exegesis that are available today a complete compilation will be needed even for that. But here I will present a brief description even for that. But here I will present a brief description of only some exegesis to which I am deeply indebted, and which appear to me to be a summary of exegetic knowledge of our predecessors. And whenever I felt any problem in the exegesis of a verse I have first turned towards them. My humble opinion about them is that for people like us who cannot make a regular study of voluminous exegesis, these books make up the want of other books.

1: TAFSĪR IBN-KATHĪR

On top of the list of these books is Tafsīr Ibn Kathīr. This is the work of Ḥāfiẓ 'Imāduddīn Abul Fida' Isma'īl bin Al-Khaṭīb Abi Ḥafṣ Umar bin Kathīr Ash-Shafa'ī (died 747 AH) and comprises four volumes. This book may be regarded as a summary of Tafsīr Ibn Jarīr. The method adopted by Ibn-Kathīr is Exegesis by narrations, that is, under every verse he has first described a summary of its exegesis, then he mentions whatever narrations and reports are available from the Prophet ﷺ, or the Companions or their followers to explain its various words or sentences. But the earlier commentators viz. Ibn Jarīr, Ibn Mardawayh and Ibn Mājah etc who had followed this method only undertook the compiling of those narrations but they did not scrutinize them. Since Ibn Kathīr was also an eminent Traditionist apart from being a commentator, and was well versed in the art of criticism and review, he has done away with those weak and Maw-ḍū' narrations which were being transmitted by earlier commentators and, he has warned about relying on weak narrations. For instance see v1, pp77, 213 v3, pp17 to 21 and 24 to 89, v4, pp508, 519 and 520 etc.

The books on Exegesis by Narrations are mostly full of Isra'īliyyats. Ibn Kathīr is extremely cautious in treating these citations and his approach is clean and based on the Qurān and Traditions. Its detail has already been given under the heading Isra'īliyyāts in his own words. Hence, his first approach is that he has not cited many Isra'īli narrations, and, if he has done so, he has defined them as Isra'īli narrations. For instance, in Sūrah as Ṣaffāt he has quoted some reports which indicate that the sacrifice offered related to Sayyidina Ibrāhīm's  son Sayyidina Is'ḥāq , but he has immediately clarified "Allah knows better, but apparently all these narrations have been reported by Ka'b ul-Aḥbār.....in these reports all sorts of things, good and bad, were collected and this Ummah does not need a single word of all those things." (v4, p17)

Anyhow, from the narrative point of view Tafsīr Ibn Kathīr is the most cautious and reliable exegesis. But this does not mean that every narration quoted in this exegesis is correct. At some places Ibn Kathīr has also quoted weak reports without indicating their weakness. For example, while explaining the verse of sūrah at-Tawbah, he has quoted a report from Tha'labah which according to Traditionists is weak. (v2, p374.)

Apart from this, he has also cited many sayings of 'weak' commentators, namely Muqātil, Kalbī and 'Aṭiyyah 'Aufī etc. But generally he has quoted without comment only those sayings which are not against any Islamic tenet. Hence, they are not of an authentic nature but only a commentator's own statement.

2: TAFSĪR KABĪR

The second book is Tafsīr Kabīr of Imām Rāzi. Its real name is Mafātiḥ-ul-Gḥāyb but it is better known by the name of Tafsīr Kabīr. This is written by Imām Fakhruddīn Muḥammad Ibn Ziyāuddīn ‘Umar Ar-Rāzi (died 606 AH). Just as Tafsīr Ibn Kathīr is the most concise and matchless exegesis from a narrative point of view so also there is no parallel to Tafsīr Kabīr in relation to sciences of Reason. Some people have passed a funny remark on this exegesis فيه كل شيء الا التفسير (In it there is everything except exegesis),²¹³ But the fact is that this remark is cruelly unjust to this 'book because this book has no equal in interpretation of the meanings of the Qurān.

The prominent features of this book are:

- 1: The explanation, grammatical composition and background of revelation, and all the narrations related to them have been described by Imām Rāzi in an organised manner with clarity and detail. Thus, the number of sayings in explanation of a particular verse are reproduced together and easily observed. In other exegeses these discussions are generally scattered or disorganized, due to which it becomes time consuming. But in Tafsīr Kabīr they can be found at one place and very well organised.
- 2: He has described the grandeur and majesty of the Qurān in detail.
- 3: The legal injunctions relating to a verse have been described with detailed reasons.
- 4: Any interpolations introduced by the erring sects and intellectuals in the meaning of any verse has been described in full and then refuted with detailed arguments. In this way it contains in it strong refutation of all the erring sects of his time, namely, Jahmiyyah, Mu'tazilah, Mujassimah, Ibāḥiyyah etc.

213: Al-Itqān, v2, But, in my humble opinion if this comment applies to any Tafsīr, it describes Tafsīr al-Tawahir, Tanṭāwī.

- 5: A very specific feature of Tafsīr Kabīr to which very little attention has been paid is the description of the link between the verses of the Qurān. It is a fact that the reason for a link and affinity between the verses as described by him is so casual, appealing and reasonable that not only it imparts a sense of satisfaction but also an ecstatic feeling of elegance and grandeur of the Qurān.
- 6: Qurānic injunctions and their mysteries and expediences have been very beautifully highlighted.

In short, Tafsīr Kabīr is a very concise exegesis and my personal experience is that whenever I have found a difficulty, it has guided me to the right answer. Commonly people get upset by its lengthy discussions, (the exegesis of Sūrah Fātiḥah alone has covered 150 pages). It is in the earlier part that the explanation is lengthy but takes on fewer words as it progresses. Priceless gems of knowledge and understanding may be received from it.

However, certain things must be kept in mind in connection with this exegesis;

- 1: Imām Rāzi had written this exegesis upto Sūrah al-Fath when he died. Hence, after this Sūrah another scholar Qādi Shahābud-dīn bin Khalīl al Khaulī, al Damashqī (died 639 AH) or Shaikh Najm ud dīn Aḥmad bin Al-Qamūli (died 777 AH)²¹⁴ completed it. It is so marvelously done and the style of Imām Rāzi has been so thoroughly maintained that anyone not aware of this fact would never suspect that this was written by someone other than Imām Rāzi,

214: Kashf-uz-Zunūn, v2, p477.

- 2: The narrations of Tafsīr Kabīr, like other exegeses are a collection of good and bad together.
- 3: Occasionally Imām Rāzi has adopted a view different from that of other commentators. For instance, he has rejected the authentic tradition لم يكذب ابراهيم الا ثلث كذبات (Ibrāhīm did not tell a lie except on three occasions). Hence, where he has differed from the accepted view, the established view should be adopted.

3: TAFSĪR ABĪ AS-SA'UD

The full name of this exegesis is Irshād-ul-'Aql-is-Salīm Ilā Mazāya Al-Qurān al-Karīm. It is written by Qāḍi Abu Sa'ūd Muḥammad bin Muḥammad Al-'Imāḍi al-Ḥanafī (died 951 AH). It is indeed a masterpiece work, exhibiting his depth of knowledge, insight and understanding of Qurān. It has five volumes and is a magnificent exegesis of the Qurān in a concise manner. The most prominent feature of this exegesis is that one finds some highly refined and subtle points about the Qurān, relation of its verse and its eloquence. It allows for an easy understanding of the Qurān and the excellence of its miraculous style can also be easily recognized.

4: TAFSĪR AI-QURTUBĪ

Its full name is Al-Jāmi' li-Aḥkām-ul-Qurān. It is written by the famous research scholar of Andulus Spain, 'Allāmah Abū 'Abdullah Muḥammad bin Aḥmad bin Abī Bakr bin Farah al-Qurtubī (died 671 AH). He was a follower of Imām Mālik's school of thought in Islamic Jurisprudence. The basic purpose of this book was to deduce juristic injunctions and rulings from the Qurānic verses but in this connection he has very aptly commented on the meanings of verses, scrutiny of difficult words, composition and rhetoric and relevant narrations in the exegesis. Particularly the instructions obtainable from the Qurān for everyday life have been clearly explained. The preface of this book is also detailed and comprises important discussions on the sciences of the Qurān. It has twelve volumes and has been published repeatedly.

5: RŪH-UL-MA'ĀNĪ

Its full name is Rūh-ul-Ma'ānī fī Tafsīr-il-Qurān-il-'Aẓīm wa Sab'ul Mathānī and this is written by the renowned scholar of Baghdad 'Allāmah Muḥammad Ālūsī Hanafi رحمه الله عليه (died 1270 AH) and consists of 30 volumes. Since this is the publication of latest era, he has tried to gather important discussions of previous exegeses. Hence elaborate discussions have been carried out on language, grammar, literature, rhetoric, jurisprudence, beliefs, etymology, geophysics, astronomy, philosophy, spiritualism and relevant narrations. An attempt has been made that no scientific and literary problem should remain unanswered. In the matter of reporting of Traditions also 'Allāmah Ālūsī had been more careful than other commentators. In this respect it may be called synopsis of the earlier exegeses, and no work on exegesis of Qurān can do without help from this work.

The above five exegeses, according to my humble opinion are such that if anyone confines himself to them, he will not have to look out for other exegesis. This was my personal view, but later on I found support for it in an article written by the respected and venerable scholar Mawlana Sayyed Muhammad Yūsuf Banorī. In his precious article Yatīmat-ul-Bayān he writes:

"Since life is short, difficulties excessive, and courage of our time is low and resolves weakened... hence I wish to point out to my student brothers four such exegesis as would be sufficient for them if they just confine themselves to these.

One is, Tafsīr Ibn kathīr about which our teacher ('Allāmah Anwar Shah Kashmīrī) used to say, 'if any book can make one independent of another book, it is Tafsīr Ibn kathīr which removes the need for Tafsīr Ibn Jarīr.' The second is Tafsīr Kabīr of Imam Rāzi about which our reverend teacher used to say, 'Of all the difficult things in the Qurān I did not find any difficulty which Imām Rāzi had not dealt with. It is another matter that sometimes he could not present a solution to the difficulties as could satisfy the soul.' And the saying that it has everything but Tafsīr is meant only to lower its exalted status, and is perhaps uttered by a person who was overwhelmed by narrations and paid no attention to the depth of knowledge of the Qurān. The third is Tafsīr Rūḥ ul Ma'ānī which in my opinion is an exegesis for the Qurān on the pattern of Fatḥ-ul-Bārī, the exegesis of Ṣaḥīḥ Bukhārī, except that Fatḥ-ul-Bārī is the interpretation of human words. It has paid the debt of the exegesis of Ṣaḥīḥ Bukhārī on the Ummah. But the words of Allāh are much higher and more exalted for any human being to give its due right. The Fourth is Tafsīr Abi as-Sa'ūd in which special attention has been paid to describe the Qurānic order in a remarkable style and very often it replaces Zamakhshari's Kashāf.²¹⁵

In this article, except for Tafsīr Qurṭubī, all the other four books have been recommended on the same lines as I had conceived. I thank Almighty Allah for the similarity of my views with the reverend Anwar Shāh Kashmīrī and his favourite student Mawlānā Binori.

This discussion pertained to exegeses in Arabic language. In Urdu language Maulānā Ashraf 'Alī Thānavī's رحمة الله عليه Bayān-ul-Qurān is unique exegesis in respect to its subjects; and its greatness can be felt only when one turns towards it after passing through the voluminous books on exegesis. However, since its language is high flown and technical, general Urdu readers felt difficulty in understanding it. In view of this my esteemed father Maulānā Mufti Muḥammad Shaf'ī رحمة الله عليه has written a detailed exegesis in 8 volumes by the name of Ma'ārif-ul-Qurān which also contains a simplified and summerised version of Bayān-ul-Qurān. It contains an excellent interpretation of the Quranic injunctions pertaining to present day requirements of life as well as a complete review of the problems of modern civilisation. Of all the books of exegesis that have come out so far in Urdu language this is a unique exegesis in which alongwith a complete presentation of the ways and ideas of the ancient dignitaries in exegesis, the needs of present time have also been fulfilled in the best possible manner. By the Grace of Allah this exegesis is gaining immense popularity and tremendous benefits are being obtained by its readers.

In the end I pray that Almighty Allah may give us the ability to recognize the elegance and grandeur of the Noble Qurān, bestow on us the wealth of its true understanding, and give us the capacity to pay the due rights through recital, practise on its injunctions and its propagation and publicity.

اللَّهُمَّ اِنْسُ وَحُشْتِي فِي قَبْرِى اللَّهُمَّ ارْحَمْنِى بِالْقُرْآنِ الْعَظِيمِ
وَاَجْعَلْهُ لِىْ اِمَامًا مَّوْنُوْرًا وَهُدًى وَرَحْمَةً، اللَّهُمَّ عَلِّمْنِى مِنْهُ مَا

مُحَمَّدٍ وَعَلٰى اٰلِهِ وَاَصْحَابِهِ وَاَزْوَاجِهِ وَاتَّبَاعِهِ اٰجْمَعِيْنَ

O Allah, protect me from the fear of my grave.
O Allah, have mercy on me through the Great Qurān, and let it be for me a leader, a light, a guide and a mercy. O Allah, teach me of it what I know not, and remind me what I have forgotten of it, and cause me to recite it by day and by night. And, let it be a pleader for me, O Lord of the worlds.

Praise belongs to Allah, from the first to the last. And may blessings of Allah be on Sayyidina Muḥammad and his family, his companions, his wives and his followers, all of them.

Uloom ul-Quran

An Approach to

The Quranic Sciences

by Justice Mufti Muhammad Taqi Usmani

The Uloom ul-Qur'an is a great scholarly work in Urdu by the renowned scholar Maulana Justice Muhammad Taqi Usmani.

It has the stamp of authority of Maulana Mufti Muhammad Shafi رحمه الله عليه and Maulana Muhammad Yusuf Binnori رحمه الله عليه.

The work covers all aspects of the Qur'an, from wahy (revelation) to tajweed (its recital) and various readings. It speaks on the background of revelation, nature of revelation, method of preservation, kinds of exegesis, criticism of orientalists, history and subjects of the Qur'an.

The Urdu original is indeed a colossal treatise on the Qur'an, leaving out nothing related to the Holy Book.

Dar ul-Isha'at commissioned for the English translation in Dr. Muhammad Swaleh Siddiqui. Before publication, the entire work was given a second look and is now offered to our readers.

The translation also features an index of Proper Names and of general entries.

Qasas ul-Anbiya

Stories of the Prophets

by Ibn Kathir

Dar ul-Isha'at has presented yet another English translation. This time it is the Qasas ul-Anbiya of Ibn Kathir رحمه الله عليه.

The book is primarily lives of the Prophets based on material from the Qur'an and Ahadith. It is drawn from al-Bidayah wan Nihayah.

It is written in simple, everyday language.

While the Arabic original concludes with the life of Sayyidina Isa, عليه السلام in the English translation we have included an account of the life of Prophet Muhammad ﷺ material for which is drawn from Qasas ul-Qur'an.

The features include two indices an index of Proper Names and of general entries.

There are many authoritative books on the sciences of the Quran in Arabic composed by our worthy, noted predecessors. However, only the Scholars derive benefit from those books. The common man had no source to draw on.

When Sir Syed Ahmad Khan published his Tafseer he challenged prevalent beliefs, commented on established issues like prophethood and rejected the reality of miracles, Paradise and Hell, angels and the devil. Maulana Abdul Haq Haqqani Dehlvi gave him a befitting reply and composed al-Bayan fi Uloom il Quran and Fath al-Maman explaining the subject very well. However, the need for a work of the same magnitude from a fresh approach to cater to the present generation was satisfied by Maulana Muhammad Taqi Usmani with his Uloom ul Quran which is indeed a peerless work in Urdu. The same is now offered to the reader in English language. The book is an insight into the facts of the Quran, nature of revelation, sequence of revelations different readings, the miracles of the Quran and so on.

They have been explained in everyday language and they remove all doubts and misgivings. The criticism of the orientalisists are answered with authoritative references.

AL-FĀTIHAH

(The Opening)

This Sūrah is Makkan, and comprises of seven verses

The Merits and Peculiarities of the Sūrah

This Sūrah (Chapter) of the Holy Qur'ān possesses a number of merits peculiar to it. Firstly, the Holy Qur'ān begins with it; the prescribed prayer begins with it; and even in the order of revelation this is the first Surah which was revealed to the Holy Prophet ﷺ in its complete form. Some verses of the Sūrahs Iqra' (al-'Alaq), al-Muzzammil and al-Muddaththir had no doubt been revealed earlier, but the first Sūrah to be revealed in a complete form is no other than this. Certain Companions of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم have reported that this was the first Sūrah to be revealed. Most probably they had meant that no Sūrah had been revealed in a complete form before this. Perhaps that is why the Sūrah has been named as 'Fātihatul-Kitāb' (The Opening of the Book).

The other important peculiarity of the Sūrah is that it is, so to say, the quintessence of the Holy Qur'ān, and the rest of the Qur'ān is its elaboration. The Sūrah may thus be delineated for two reasons. Firstly, all that the Holy Qur'ān has to say is, in one way or another, related to either of the two themes, faith (Īmān) and virtuous deeds (al-'amal al-salih), and the basic principles of the two have been indicated in this Sūrah (See Rūḥ al-Ma'ānī and Rūḥ al-Bayān). That is why authentic Traditions (Aḥādīth) give to this Sūrah such titles as "Umm al-Qur'ān" (Essence of the Qur'ān), "Umm al-Kitāb" (Essence of the Book), "Al-Qur'ān al-'Azīm" (Glorious Qur'ān).

Secondly, this Sūrah gives a special instruction to the man who begins the recitation or the study of the Qur'ān – that he should approach this book with a mind cleansed of all his previous thoughts and opinions, seeking nothing but the Truth and the right path, praying to Allah for being guided in the right path. The Sūrah begins with the praise of Him before whom the request is to be submitted, and ends with the request for guidance. The whole of the Qur'ān is the answer to this request. The answer begins with the words: "Alif Lām Mīm. This is the Book", which is an indication that the guidance man had prayed for has been provided in this Book.

The Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم has said, "I swear by Allah who is the master of my life, neither the Torah, nor the Evangile nor the Psalms of David have anything to compare with the Opening Chapter of the Qur'ān, and no other Chapter of the Qur'ān itself can compare with it." (Reported by the Companion Abū Hurairah رضى الله عنه).

The Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم has also said that this Sūrah is a cure for all kinds of illnesses. According to another Tradition (Ḥadīth), the Sūrah has also been named the "Cure" (Al-Shifā), (See Qurtūbī), and al-Bukhārī reports from the Companion Anas that the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم has called this Sūrah the greatest among all the Sūrahs of the Holy Qur'ān. (See Qurtūbī)

﴿بِسْمِ اللَّهِ الرَّحْمَنِ الرَّحِيمِ﴾

(I begin) with the name of Allah, the All-Merciful, the Very-Merciful.

Bismillāh* is a verse of the Holy Qur'ān

There is consensus of all the Muslims on the fact that Bismillāh al-Raḥmān al-Raḥīm is a verse of the Holy Qur'ān, being a part of the Sūrah al-Naml (The Ant); and there is also an agreement on that this verse is written at the head of every Sūrah except the Sūrah al-Taubah. But there is a difference of opinion among the Mujtahids (the authentic scholars who are entitled to express an opinion in such matters) as to whether this verse is an integral part of the Sūrah al-Fatihah or of all the Sūrahs or not. According to the great Imām Abū Ḥanīfah, it is not an integral part of any Sūrah except al-Naml, rather it is in itself an independent verse of the Holy Qur'ān which has been revealed for being placed at the beginning of every Surah in order to separate and distinguish one Sūrah from another.

The merits of Bismillāh

It was a custom in the Age of Ignorance (Jāhiliyyah) before the advent of Islam that people began everything they did with the names of their idols or gods. It was to eradicate this practice that the first verse of the Holy Qur'ān which the Archangel Jibrā'īl brought down to the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم commanded him to begin the Qur'ān with the name of Allah اقْرَأْ بِاسْمِ رَبِّكَ: "Read with the name of your Lord."

The famous commentator al-Suyuti says that beside the Holy Qur'ān all the other divine books too begin with Bismillāh. Certain other scholars are of the opinion that Bismillāh Al-Raḥmān Al-Raḥīm is peculiar to the Qur'ān and to the followers of Muḥammad ﷺ. The two views can be brought into agreement with each other if we say that all the divine books share the common trait of beginning with the name of Allah, but the words Bismillāh Al-Raḥmān Al-Raḥīm are peculiar to the Holy Qur'ān, as is evident from certain Traditions (Aḥādīth) which report that in order to begin with the name of Allah anything he undertook, the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم used to say the words بِسْمِكَ اللَّهُمَّ (Bismikā Allāhumma), but when the verse Bismillah Al-Raḥman Al-Raḥim was revealed, he adopted these words. Since then this practice was established through the verbal command of the Holy Prophet ﷺ or through his act or tacit approval). (See Qurṭubī and Rūh al-Ma'ānī)

The Holy Qur'ān again and again instructs us to begin what we do with the name of Allah. The Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم has said that no important work receives the blessings of Allah, unless it is begun with His name. According to yet another ḥadīth (Tradition), closing the door of one's house, putting out the lamp, covering a vessel, should all be done with the recitation of Bismillāh. The Holy Qur'ān and the aḥādīth (Traditions) repeatedly instruct us to recite this verse while taking food, drinking water, performing the wudū (ablution), getting on a carriage or getting down from it. (See Qurṭubī)

By instructing man to begin everything with the name of Allah, Islam has given to the whole of his life an orientation towards Allah so that he may, with each step he takes, renew his allegiance to the covenant with Allah that nothing he does, not even his very being can come into existence without the will and the help of Allah. Thus, all the economic and worldly activities of man, each movement and gesture becomes transformed into an act of worship.¹ How brief is the action, which consumes neither time nor energy, and yet how immense is the gain -- it is a regular alchemy, transmuting the profane (dunyā) into the sacred (dīn); a disbeliever eats and drinks just as a Muslim does but in saying 'Bismillāh' as he begins to eat, the Muslim affirms that it was not in his power to obtain this little morsel of food which has passed through innumerable stages from the sowing of the seed to the reaping of the grain corn, and which has during this process required the labours of the wind, the rain, the sun, of the heavens and of the earth, and of a thousand men -- and that it is Allah alone who has granted him this morsel of food or this draught of water by making it go through all these stages. A disbeliever goes to sleep, wakes up and goes about as much as a Muslim. But while going to sleep or waking up, the Muslim mentions the name of Allah, renewing his relationship with Him. Thus his economic and worldly needs and activities acquire the nature of the remembrance of Allah, and are counted as acts of worship. Similarly, in saying 'Bismillāh' while getting on to a carriage, the Muslim testifies to the fact that it is beyond the power of man to produce this carriage and to procure it for him, and that it is only the infallible and divinely-created order of things that has brought together from all the corners of the world the wood, the steel and other metals which have gone into the making of the carriage, as well as the mechanics who have given a particular shape to these components, and the driver -- and finally put all these into the service of man who can make use of the labour of this army of the creatures of man who can God by spending a few coins. And even these coins have not been created by him, it is Allah himself who has provided the complex ways and means of earning them. Veritably, 'Bismillāh' is the legendary philosopher's stone which transmutes, not copper, but mere dust into the purest of gold. فَلِلّٰهِ الْحَمْدُ عَلَىٰ دِينِ الْاِسْلَامِ وَتَعْلِيْمَاتِهِ : 'So then, praised be Allah for the religion of Islam and its teachings.'

Ruling

'Before beginning to recite the Qur'ān, it is sunnah to first say اَعُوْذُ بِاللّٰهِ مِنَ الشَّيْطٰنِ الرَّجِيْمِ (I seek refuge with Allah from Satan -- the accursed) and then بِسْمِ اللّٰهِ الرَّحْمٰنِ الرَّحِيْمِ (I begin with the name of Allah, the All-Merciful, the Very-Merciful). And during the tilāwah (the recitation of the Holy Qur'ān) as well, saying بِسْمِ اللّٰهِ : 'Bismillah... at the beginning of each Sūrah, except the Sūrah Al-Bara'ah (al-Taūbah), is Sunnah.

Commentary

'Bismillāh': This phrase is composed of three words -- the letter 'Bā', 'Ism' and 'Allah'. The preposition 'Ba' has several connotations in Arabic, three of which are appropriate to the occasion. All the three are applicable here: (1) Contiguity, or the close proximity between one thing and the other; (2) Seeking the aid of someone or something; (3) To seek the blessings of someone.

The word 'Ism' has many lexical and intellectual nuances of meaning, the knowledge of which would not be essential for the average reader. It is sufficient to know that this word is translated in English as 'Name'.

The word, 'Allah' is the greatest and the most comprehensive of the divine names. According to some scholars, it is the 'Great Name', or 'Al-Ism al-Ā'zam'. (According to the Tradition (Ḥadīth), the Great Name carries with it such a benediction that a prayer is granted when this word has been uttered. Reports differ as to what this Great Name is). The word 'Allah' refers to the Essence, and hence this name cannot be given to anyone except Allah. That is why this word has neither a plural nor a dual, for Allah is One and has no associate. In short, Allah is the name of that Ultimate Reality which comprehends in Itself all the attributes of perfection, which is the creator and sustainer, unique and peerless.

Thus, the phrase 'Bismillāh' has these three respective significations according to the three connotations of the preposition 'Ba':

- (a) With the name of Allah
- (b) With the help of the name of Allah
- (c) With the barakah or benediction of the name of Allah.

But, in all the three forms, the phrase obviously remains incomplete unless one mentions the work which one intends to begin with the name of Allah or with its help or benediction. So, according to the rules of grammar, some verb is taken to be understood here which should be suitable for the occasion -- e.g., 'I begin or recite with the name of Allah.' Propriety demands that even this verb should be understood to occur after the phrase, so that one does actually begin with the name of Allah and the verb does not precede His name. The preposition 'Bā' has, however, to be placed before the name of Allah, for it is an exigency of the Arabic language. But even in this respect the 'Uthmāni manuscript of the Holy Qur'an prepared by the third Caliph 'Uthmān رضى الله عنه has made the necessary modification in accordance with the consensus of the Companions of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم. The regular Arabic script requires the letter 'Bā' here to be joined with the letter 'Alif', producing this shape -- بِاسْمِ اللَّهِ. But the 'Uthmani manuscript has dropped the 'Alif', and joined the letter 'Bā' with the letter 'Sīn', making the 'Bā' look like a part of the word 'Ism', so that the beginning is made, in effect, with the name of Allah. That is why the letter 'Alif' is not dropped in other combinations between the preposition 'Bā' and the noun 'Ism' -- for example, in the verse اقْرَأْ بِاسْمِ رَبِّكَ (Iqrā' biismi Rabbik), the 'Alif' is written along with the 'Bā'. It is the peculiarity of 'Bismillāh' alone that the letter 'Ba' has been joined with the letter 'Sin'.

Merciful) -- these two are the attributes of Allah Almighty. 'Raḥmān' signifies one whose mercy is common to all, and extends to the whole universe, to everything that will be created in the future. On the other hand, 'Raḥīm' signifies one whose mercy is perfect in all possible ways. That is why 'Raḥmān' is the exclusive attribute of Allah and the word is employed only when one is referring to Him. It is not permissible to qualify any created being as 'Raḥmān', for there cannot possibly be anyone else, beside Allah, whose mercy should be all-embracing and all-inclusive. Just like the word 'Allah', there is no dual or plural for the word 'Raḥmān' too, because these words are in their signification exclusive to the One and Absolute Being which does not permit the existence of a second or a third. (Tafsir al-Qurtubī) The signification of the word 'Raḥīm', on the contrary, does not contain anything which it should be impossible to find in a created being, for a man may be perfectly merciful in his dealings with another man. So, the word 'Raḥīm' may justifiably be employed in the case of a human being -- as the Qur'ān itself has used the word in speaking of the Holy Prophet ﷺ which is: بِالْمُؤْمِنِينَ رَؤُوفٌ رَحِيمٌ (He is gentle and very merciful towards the Muslims).

Ruling: This would easily show that those who shorten names such as 'Abd al-Raḥmān or Fadl al-Raḥman into 'Raḥmān' are doing what is not permissible and are thus committing a sin.

Out of the 'Beautiful Names' (الْأَسْمَاءُ الْحُسْنَى : Al-Asmā' al-Ḥusnā) of Allah Almighty and His attributes of perfection, only two have been mentioned in this verse - namely, 'al-Raḥmān' and 'al-Raḥīm' -, and both have been derived from the root 'Raḥmah' (mercy), indicating the all-pervasiveness and perfection of divine mercy. It points to the fact that the creation of the heavens and the earth and the sustenance of the whole universe has no other motivation than making manifest Allah's quality of mercy. He Himself had no need of these things, nor could anyone compel Him to create them. It is His own mercy which has required the creation and sustenance of the whole universal order.

How aptly this was put in Persian by poet Rūmī:

مانبودیم و تقاضا ما نبود
لطف تو ناگفته مامی شنود

There was nothing -- neither our being nor our claim to be;
It was Thy mercy that heard our unsaid.

Injunctions and related considerations

The Holy Qur'an says: فَإِذَا قَرَأْتَ الْقُرْآنَ فَاسْتَعِذْ بِاللَّهِ مِنَ الشَّيْطَانِ الرَّجِيمِ: 'When you recite the Qur'an, seek the protection of Allah against Satan, the rejected one'.

According to the consensus of Ummah, it is a Sunnah to say ta'awwudh: أَعُوذُ بِاللَّهِ مِنَ الشَّيْطَانِ الرَّجِيمِ 'before the recitation of the Holy Qur'an whether in Salāh or out of Salāh (Sharah al-munyah). Saying ta'awwudh is peculiar to the recitation of the Holy Qur'an. Therefore, with the exception of tilawah, all other chores should be taken up by first saying 'Bismillāh' only. Saying ta'awwudh is not a sunnah there. (Alamgiri, Chapter 4 - Al-Karahiyah)

One should begin the recitation of the Qur'an by reciting both أعوذ بالله (I seek the protection of Allah) and بِسْمِ اللَّهِ (Bismillāhi: I begin with the name of Allah). During the recitation, one should repeat 'Bismillāh', but not 'A'udhubillāh', when one comes to the end of a Sūrah (or Chapter) and begins the next Sūrah -- with the sole exception of the Sūrah 'Al-Bara'ah' (الْبَرَاءَةُ). If one comes upon this particular Sūrah in the course of the recitation, one should not say 'Bismillāh' before reading it. But if one happens to begin the recitation of the Holy Qur'an with this Sūrah, one should recite 'A'udhubillāh' and 'Bismillāh' both (Alamgiri from Al-Muḥīṭ).

'Bismillāh al-Rahmān al-Rahim' is a verse of the Holy Qur'an and a part of the verse in Sūrah 'al-Naml'; it is also a regular verse when it occurs between two Sūrahs. It must, therefore, be treated with as much respect as the Holy Qur'an itself, and it is not permissible to touch it without having performed wudu (ablution). In the state of major ritual impurity (e.g., after the emission of semen, or during menstruation, or after child-birth), it is not allowed to even read this verse as recitation of the Holy Qur'an before having taken a ritual bath. One may, however, recite it as a form of prayer before beginning a work, like taking one's meals or drinking water under all conditions.

Rulings:

(1) It is a Sunnah to recite 'Bismillāh' after 'A'udhū-billah' at the very beginning of the first raka'ah in the salāh. But views differ as to whether it should be recited in a loud or a low voice. Īmām Abū

Hanifah and certain other Imāms prefer it to be done in a low voice. There is a consensus on the point that 'Bismillāh' should be recited at the beginning of all the succeeding raka'ahs too. This is unanimously considered to be a Sunnah; however, in some narrations, the reciting of 'Bismillāh' at the beginning of every raka'ah has been identified as wajib or necessary.

(2) In the course of salāh, whether one is reciting the Holy Qur'ān loudly or silently, one should not recite 'Bismillāh' before beginning a Sūrah just after the Sūrah 'Fatihah'. Such a practice has not been reported either from the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم or from any of the first four Khulafā'. According to Sharh al-munyah, this is the view of Imām Abū Ḥanīfah and of Imām Abu Yusuf, and Shrah al-munyah, al-Durr al-Mukhtar, al-Burhan etc. prefer it to other views. But Imām Muḥammad considers it to be preferable that one should recite 'Bismillah' if one is reciting the Holy Qur'ān in a salāh offered silently. Certain reports attribute this view even to Imām Abū Ḥanīfah, and al-Shāmi has quoted some Muslim jurists in support of this view,-- which has been adopted even in 'Bahishti Zewar' of Maulanā Thānavi. Anyhow, there is a complete agreement among the scholars that it is not makrūh or reprehensible for some one to recite 'Bismillāh' in this situation.

With the name of Allah,
the All-Merciful, the Very-Merciful.

Praise belongs to Allah, the Lord of all the worlds, the All-Merciful, the Very-Merciful, the Master of the Day of Judgment. You alone we worship, and from You alone we seek help. Guide us in the straight path -- the path of those on whom You have bestowed Your Grace, not of those who have incurred Your wrath, nor of those who have gone astray.

This Sūrah comprises seven verses. Of these, the first three are in praise of Allah, while the last three contain a request or a prayer on the part of man, which Allah himself has, in His infinite mercy, taught him. The verse in between the two sets has both the features -- there is an aspect of praise, and another of prayer.

The Ṣaḥīḥ of Muslim reports from the blessed Companion Abū Hurayrah a ḥadīth (Tradition) of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم : "Allah has said, 'The salāh (i.e., the Sūrah Al-Fātiḥah) is equally divided between Me and My servant. And My servant shall be given what he prays for." The Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم continued: "When the servant says:

الْحَمْدُ لِلَّهِ رَبِّ الْعَالَمِينَ

Praise belongs to Allah, the Lord of all the worlds,

Allah says: "My servant has paid his homage to Me." When he says:

الرَّحْمَنُ الرَّحِيمُ

The All-Merciful, the Very-Merciful,

Allah says: "My servant has praised Me." When the servant says:

مَلِكِ يَوْمِ الدِّينِ

The Master of the Day of Judgment,

Allah says, "My servant has proclaimed my greatness." When the servant says:

إِيَّاكَ نَعْبُدُ وَإِيَّاكَ نَسْتَعِينُ

You alone we worship, and to You alone we pray for help,

Allah says, "This verse is common to Me and My servant. He shall be given what he has prayed for." When the servant says:

اهْدِنَا الصِّرَاطَ الْمُسْتَقِيمَ

Guide us in the straight path...,

Allah says: "All this is there for My servant. He shall be given what he prays for." (Mazhari)

The Sūrah begins with the words Al-hamdulillāh, signifying that all praise essentially belongs to Allah. Whosoever praises anything anywhere in the world is ultimately praising Allah. The sensible world contains millions of things which compel man's attention and admiration for their beauty and usefulness, but if one tries to look behind the veil of appearances, one would find in each and every thing the manifestation of the same creative power. Admiring anything that exists in the created world is no more than showing one's admiration for a work of art or craft, which in fact is a praise of the artist or the craftsman. This small statement of the Holy Qur'ān opens a new perspective for man lost in the labyrinth of multiplicity, and shows him how the many are knit together in the same unity, and how all praise in reality belongs to One whose power is absolute, and that it is only in our ignorance or indifference that we regard this praise to be due to anyone else.

If there is only one Being in the whole universe who inherently deserves all praise, it necessarily follows from it that this Being alone should be worthy of adoration and worship. Thus we can see that although the phrase, Al-hamdulillāh, has been used to signify praise, yet, by implication, it cuts the very root of polytheism or the worship of created beings, and at the same time brings out in a self-evident manner the first and the basic principle of the Islamic creed -- Oneness of God.

The next phrase to follow in the Sūrah speaks of an attribute of Allah -- Lord of the Worlds. Lexically, the word, Rabb signifies 'one who nurtures'. And 'nurture' implies developing a thing by gradual stages in a manner which is conducive to its own good till it attains perfection. The word, Rabb is exclusive to the sacred Being of Allah, and cannot be employed in the case of any created being without adding some qualification, for a created being is itself in need of 'nurture', and cannot nurture anyone else.

Al-'alāmin is the plural of 'alam (world, universe, kingdom). "The worlds" include all possible forms of -- existence: the sky, the earth, the sun, the moon, stars, wind and rain, the angels, the jinns, animals, plants, minerals, and, of course, men. So, 'the Lord of all the worlds' means that Allah alone gives nurture to all the forms of existents that are to be found in this universe, or in the millions of universes that may lie beyond our own universe in the outer space. Imām Rāzī, the great commentator of the Holy Qur'ān, says that the existence of an indefinite space beyond our universe can be proved on the basis of rational argument, and it is also certain that Allah is All-Powerful, so it should not be at all difficult for Him to have created millions of other universes in this endless space. It has been reported from the Companion Abū Sa'īd al-Khudrī رضي الله عنه that there are forty thousand worlds; our world, stretching from the East to the West, is only one of them, there being many more besides it. According to the well-known commentator Muqatil, the number of worlds is eighty thousand. (See Qurtubi)

As for the objection that no man or animal can live in the outer space owing to the lack of the kind of air which should be compatible with the physical make-up of man, Imām Rāzī replies that the inhabitants of the worlds in the outer space need not necessarily have the same physical make-up as that of the inhabitants of our world which should make existence in space impossible for them, and suggests that their organic composition and the requirements for its nourishment and sustenance might just be totally different.

Imām Rāzī postulated these possibilities some eight hundred years ago without the help of the modern facilities for observation and exploration, yet the speculations of the scientists in the age of space travel endorse his view.

Seen in the light of this short phrase, 'Lord of the worlds', the universe reveals itself to be an incredibly complex, yet perfectly integrated order. From the heavens to the earth, from the planets and the stars to the particles of dust, everything is bound in a chain of being, and is performing the function assigned to it by Divine Wisdom. Man cannot obtain a little morsel of food unless a thousand forces of the sky and the earth work together to produce it. The universal order is there for man to contemplate, and to realize that, if Allah has put millions of His creatures in the service of man, man in his turn cannot be worthless or purposeless or meaningless.² The Holy Qur'ān is indeed very explicit and very insistent in reminding us that the universe is not absurd:

وَمَا خَلَقْنَا السَّمَاءَ وَالْأَرْضَ وَمَا بَيْنَهُمَا بَاطِلًا ذَلِكَ ظَنُّ الَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا فَوَيْلٌ
لِّلَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا مِنَ النَّارِ

We have not created in vain the heavens and the earth and what lies between them. That is the fancy of the disbelievers. But woe to the disbelievers in the fire of Hell. (38:27)

2. As do proclaim the current Western philosophies of the Absurd and of Unreason.

If the universe is not in vain or absurd, man too, whose purposes the universe has been made to serve, cannot be purposeless and meaningless. The Holy Qur'ān defines the Divine purpose in creating man and the goal of his existence in these words.

وَمَا خَلَقْتُ الْجِنَّ وَالْإِنْسَ إِلَّا لِيَعْبُدُونِ

I have not created the jinn and mankind except to worship Me. (51:56)

It may be said that the phrase 'the Lord of all the worlds' is in a way the proof of the claim made in the earlier phrase الْحَمْدُ لِلَّهِ : (all praise belongs to Allah). When Allah alone is the ultimate cause for the nurture of the whole universe, He alone can, in reality, be worthy of praise. Thus, the first verse of the Surah, as we said before, combines in itself the praise of Allah and a subtle indication of the first and basic principle of the Islamic creed -- the oneness of God.

The second verse speaks of the Divine quality of mercy, employing two adjectives Rahmān and Rahīm, both of which are hyperbolic terms in Arabic, and respectively connote the superabundance and perfection of Divine mercy. The reference to this particular attribute in this situation is perhaps intended to be a reminder of the fact that it is not through any external compulsion or inner need or any kind of necessity whatsoever that Allah has assumed the responsibility of nurturing the whole of His creation, but in response to the demand of His own quality of mercy. If this whole universe did not exist, He would suffer no loss; if it does exist, it is no burden to Him.

The third verse pays homage to Allah as 'the Master of the Day of Judgment or Requitāl': مَلِكِ يَوْمِ الدِّينِ. The word Mālik has been derived from the root, 'mil' (ملك) which signifies possessing a thing in such a manner that one has the right and power to dispose of it as one likes (See Qamus). The word Dīn signifies 'Requitāl'. So, the phrase 'Master of the Day of Requitāl' implies total mastery on the Day of Requitāl. But there is no mention of the thing or things to which this mastery or possession would apply. According to the commentary, 'al-Kashshaf', the phrase makes a general reference to cover everything. That is to say, on the Day of Requitāl the mastery over everything that exists will belong to Allah alone.

The Day of Requit is real and rational:

Before we proceed, let us consider two important questions: Firstly, what is this Day of Requit? Secondly, Allah being the Master, of everything even today as much as on the Day of Requit, why does this verse specifically mention the Day of Requit? The Day of Requit or the Day of Judgment is the Day appointed by Allah to recompense good or evil deeds.³ The world is only the field of action, the place where one is required to perform one's duty, and not the place for receiving one's reward. The mere fact that man happens to be healthy and wealthy or powerful does not necessarily argue that he has won the pleasure and favour of Allah. Similarly, the mere fact that a man happens to be ill or poor or weak or miserable does not by itself indicate that he is the object of Allah's wrath. Even in the case of worldly life, would it not be a platitude to remark that a man sweating in a factory or an office does not consider it a misfortune? In fact, try to deprive him of this opportunity to sweat, and you would have earned his deepest displeasure; for beyond all this toil he can glimpse the reward he is going to get after thirty days in the shape of his wages.

It proceeds from this principle that the greatest sufferings in this world are the lot of the Prophets عليهم السلام and, after them, of the men of Allah, and yet we see them quite content and even happy. In short, physical well-being or worldly glory or luxury is no sure indication of one's virtue and truthfulness, nor is sorrow and suffering that of one's misdeeds and falsity. It may, however, happen that a man receives some punishment or reward for his deeds in this world. This never is the full recompense, but only a faint model which has been manifested to serve as an intimation or warning. The Holy Qur'an has spoken very clearly on this point:

وَلَنَذِيقَنَّهُمْ مِنَ الْعَذَابِ الْأَدْنَىٰ دُونَ الْعَذَابِ الْأَكْبَرِ لَعَلَّهُمْ يَرْجِعُونَ

And We shall surely let them taste a nearer punishment (in

3. The verse qualifies Allah specifically as 'Master of the Day of Requit', and thus emphasizes a principle which is in itself of the highest import, and is particularly relevant to certain tendencies in the modern habits of thought. Contrary to the modern conviction which one finds reflected even in the so called "new interpretations" of Islam, individual or collective well being is not the be-all and end-all of human existence, nor is the physical world the place where good or evil deeds are recompensed -- Translator this world) before the greater punishment (in the other world), so that they may return (to the right path). (32:21)

كَذَٰلِكَ الْعَذَابُ وَالْآخِرَةُ أَكْبَرُ لَوْ كَانُوا يَعْلَمُونَ

Such is the punishment; and the punishment of the other world is certainly greater, only if they knew. (68 : 33)

The sufferings of this world, as even its joys, are sometimes a trial, and sometimes a punishment, but never a full recompense, for the world is itself transitory. What really counts is the joy or suffering that will endure for ever, and which one will come to know in the other world beyond this world. Given the fact that good or evil deeds are not fully recompensed in this world, and the rational and just principle that good and evil not being equal in value, every deed should be rewarded or punished according to its nature, it readily follows that beyond this world there should be another world where every deed, big or small, good or evil, is to be judged, and then justly rewarded or punished. This the Holy Qur'an calls Al-Akhirah: الآخرة (The world-to-come), or Al-Qiyamah: القيامة (Doomsday or the Day of Judgment), or Yawm al-din, (Day of Requital). The whole idea has been explained by the Holy Qur'an itself:

مَا يَسْتَوِي الْأَعْمَىٰ وَالْبَصِيرُ وَالَّذِينَ آمَنُوا وَعَمِلُوا الصَّالِحَاتِ وَلَا الْمُسِيءُ قَلِيلًا مَّا تَتَذَكَّرُونَ ۚ إِنَّ السَّاعَةَ لَأَتِيَةٌ لِأَرْبَابٍ فِيهَا، وَلَكِنَّ أَكْثَرَ النَّاسِ لَا يُؤْمِنُونَ ۝

The blind are not equal with the seeing, nor the wrong-doers with those who believe and do good deeds. Yet you seldom reflect. The hour of retribution is sure to come, no doubt about it, yet most people do not believe. (40 : 58-59)

Who is the Master ?

Now, we come to the second question. It should be obvious, on a little reflection, to everyone that the real master of every particle of dust in the universe can only be He who has created and nurtured it, Whose mastery over everything is complete, having neither a beginning nor an end, covering the living and the dead, the apparent and the hidden, the seen and the unseen. On the contrary, the mastery of man is delimited by a beginning and an end; it has a 'before' when it did not exist, and an 'after' when it will exist no more. Man's mastery and control extends to the living, not to the dead, to the seen, not to the unseen, to the external aspect of things, not to the internal. All this would show to those who can see that the real Master of the whole universe, not only on the Day of Requitul but even in this world, is no other than Allah. Then why should this verse specify the Day of Requitul ?

The verses of the Sūrah al-Mū'min / Ghafīr (Chapter 40) serve as a commentary on the phrase under discussion, and provide a clear account of the Day of Requitul. The real and complete mastery over everything, no doubt, belongs to Allah alone even in this world. Yet Allah Himself, in His beneficence and wisdom, has granted a kind of imperfect, temporary and apparent mastery to man as well; and the Shari'ah, in laying down laws for worldly affairs, has given due consideration to man's limited right to ownership. But today, in possessing lands or money or power, which has been given to him by way of trial, man has always been prone to get drunk with pride and vanity.⁴ The phrase 'Master of the Day of Judgment' is a warning to man reeling in his forgetfulness and self-conceit, and an intimation that all his possessions, all his relationships with things and men are only short-lived, and that there shall come a Day when masters will no more be masters and slaves no more slaves, when no one will own anything even in appearance, and the ownership and mastery, apparent as well as real, of the whole universe will be seen to belong to none but Allah, the Exalted. The Holy Qur'an says:

يَوْمَ هُمْ بَارِزُونَ لَا يَخْفَىٰ عَلَى اللَّهِ مِنْهُمْ شَيْءٌ ۚ لِمَنِ الْمُلْكُ الْيَوْمَ لِلَّهِ الْوَاحِدِ
الْقَهَّارِ ۚ الْيَوْمَ يُجْزَىٰ كُلُّ نَفْسٍ بِمَا كَسَبَتْ لَا ظُلْمَ الْيَوْمَ ۚ إِنَّ اللَّهَ سَرِيعُ الْحِسَابِ

The day they will present themselves (before Allah), and nothing of theirs will remain hidden from Allah (even apparently). 'Whose is the kingdom today?' Of Allah alone, the One, the Mighty. Today everyone will be recompensed for what he has done. Today no one will be wronged. Allah's reckoning is surely swift. (40:17)

The fourth verse اِيَّاكَ نَعْبُدُ وَ اِيَّاكَ نَسْتَعِينُ : 'You alone we worship, and from You alone we seek help' has a double aspect, one of praise and another of prayer. A man's life is subject to three states of time -- past, present and future.

4. Specially the modern man living in the so-called 'humanistic civilization' when the sole drive and motivating force is the complacent belief in man's mastery.

The first two verses of the Sūrah, اَلْحَمْدُ لِلّٰهِ (All Praise belongs to Allah) and اَلرَّحْمٰنِ الرَّحِيْمِ (the All-Merciful, the Very-Merciful), remind man that, as far as his past and present are concerned, he owes everything to Allah alone, for it is Allah who created him out of nothing, endowed him with the best form in the universe, and with reason and intuition, and continues to sustain and nurture him in the present. The third verse: مٰلِكِ يَوْمِ الدِّيْنِ (Master of the Day of Judgment) tells him that in the future too he will have to depend on Allah alone, for on the Day of Requital one cannot possibly have a helper other than Allah. The three verses having made it clear that man is totally and absolutely dependent on Allah in all the three states of his life, it logically and naturally leads to the conclusion that Allah alone is worthy of being worshipped, for in Arabic the word 'ibādah' (worship) connotes showing the utmost humility and submissiveness out of an intense respect and love for someone, and such an attitude of willing self-abasement cannot justly be adopted towards anyone except Allah. So, the phrase: اِيَّاكَ نَعْبُدُ (You alone we worship) expresses this very natural and logical conclusion. And once it has been understood that there is only one Being who can satisfy all our needs, it is equally natural and logical to turn for help in everything to Him alone. Hence the phrase اِيَّاكَ نَسْتَعِيْظُ (to You alone we pray for help). Beside these two aspects, the fourth verse has another dimension as well. It teaches man not to worship anyone except Allah, not to consider anyone else as being really capable of satisfying his needs, and not to beg anyone else to satisfy these needs. It does not, however, go against this principle if, in praying to Allah, one mentions the name of a prophet or a man of Allah by way of a medium (wasilāh) for drawing the mercy of Allah upon oneself.

It may also be noticed that the phrase: اِيَّاكَ نَسْتَعِيْظُ (to You alone we pray for help) does not mention the purpose for which help is being sought. According to most of the commentators, it generalizes the idea of the request to cover everything from acts of worship to all possible worldly or other-worldly concerns.

Then, acts of worship ('ibādah') are not limited merely to prescribed prayers or fasting. Imām al-Ghāzzālī in his book 'Arba'in' has enumerated ten forms which worship can take:-

1. Prayers.
2. Prescribed Alms-giving.
3. Fasting.
4. Hajj or pilgrimage to Makkah.
5. Reciting the Holy Qur'ān.
6. Remembrance of Allah in all possible situations.
7. Earning one's livelihood in accordance with the regulations of the Shari'ah.
8. Fulfilling one's obligations towards one's companions and neighbours.
9. Persuading people to act righteously and dissuading them from what is reprehensible and forbidden.
10. To follow the Sunnah, or the practice of the Holy Prophet ﷺ.

Therefore, not associating anyone with Allah in worship means that one should not love or fear or depend on anyone else as one loves or fears or depends on Allah, nor should one repose one's hope in anyone else, nor should one consider obedience or submission or service to another as obligatory as the worship of Allah, nor make a votive offering or consecrate or dedicate anything to anyone or take a vow in the name of anyone similar to the way one does these things in the case of Allah, nor should one show complete self-abasement and total humility before anyone as one is required to do before Allah, nor should one engage in the particular God-oriented acts of worship for anyone other than Allah, acts which symbolize the farthest limits of self-abasement, such as, ruku' and sajdah (the bowing and prostrating in salāh).

The Prayer for Guidance

The last three verses of the Sūrah consist of a prayer on the part of man. In other words, Allah Himself, in His great mercy, has taught man what to pray for:

إِهْدِنَا الصِّرَاطَ الْمُسْتَقِيمَ ۝ صِرَاطَ الَّذِينَ أَنْعَمْتَ عَلَيْهِمْ ۝ غَيْرِ الْمَغْضُوبِ عَلَيْهِمْ وَلَا الضَّالِّينَ ۝

Guide us in the straight path, the path of those on whom You have bestowed Your grace, not of those who have incurred Your wrath, nor of those who have gone astray.

The Implications of Guidance

A problem of highest significance arises here. The teaching with regard to the prayer for being guided in the straight path is addressed equally to all men or all Muslims and to saints and prophets who have already received guidance and are even a source of guidance for other men. Why should these repeatedly pray for something they already possess? The answer to this question depends on knowing all that is implied by guidance. The answer would, at the same time, remove all difficulties and confusions which arise in the minds of those who, not being familiar with the true signification of guidance, begin to suspect that certain verses of the Holy Qur'ān were contradicting certain others.

The Meaning of Hidāyah or Guidance

The best explanation of the word, Hidāyah (guidance) has been offered by Imām Raghīb al-Isfahānī in his Mufradat al-Qur'ān, which can be summed up thus: Hidayah signifies leading someone towards his destination, gently and kindly; while guidance, in the real sense, issues forth from Allah alone, and it has several degrees.

The First Degree of Guidance

The first degree of guidance is general, and covers everything that exists in the universe -- minerals, plants, animals etc. It would surprise many to hear of guidance in relation to minerals. But the Holy Qur'ān makes it quite clear that all forms of existents in the universe, and every particle of dust possesses life, sensitivity, and even consciousness and understanding in its own degree and according to its own sphere of existence. Some of these existents possess more of this essence than others, and some less. Hence, those who have very little of it are considered to be inanimate and devoid of consciousness. The Shari'ah too has recognized this difference, and such creatures have not been made to bear the obligation of observing the injunctions of Allah. The creatures which show obvious signs of life but not those of consciousness and reason are considered to be living, but not rational; whereas, creatures showing the signs of consciousness and reason, along with those of life, are called rational beings. Because of these differences in the degrees of consciousness, men and jinn alone, of all the existents in the universe, have been made subservient to the injunctions of the Shari'ah and accountable for their actions, for they alone have the necessary consciousness and understanding. But, it does not mean that other creatures or existents are totally devoid of life or sensitivity, or of consciousness and understanding. The Holy Qur'an is very explicit on this point:

وَأِنْ مِنْ شَيْءٍ إِلَّا يَسْبِّحُ بِحَمْدِهِ وَلَكِنْ لَا تَفْقَهُونَ تَسْبِيحَهُمْ

Nothing exists that does not celebrate His praise, but you do not understand their (mode of) praising. (17:44)

أَلَمْ تَرَ أَنَّ اللَّهَ يَسْبِّحُ لَهُ مَنْ فِي السَّمَوَاتِ وَالْأَرْضِ وَالطَّيْرِ طَفَّتِ كُلُّ قَدِّ عِلْمٍ صَلَاتُهُ وَتَسْبِيحُهُ وَاللَّهُ عَلِيمٌ بِمَا يَفْعَلُونَ ۝

Have you not seen that everything in the heavens and the earth proclaims Allah's purity, and the birds too that spread their wings? Each of them knows its prayer and its (mode of) praising. And Allah is aware of what they do. (24:41)

Evidently, one cannot extol and praise Allah without knowing Allah. It is equally evident that knowing Allah is the highest form of knowledge possible, and such a knowledge cannot be gained unless one possesses consciousness and understanding. These verses, therefore, show that everything that exists in the universe possesses life, sensitivity, understanding and consciousness, though it may not always be apparent to the ordinary observer -- a truth which has been endorsed by all the great religions, by certain ancient philosophers, and lately even by experimental science.

This, then, is the first degree of guidance which is common to minerals, plants, animals, men, jinns and all the forms of creation. The Holy Qur'an speaks of this primary and general guidance in these words:

قَالَ رَبُّنَا الَّذِي أَعْطَى كُلَّ شَيْءٍ خَلْقَهُ ثُمَّ هَدَى

He gave to everything its distinctive form, and then guided it. (20:50)

Or, as we find in another Surah:

سَبِّحْ اسْمَ رَبِّكَ الْأَعْلَى ۝ الَّذِي خَلَقَ فَسُوَّى ۝ وَالَّذِي قَدَّرَ فَهَدَى ۝

Celebrate the name of your Lord, the Most High, Who has created all things, well proportioned them, and Who has determined and guided them. (87:1-2)

That is to say, Allah has given every creature a particular nature and function, and guided it in a way which should correspond to its station in the scheme of things. Thanks to this general guidance, everything in the universe is performing its allotted function with such marvellous efficiency. For example, it is the ears that hear a sound and not the eyes or the nose. Similarly, the nose smells but cannot see; the eyes see but cannot smell. In short:

إِنْ كُلُّ مَنْ فِي السَّمَوَاتِ وَالْأَرْضِ إِلَّا أَتَى الرَّحْمَنَ عَبْدًا ۝

There is nothing in the heavens and the earth but comes to the All-Merciful as a servant. (19:93)

The Second Degree of Guidance

Unlike the first, the second degree of guidance is not general but particular. It is limited to those creatures which are considered to be rational, that is, men and jinns. This kind of guidance comes to every man through prophets and revealed books. Some accept this guidance, and become believers (Muslims): some reject it and become disbelievers (Kāfirs).

The Third Degree of guidance

The third degree of guidance is still more particular, being special to true believers (Mu'minīn) and the God-fearing (Muttaqīn). Like the first degree, the third kind of guidance too descends directly to the individual from Allah, and it is called, Tawfīq. That is to say, Allah's grace provides a man with internal and external means and circumstances which should make it easy, and even pleasant for him to accept and act upon the guidance of the Holy Qur'ān, and difficult to ignore or oppose it. The scope of the third degree of guidance is limitless, and its levels indefinite.⁵ Here is the sphere in which man, not only can, but is required to make a progress in the veritable sense of the term. The agency of this progress is the performance of virtuous deeds⁶. All increase in virtuous deeds brings with it an increase in divine guidance. The Holy Qur'an itself gives us the promise of such increase:

وَالَّذِينَ اهْتَدَوْا زَادَهُمْ هُدًى

As for those who follow the straight path, Allah will increase their guidance. (47:17)

وَمَنْ يُؤْمِنْ بِاللَّهِ يَهْدِ قَلْبَهُ

And whoever believes in Allah, He guides his heart. (64:11)

الَّذِينَ جَاهَدُوا فِينَا لَنَهْدِيَنَّهُمْ سُبُلَنَا

Those who strive for (literally, 'in') Us, We will surely guide them in Our paths. (29:69)

It is in this field of progress that we see even the greatest prophets and men of Allah striving, and it is an increase in divine guidance and help that they keep seeking to their last breath.

A Cumulative view of guidance

Keeping in mind the three distinct degrees of guidance, one can easily see that guidance is a thing which everyone does possess in some way, and yet no one, not even the greatest, can do without wishing to attain more of its advanced and higher stages. Hence, of all the prayers man can address to Allah, the most important is the prayer for guidance, which has been taught to us in the very first Sūrah of the Holy Qur'an; and this prayer is as necessary for the greatest of prophets and men of Allah as for an ordinary Muslim. That is why the Sūrah Al-Fath (Victory), in enumerating the material and spiritual benefits of the conquest of Makkah in the last days of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم, also says: وَيَهْدِيكُمْ صِرَاطًا مُسْتَقِيمًا (and to guide you on the straight path) (48:20). When these verses were revealed, the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم had already received guidance and was a source of guidance for others. The good tidings of receiving guidance can, in this situation, have only one meaning that he attained some very high station of guidance at the time.

Guidance: Some notes of caution

In concluding this discussion about the different implications of

6. As defined, it goes without saying, by the Shari'ah and not by individual or collective fancy, or by custom and habits, or by the fads or fashions of the day.

'guidance' (Hidāyah), we repeat points that would help the reader of the Holy Qur'an avoid certain confusions and errors:

1. The Holy Qur'an sometimes speaks of divine guidance as being general and common to believers and non-believers, in fact to all creatures, and sometimes makes it out to be particular and special to the God-fearing. So, the unwary may be led to sense a contradiction here. But once it is understood that one degree of guidance is common to all, whereas another degree is limited to particular cases, the doubt and confusion readily resolves itself.

2. On the one hand, the Holy Qur'an reminds us again and again that Allah does not grant guidance to the unjust and the unrighteous; on the other hand, it repeatedly declares that Allah guides all. The misunderstanding which may arise here is also dispelled by a knowledge of the degrees of guidance. Now we can easily see that the general guidance is given to all without any distinction, but the third and very special degree of guidance is not granted to the unjust and the unrighteous.

3. The first and the third degrees of guidance pertain to a direct act of divine grace, and no prophet can have anything to do with it, for the function of the prophets is related only to the second degree.

Whenever the Holy Qur'an speaks of Prophets عليهم السلام as guides, it is always referring to this second degree, and to it alone. On the other hand, when the Holy Qur'an, addressing the noble Prophet ﷺ, says: إِنَّكَ لَا تَهْدِي مَنْ أَحْبَبْتَ (You cannot guide whom you please) (28:56), it is the third degree of guidance which is intended, that is to say, it is neither the function of a prophet nor is it in his power to provide tawfiq to anyone, in other words, to make it easy for anyone to accept guidance.⁷

7. Translator's Note: In this context one should not overlook the popularity enjoyed in the West, since the rise of Protestantism, by the notion of a personal relationship with God on the part of the individual. This notion has in its turn produced a diffused yet very effective conviction that ethics can be made independent of religion, that the external or legislative aspect of religion is of no account, that prescribed rites are irrelevant to the so-called 'religious experience', and more monstrously still, that doctrines can be dispensed with altogether -- all of which betrays a total incomprehension of what constitutes a religion. The tendency has, in fact, begun to infect some of the modernist interpreters of Islam in one way or another, all of whom claim to be fulfilling the 'needs of the present age'. Attempts have been made even to exploit this notion for ulterior motives.

To sum up, the Qur'anic prayer إِهْدِنَا الصِّرَاطَ الْمُسْتَقِيمَ (guide us in the straight path) is most comprehensive, and certainly, one of the most important prayers taught to man. No member of the human family can claim not to need it. No success, no prosperity in this or in the other world can really come without being on the straight path. Particularly so, for man lost in the anxieties of mortal life, the prayer for the straight path is an elixir, though people do not realize it.

Which 'path' is 'straight'?

Now, to come to the meaning of the 'straight path', it is the path which has no turns and twists. The term signifies the particular way of Faith which equally avoids the two extremes of excess and deficiency. One who follows the straight path would, in matters of doctrine and practice both, neither go beyond the limits nor fall short of them.

The last two verses of the Sūrah Al-Fāṭiḥah define and identify that 'straight path', something man has been prompted to pray for immediately earlier. The verse says: صِرَاطَ الَّذِينَ أَنْعَمْتَ عَلَيْهِمْ (The path of those on whom You have bestowed Your grace). As to who these people are, another verse of the Holy Qur'an gives us details in the following words:

الَّذِينَ أَنْعَمَ اللَّهُ عَلَيْهِمْ مِنَ النَّبِيِّينَ وَالصِّدِّيقِينَ وَالشُّهَدَاءِ وَالصَّالِحِينَ

Those whom Allah has blessed, namely, the prophets, the Siddiqin, the Shuhada', and the righteous. (4:69)

Continued

In persuading the Muslim countries to look upon themselves as 'the eastern-most part of the West', the London ECONOMIST argues that Islam 'also implies a one-to-one relationship between the believer and the God he believes in, a direct contact without intermediary and in this relationship, in which a single God speaks directly to the core of a single man, is the basis of individualism. The Protestant ethic is grounded on precisely the same concept.' (May 17-23, 1975, page 82 of the Special Survey).

In the light of the discussion regarding the three degrees of guidance, it should not be difficult to see that the direct contact with God without intermediary pertains only to the first and third degrees, and not the second degree where the mediation of the prophets is indispensable. To attain the third degree may be necessary for making a spiritual progress, but Islam, or for that matter any authentic religion, is born out of the second degree of guidance. One cannot, indeed, enjoy the benefits of the third degree without having accepted the guidance of the second degree -- or, to use the Islamic terminology, without following the Shari'ah.

These are the four categories of those who find favour with Allah. Among them all, the prophets are the greatest. The Siddiqin (the constantly true) are those who acquire spiritual perfection, and thus -- attain the highest rank among the followers of a prophet. In common parlance, they are called Men of Allah, or saints.⁸ The Shuhadā' (martyrs) are those who sacrifice even their lives for the sake of their faith (or, who bear witness to the truth, as the word admits of both meanings). The righteous (the Salihin) are those who follow the Shari'ah completely, not only in the matter of obligations (Wajibat) but also with regard to commendable (mustahabb) actions. In everyday language they are called the pious or the virtuous or the good.

This verse, then, determines the straight path in a positive manner, identifying it with the path followed by men of these four categories. The next verse, by a process of elimination, does the same in a negative manner by saying:

غَيْرِ الْمَغْضُوبِ عَلَيْهِمْ وَلَا الضَّالِّينَ ۝

Not of those who have incurred Your wrath, nor of those who have gone astray.

Those who have incurred Allah's wrath are the people, who in spite of being quite familiar with the commandments of Allah wilfully go against them out of a calculated perversity or in the service of their desires, or, in other words, who are deficient in obeying divine injunctions. This, for example, was the general condition of the Jews who were ready to sacrifice their religion for the sake of a petty worldly gain, and used to insult and sometimes even to kill their prophets.

As for الضَّالِّينَ (those who go astray), they are the people who, out of ignorance or lack of thought, go beyond the limits appointed by Allah, and indulge in excess and exaggeration in religious matters. This, for example, has generally been the error of the Christians who exceeded the limits in their reverence for a prophet and turned him into a god. On the one hand, there is the rebelliousness of the Jews who not only refused to listen to the prophets of Allah but went on to kill them; on the other hand, there is the excessive zeal of the Christians who deified a prophet.

8. If taken in an untainted religious sense, and certainly not if taken in one of the many modern vulgarized usages of the term where, for instance, you see the halo of spiritual glory over the head of a spy!

Thus, the essential meaning of the verse is that, in praying for the straight path, we do not ask for the path of those who are the slaves of their desires, perverse in thought and action, and deficient in performing their religious obligations, nor the path of those who are ignorant or unmindful or misled, and indulge in excess and exaggeration in religious matters, but wish for a path between these two extremes, which inclines neither towards excess nor towards deficiency, and which is as free of the promptings of desires as of doubts and confusions and of erroneous beliefs.

In short, the prayer for the straight path is the essence of the Sūrah Al-Fātiḥah. Since knowing and following the straight path is the real knowledge and the real achievement in this mortal world, a mistake in picking it up right takes peoples and nations to ruins; otherwise, there are even non-Muslims who claim to be seeking God and undertake stupendous labours to attain this end. The Holy Qur'ān has, therefore, defined the straight path so explicitly from a positive as well as eliminative point of view.

The Key to the Straight Path

But, before we proceed, there is another problem to be considered, the answer to which would open the door to a new and more comprehensive understanding. It would seem that in order to define the straight path it should have been sufficient to call it 'the path of the Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم' or 'the path of the Qur'ān', which should also have been more succinct and more explicit, for the whole of the Holy Qur'ān is really an explanation of the straight path, and the teachings of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم, an elaboration. But, setting aside the succinct and explicit form of expression, the Holy Qur'ān has taken up two verses of this short Sūrah for defining and delimiting the straight path positively and negatively, and has thus indicated that if one wishes to follow the straight path, one should seek such and such men 'those on whom Allah has bestowed His grace...', and adopt their way. Here, the Holy Qur'ān does not ask us to follow the 'path of the Qur'ān', for a book alone is not sufficient for the grooming of man; nor does it ask us to follow 'the path of the prophet', for the Holy Prophet ﷺ was not to be in this world for ever, and no other prophet was to come after him. So, in enumerating those whose teaching and example can help us attain the straight path, the Holy Qur'ān has, besides the prophets صلى الله عليه وسلم, included those too, who will always be found living amongst us till the last day of the world -- namely, the Siddiqin, the Shuhada', and the righteous.

For the purpose of indicating the manner in which one can find the straight path, the Holy Qur'an has thus referred not to a book but to certain men. According to a ḥadīth, when the Holy Prophet ﷺ informed his Companions that, like earlier communities, his 'Ummah' too would be divided into seventy or seventy-two sects, and that only one among them would be on the right path, they wanted to know as to which group it would be. The answer he gave also leads on to certain men of Allah, for he said: مَا آتَا عَلَيَّ وَأَصْحَابِي (That which follows my way and the way of my Companions). All this comes to mean that written books or oral traditions alone cannot teach, train and discipline man; for this, one has to be with knowing men, and learning from them. In yet other words, the real teacher and groomer of man has to be another man; a book cannot take that place all by itself. How curtly this was pointed out by Akbar, the famous Urdu poet-humourist, who said:

کورس تو لفظ ہی سکھاتے ہیں
آدمی، آدمی بناتے ہیں

which, in English, comes close to saying: "Courses teach words. But, men train men." This truth holds good even for spheres of everyday life.

No one has ever become a doctor, or an engineer, or even a cook or a tailor merely by reading a book. Similarly, studying the Holy Qur'an and the Ḥadīth on one's own cannot by itself be sufficient for the moral-spiritual education and training of a man; such a study must be carried on under the guidance of a specialist or a genuine scholar before it can be useful. It is common observation that,⁹ many people today, though otherwise educated, cherish the erroneous notion that one can acquire a masterly knowledge of the Holy Qur'an and Ḥadīth merely by reading a translation or at best a commentary.¹⁰ But the error of such an enterprise is self-evident. Had a book in itself been sufficient for the guidance of men, there was no need for the prophets to be sent. But, Allah in sending us His Book, has also sent His Prophet to serve as a teacher and guide. In defining the straight path too, He has also enumerated those of His servants who find special favour with Him -- all of which argues that, in trying to understand the Book of Allah and to act upon it, one cannot solely rely on one's own study and judgment, but must turn to someone who knows.

The conclusion

Two things are necessary for the physical and spiritual well-being and success of man -- the Book of Allah which contains guidance for every sphere of human life, and the Men of Allah who help in making this guidance effective. The way to profit from the Men of Allah is to assess them according to the well-known principles of the Book of Allah. Those who do not conform to these principles should just not be regarded as Men of Allah. But, when one has found Men of Allah, in the real sense, one should seek their guidance in order to understand the meaning of the Book of Allah and act upon it.

Why the Schism?

As to the sectarian differences on this point, we may remark that there are two kinds of deviations in this respect. Some people elected to follow the Book of Allah alone, ignored the Men of Allah totally and gave no value to their teachings and explanations. Conversely, others adopted the Men of Allah as the only criterion of truth and became indifferent to the Book of Allah. Both these ways lead to fatal error.

Injunctions and related considerations

To recapitulate, the Sūrah Al-Fātiḥah begins with the praise of Allah. Then comes an affirmation on the part of man that he worships Allah alone, and turns to him alone in the hour of need. That is, so to say, the oath of allegiance man offers to his Lord and Master. Finally, there is a prayer which covers all possible human needs and goals. Beside these, there are some related secondary considerations also which arise from the Sūrah. These are as follows:

The proper way of Praying to Allah

Through this particular mode of expression and through its structure, the Sūrah teaches man how to pray and how to make a request to Allah. The proper method is that one should begin by fulfilling one's obligation to praise Allah. Then, one should offer the pledge of complete allegiance to Allah to the effect that one does not regard anyone except Allah as being worthy of adoration and worship, nor does one look upon anyone except Allah as having the real power to give help in one's distress or need. Finally, one should pray for what one wishes to have. And there is every hope that a prayer made in this manner will be granted. (See Ahkam al-Jaṣṣāṣ). The Sūrah also suggests that, in praying to Allah, one should pray for something so comprehensive that it includes in essence all possible human goals, for example, pray for being guided in the straight path, because if one can and does follow the straight path in everything that concerns this world or the other, one's material life or spiritual, one need not be afraid of stumbling or of being hurt.

Praising Allah is Man's Natural Demand

The first verse of the Surah teaches man to praise Allah. We praise someone either for a quality inherent in him or for a favour received from him. But the verse mentions neither. The implication is that the blessings of Allah are limitless. The Holy Qur'an says: وَإِنْ تَعْدُوا نِعْمَةَ اللَّهِ لَا تُحْصَوْهَا (If you try to count the blessings of Allah, you will never be able to number them) (14:34 and 16:18). Leaving aside other things, if man only considers his own being, he would find that it is a microcosm -- in itself which contains in analogical form everything contained in the macrocosm, his body offers a parallel to the earth, the hair on it to the vegetation, his bones to the hills, his veins flowing with blood to the springs underground.¹¹

Man, again, is composed of two parts, spirit and body, of which the spirit is obviously superior in value, while the body is subservient to it. In this inferior part alone, there are thousands of anatomical and biological wonders. There are supposed to be more than three hundred joints, but Allah has made each of them so strong that during the sixty or seventy years of an average man's life, they are in perpetual motion and yet do not need repairs. Of this Allah himself has reminded us:

11. It may not be out of place to remark that this analogical view of man's relationship with the universe has been an essential feature of all traditional cosmologies. The Copernican cosmology, whatever its merits may otherwise be, has tended to dissolve this vision of things, leaving man, at least in the West, to grow more and more alienated from the universe -- till we have arrived at the viewers of the American television who are reported to have been more interested in a ball game than in man's first landing on the moon -- Translator

نَحْنُ خَلَقْنَاهُمْ وَشَدَدْنَا أَسْرَهُمْ

It is We Who created them, and it is We Who endowed their joints with strength (76:28).

Or, take the example of the eye. One may spend a life-time and yet not fully know the manifestations of divine wisdom present in it. Or, take a single movement of the eye, and see how many blessings of Allah are involved in its functioning. Before the eye can see, internally it requires physical energy which in its turn is provided by food, air, water etc. And externally it requires the light of the sun which in its turn depends on a thousand other factors. That is to say, all the forces of the universe join together to make it possible for the eye to see even once. Now, try to calculate how many times does the eye see in a day, in a year, in a man's life-time. Similarly, the functions of the ears, the tongue, the hands and the feet, each brings into action the forces of the whole universe.

This is a kind of blessing which is equally available to every living man, be he a king or a beggar. In fact, all the greatest blessings of Allah are the common property of every living creature -- for example, air, water, light, the sun, the moon, the stars, in fact, everything that exists in the heavens and the earth, or between them, offers its benefits to all without distinction.

Then there are special blessings which divine wisdom has chosen to distribute unequally among men, some getting more and others less. This category includes wealth, honour, health, peace, knowledge and other acquisitions. Although the general blessings are obviously much more important and essential for human life than the special blessings, yet man in his naivete takes them for granted and never realizes what great gifts they are in spite of being common.

Now, human nature itself requires that in recognition of the innumerable blessings that keep descending on him at every moment of his life, man should, as far as he can, praise and continue to praise his Benefactor. It is to indicate this basic need of human nature that the Holy Qur'an employs the word الْحَمْد : 'Al-hamd' (Praise) as the first word of the very first Surah. Thus, the praise of Allah has been accorded a very high rank among the acts of worship. The Holy Prophet ﷺ has said that when, on receiving some kind of a blessing from Allah, His servant says اَلْحَمْدُ لِلّٰهِ: (Praise belongs to Allah), it is like giving something better in return for what he has taken (Qurtubī, from Ibn Majah, as narrated by Anas رضى الله عنه). According to another ḥadīth if a man, on receiving all possible blessings of the world, says: اَلْحَمْدُ لِلّٰهِ (Al-ḥamdulillāh), his act is superior to all those blessings. Commenting on this ḥadīth and citing certain scholars, al-Qurtubī says, the ability to repeat the phrase 'Al-ḥamdulillāh' with one's tongue is in itself a blessing of Allah. According to another authentic ḥadīth, saying this phrase fills half the scale on the side of good deeds in the Balance. As to what praising Allah should actually mean, Shaqiq ibn Ibrāhīm explains that when one receives some gift from Allah, one should first of all recognize the Benefactor, then be content with what He has given, and finally never disobey Him as long as one has some strength left in the body, which again is a gift from Allah. (See Qurtubī)

The second element in the phrase is Lillah, which is composed of the preposition Lām (Arabic equivalent of the letter L) and the noun 'Allah'. This preposition means 'for' and is used for particularization, showing the exclusive possession of a thing or quality. So, the phrase implies that not only is it the duty of man to praise Allah, but in reality all praise belongs exclusively to Him, and no one else in the universe is worthy of it. At the same time, and by way of a further blessing, Allah has, for the purpose of teaching man how to behave with his fellow beings, commanded him to thank those too through whom the gifts of Allah come to him, for one who does not see the need of thanking his human benefactor would not thank Allah too.

Self-Praise is not permitted

It is not permissible for a created being such as man to praise himself. The Holy Qur'ān says: فَلَا تَزْكُرُوا أَنْفُسَكُمْ هُوَ أَعْلَمُ بِمَنِ اتَّقَىٰ Do not pretend to be pure; He knows best who is really God-fearing (53:32). That is to say, a man can be praised only if he fears Allah, but Allah alone knows to what degree a particular man possesses this quality, known as Taqwā. As for Allah praising Himself, the reason is that man is not capable of praising the glory and greatness of Allah in a befitting manner. Not to speak of others, the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم has exclaimed: لَا أَحْمَدُكَ نَعًا عَلَيْكَ (I cannot properly praise You!). Therefore, Allah Himself has taught man the mode of praising Him.

Rabb is the exclusive attribute of Allah

The Arabic word 'Rabb' (Lord) is applied to a person who not only possesses a certain thing, but is also fully capable of and responsible for nurturing it properly. Obviously, no one can act as 'Rabb' with regard to the whole universe except Allah. So, the word, used in an absolute sense, is exclusive to Allah, and it is not permissible to address or describe anyone other than Allah as 'Rabb.' A ḥādīth in the Ṣaḥīḥ of Muslim explicitly forbids a slave or servant to call his master a 'Rabb'. The word may, however, be employed in the case of a man too in a relative sense -- that is, in relation to a particular thing, for example, 'rabb al-dar' (master of the house) etc. (Qurṭubī).

Seeking help from Allah

According to the great commentator and Companion 'Abdullāh ibn 'Abbās, the verse إِيَّاكَ نَعْبُدُ وَإِيَّاكَ نَسْتَعِينُ : 'You alone we worship, and from You alone we seek help' means that one worships Allah alone and no one else, and that one turns for help to Allah alone and to no one else. (Ibn Abī Hatīm, Ibn Jarīr)

It has been reported from certain great scholars and saints of the earliest centuries of Islam that the Sūrah al-Fātiḥah is the secret (i.e., the gist) of the entire Holy Qur'ān, and this verse is the secret of the whole Sūrah, for the first sentence of the verse is a declaration of one's being free from Shirk, or from all desire to associate anyone with Allah, and the second sentence is an expression of one's being exempt from all wish to trust in one's own power and will. Such an affirmation would naturally lead to putting oneself in the hands of Allah in all concerns. The Holy Qur'ān again and again commands us to do so: فَاعْبُدْهُ قُلْ هُوَ الرَّحْمَنُ : 'Worship Him, and put your trust in Him'. (11:123); اٰمِنَّا بِهِ وَعَلَيْهِ تَوَكَّلْنَا : 'Say He is the All-Merciful. We believe in Him, and we put all our trust in Him' (67:29); رَبِّ الْمَشْرِقِ وَالْمَغْرِبِ لَا إِلَهَ إِلَّا هُوَ فَاتَّخِذْهُ وَكِيلًا : 'He is the Lord of the East and the West; there is no god but He; so take Him for a guardian' (73:9). All these verses come to mean simply this -- a true Muslim should, in anything that he undertakes, rely neither on his own faculties nor on the help of a fellow creature, but should entrust himself completely to Allah, for He alone is All-Powerful, and He alone is the absolute helper.

Two doctrinal points emerge from this discussion. Firstly, it is totally forbidden to worship anyone except Allah, and associating anyone else with Him in worship is a deadly and unforgiveable sin. As we have already explained, Ibādah (worship) signifies an utmost humility and willing self-abasement before someone out of the deepest love and veneration. If one behaves in this manner in relation to any created being, it is called shirk (association) in Islamic terminology. It basically follows from this definition of "worship" that "association" does not merely consist in attributing divine power to figures made out of stone or metal as idolators usually do; but obeying or loving or venerating someone to the degree which is reserved for Allah is also an "obvious association" (al-shirk al-Jalii). In recounting how the Jews and the Christians indulge in shirk (association), the Holy Qur'an says: إِنَّمَا أَكْبَرُكُمْ وَرُوحَانَهُمْ أَنْبَاءٌ مِنْ دُونِ اللَّهِ : 'They have taken their religious scholars and their monks as lords apart from Allah'. (9:31)

The Companion 'Adi Ibn Ḥatīm, who was a Christian before accepting Islam, asked the Holy Prophet ﷺ with reference to this verse as to why the Holy Qur'an should blame the Christians for having taken their religious scholars as lords when they were never guilty of worshipping them. The Holy Prophet ﷺ in his turn asked him if it was not a fact that their scholars had declared many things as forbidden although Allah had permitted men to eat them, and that conversely they had declared as permissible what had been forbidden, and that the Christians obeyed their scholars in both the respects. 'Adi admitted that it was so. Therefore, the Holy Prophet ﷺ remarked that this was exactly how they 'worshipped' their scholars. This goes to prove that Allah alone has the right to establish what is permissible and what is forbidden. If one associates somebody else with Allah in this respect and, in spite of being familiar with the divine injunctions regarding what is permissible (ḥalāl) and what is forbidden (ḥaram), goes against them, believing that someone other than Allah too can demand obedience in these matters, one is virtually worshipping him and being guilty of the sin of association (shirk). But, in order to guard against a possible misunderstanding, we may remark that this verse of the Holy Qur'an, which condemns the worship of religious scholars, does in no way apply to the generality of Muslims who, not being qualified to understand the Holy Qur'ān and the Sunnah by themselves or to deduce the injunctions of the Shari'ah from them, naturally depend on an Imām, a Mujtāhid, a Mufti or a religious scholar and follow his instructions in these matters. In fact, such Muslims are only acting in accordance with the Holy Qur'ān and the Sunnah, and obeying divine commandments. For the Holy Qur'ān itself says:

فَاسْأَلُوا أَهْلَ الذِّكْرِ إِنْ كُنْتُمْ لَا تَعْلَمُونَ ۝

Ask the men of knowledge, if you yourselves do not know. (16:43)

Another thing which comes under the category of association (shirk) is to make votive offerings to someone other than Allah; so does praying to someone else in time of need or distress, for, according to a Tradition (Hadīth), praying is also an act of worship. Similarly, adopting such practices as are in general considered to be the signs or symbols of association also constitute the same sin. For example, the Companion 'Adi ibn Hatīm رضي الله عنه relates that when he embraced Islam and presented himself before the Holy Prophet ﷺ with a cross hanging round his neck, the Holy Prophet ﷺ asked him to remove this idol. Although at this time the cross did not have the kind of signification for 'Adi which it has for Christians, yet he was asked to shun a symbol of 'association' externally as well. Among the symbols of 'association' are included practices like bowing (rukū') or prostrating (sajdah) oneself before anyone except Allah, or going round a person or thing in the prescribed manner of the tawāf (circumambulation) of the Ka'bāh. Avoiding all such symbols of 'association' is a necessary part of the pledge of fidelity to Allah made in the phrase: 'You alone we worship'.

Seeking Allah's Help Directly and Indirectly

The other doctrinal point we mentioned is that one must turn to Allah alone for help and to no one else. This requires some clarification.

There is a kind of help which every man does seek from other men. The physical aspect of the universal order being what it is, it has to be so, and not otherwise. A tailor or tinker, a carpenter or a blacksmith, each is serving others, and everyone is obliged to seek his help. Seeking help of this kind neither is nor can be forbidden by any religion, for it is part and parcel of the network of physical means provided to men by Allah. In the sphere of non-physical means too, it is quite permissible for one to seek the help of a prophet or a saint by asking him to pray to Allah in one's behalf, or to mention, while praying directly to Allah, the name of a prophet or a saint by way of a medium (wasilāh) for drawing divine mercy upon oneself. Explicit Traditions (aḥādīth) and implicit indications of the Holy Qur'ān fully justify this practice, and it would be wrong to condemn it as being forbidden or to include it among the various forms of association (shirk).

Now, what sort of supplication for help is it which can be addressed exclusively to Allah and to no one else? And, when does one fall into the sin of shirk (association) in asking someone other than Allah for help? In reply to the second question, we may say that in this context the sin of shirk or association arises in two forms. Firstly, one becomes guilty of association, if one seeks the help of an angel or prophet or saint or any creature believing him to be omnipotent like Allah. It is such an obvious heresy that even idolaters and associators in general consider it as such, for even they do not look upon their idols and gods as being omnipotent like Allah. The second is the form adopted by idolaters and associators. They admit that God alone is Omnipotent, but also believe that He has delegated a part of His power to an angel or a prophet or a saint or to a smaller god who exercises a full and independent authority in that area, and to whom one may pray for help in matters within his jurisdiction. This is the supplication which the Holy Qur'ān forbids, and against which it warns us in the phrase إِيَّاكَ نَسْتَعِينُ (to You alone we pray for help).

There is a simple reason for misunderstanding in this regard. Allah appoints many angels to perform quite a large number of functions even in the physical order of the universe; or, He makes many things happen through the prophets which are beyond the powers of man and which are called miracles (mu'jizat), as also other incredible wonders through the saints which are called karāmat. The appearance may easily lead a careless observer to ignore the reality, and to conclude from what he has seen that the angels or the prophets or the saints could not have worked such wonders if Allah had not given them the necessary power and authority. This faulty argument which is no more than an illusion gives birth to the belief that the prophets or the saints enjoy absolute power and authority in their own degree. It is not so. Miracles and wonders are the direct acts of Allah, but they are manifested through prophets and saints so that people may recognize their spiritual station -- prophets and saints themselves have no powers to make such things happen. This fact is borne out by so many verses of the Holy Qur'an. For example, the verse: وَمَا رَمَيْتَ إِذْ رَمَيْتَ وَلَكِنَّ اللَّهَ رَمَى: 'When you threw, it was not you that threw, but Allah threw' (8:17) refers to a miracle of the Holy Prophet ﷺ in which he threw a handful of pebbles at an army of his enemies, and Allah willed it so that they smote the eyes of the whole army. The Holy Qur'an attributes the act of throwing pebbles, not to the Holy Prophet ﷺ but to Allah Himself, which clearly shows that a miracle is manifested through a prophet ﷺ, but is in reality an act of Allah Himself. Similarly, when the people of Nūḥ, or Noah, عليه السلام demanded that, in order to establish his authenticity as a prophet, he should bring down on them the punishment and wrath of Allah, he replied: إِنَّمَا يَأْتِيكُمْ بِهِ اللَّهُ إِنْ شَاءَ: 'Allah will certainly bring it down to you, if He so wills' (11:33), in other words, he declared that he himself could not bring down divine punishment on them by way of a miracle. Another verse of the Holy Qur'an reports what a group of prophets said to their people in reply to a similar demand: مَا كَانَ لَنَا أَنْ نَأْتِيَكُمْ بِسُلْطَانٍ إِلَّا بِإِذْنِ اللَّهِ: 'We cannot give you proof, except by Allah's will' (14:11). This again was an admission that it was not in their power to produce a miracle, for all power rests in the hands of Allah. In short, it is not at all possible for a prophet or a saint to show a miracle whenever he likes and whatsoever he likes. The disbelievers used to demand specific miracles from the Holy Prophet ﷺ and from the earlier prophets عليهم السلام but Allah manifested only those which He Himself pleased, and not others. The Holy Qur'an presents many such instances.

An ordinary example will make the discussion clear. In your room, you receive light from a lamp and air from a fan, but the lamp and the fan do not possess in themselves an absolute power to give you light and air, but need the electric current which they receive from the power house, and without which they cannot function. Giving you light and air is, in actual fact, not the work of the lamp and the fan, but of the electric current which comes from the power house. Similarly, saints, prophets and angels, all depend on Allah in everything they do; it is Allah's power and will which makes things happen, though it manifests itself through prophets and saints as the electric current manifests itself through fans and lamps.

This example would also show that although prophets and saints have no power to make these things happen or come to be, yet their presence is not altogether irrelevant to what happens, you cannot have light and air in your room without there being a lamp and a fan. Likewise, you cannot have miracles or wonders without there being a prophet or a saint. There is, of course, a certain difference between the two situations. In spite of all the wirings and fittings being intact, you cannot have light without a lamp, nor air without a fan. But, in the case of miracles, Allah has the power, if He so wills, to manifest them even without the medium of prophets and saints. The usual way of Allah has, however, been that miracles are not manifested without the medium of prophets and saints; otherwise miracles would not serve the purpose for which they are intended.

To conclude, one must have firm faith in the doctrine that everything that happens is made to happen by the power and will of Allah, but it is also necessary to recognize the need for prophets and saints, and to admit their importance. Without such an admission, one would succeed neither in obeying divine commandments in the real sense nor in attaining Allah's pleasure exactly like the man who, being ignorant of the worth of lamps and fans, disregards them, and remains deprived of light and air.

The problems we have discussed above perplex many a mind. But the answer is essentially simple. Taking prophets and saints as a medium (wasilāh) for drawing divine mercy upon oneself is neither absolutely permissible nor absolutely forbidden. There is a condition attached to it. If one does so, believing a prophet or a saint to be all-powerful, it becomes an act of shirk (association) and is hence forbidden. But if one takes a prophet or a saint to be no more than a medium or a means, it is permissible. But one finds that in this matter people generally adopt either of the two extreme positions, outright rejection of wasilāh or exaggerated veneration. The truth, however, lies between the two.

6. Success in this world and in the Hereafter

As we have said before, the prayer which the Holy Qur'ān has chosen to recommend to everyone, in every situation and for everything one does, is the prayer for being guided in the straight path. Just as success in the Hereafter depends on taking the straight path which leads one to Paradise, in the same way, if you come to think about it, success in all worldly concerns too depends on keeping to the straight path -- that is, on using the means and methods which habitually lead to the attainment of one's goal. Conversely, a little reflection will reveal that failure is always due to having strayed from the straight path. In view of the need for the straight path in worldly and other worldly concerns both, this is the prayer which should constantly be on the lips and in the heart of a true Muslim -- never as an empty verbal exercise, but with a sincere intention and with the meaning of the words fully present in the mind.

With Allah's help, the commentary on Sūrah Al-Fātiḥah ends here.

SURAH AL-BAQARAH

(The Cow)

MADINITE

بِسْمِ اللَّهِ الرَّحْمَنِ الرَّحِيمِ

286 VERSES

The name and the number of verses

According to the aḥadīth of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم and the reports relating to his blessed Companions, the name of this Sūrah is Al-Baqarah. The riwayah or narration which prohibits this name is not authentic (Ibn Kathir). It comprises of 286 verses, 6201 words and 25500 letters (Ibn Kathir).

The period of revelation

The Sūrah is Madinite - that is to say, it was revealed at Madīnah after the Hijrah; some of the verses included here were revealed at Makkah at the time of the last Hajj of the Holy Prophet ﷺ, but, in accordance with the terminology of the commentators, they too are regarded as Madinite. This is the longest Sūrah in the Holy Qur'ān.

It was the first Sūrah to be revealed at Madīnah, but different verses were revealed at different times, covering quite a long period so much so that the verses with regard to riba (interest or usury) were revealed in the last days of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم after the conquest of Makkah. Actually, the verse:

وَاتَّقُوا يَوْمًا تُرْجَعُونَ فِيهِ إِلَى اللَّهِ

Fear the day when you will return to Allah (2:281), is the very last verse of the Holy Qur'ān to be revealed - this happened on the 10th of Dhu al-Hijjah 10 A.H., when the Holy Prophet ﷺ was in the course of performing his last Hajj, and only eighty or ninety days later he departed from this world, and the process of Divine Revelation came to an end for ever. (Qurtubi)

The merits of Sūrah Al-Baqarah

It is not only the longest Sūrah in the Holy Qur'ān, but also contains quite a large number of injunctions. The Holy Prophet ﷺ has said: "Make a habit of reading the Sūrah Al-Baqarah, for reading it brings down on you the barakah or blessings of Allah, and neglecting it is a matter of regret, and a misfortune. And men of falsehood cannot overcome it". Al-Qurtubī cites the blessed Companion Mu'awiyah to the effect that the men of falsehood referred to here are sorcerers, and the implication is that one who keeps reading this Surah becomes immune to the effect of black magic (Qurtubī, from Muslim, as narrated by Abū Umamah Bahili). The Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم has also said that Satan flees from the house in which this Surah is read or recited. (Ibn Kathir from Hakim). Another ḥadīth says that this Sūrah is the apex of the Holy Qur'ān, and that a retinue of eighty angels had accompanied each of its verses when it was revealed (Ibn Kathir from Musnad Ahmad). The blessed Companion Abū Hurairah رضى الله عنه reports from the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم that there is a verse in this Sūrah which enjoys a superiority over all the other verses of the Holy Qur'ān, and that verse is the Verse of the Kursi (Āyaṭ al-Kursī 2:255) (Ibn Kathir from Tirmidhī). The blessed Companion Abdullah ibn Mas'ūd says that ten verses of this Sūrah have such an efficacy that if one recites them at night, neither Satan nor jinn would enter one's house, nor would one and one's family be afflicted with illness or calamity or sorrow that night, and that if they are recited over a man suffering from a fit of madness, his condition will improve. The ten verses are these: the first four verses of the Sūrah, three verses in the middle (that is, the Āyaṭ al-Kursī, and the two following verses), and the last three verses of the Sūrah.

This Sūrah enjoys, with regard to its contents as well, a special distinction. Ibn al-'Arabī reports from his elders that in this Sūrah there are one thousand injunctions, one thousand prohibitions, one thousand subtle points of wisdom, and one thousand parables and references to historical events (Qurtubī and Ibn Kathir). That is why the great Caliph 'Umar رضى الله عنه spent twelve years in learning and meditating over this Surah, and the blessed Companion Abdullah ibn 'Umar spent eight years to learn it. (Qurṭubī)

As we have said, the Sūrah Al-Fātiḥah is the gist and the essence of the Holy Qur'ān. It deals with three basic themes - firstly, the affirmation of Allah as the Lord (Rabb) of the universe; secondly, the affirmation that Allah alone, and none else, is worthy of being worshipped; thirdly, the prayer for guidance. Thus, the Sūrah Al-Fātiḥah ends with the request for the straight path, and the whole of the Qur'ān is, in fact, an answer to this request - that is to say, the man who seeks the straight path will find it only in the Holy Qur'ān.

Hence it is that the Sūrah Al-Fātiḥah is immediately followed by the Sūrah Al-Baqarah which begins with the words, "That is the Book", indicating that this book is the straight path one has been seeking and praying for. Having defined the nature and function of the Holy Qur'ān, the Sūrah proceeds to state in a very brief manner the basic principles of the Islamic faith - namely, oneness of God, prophethood and hereafter (Tawḥīd, Risālah, Ākhirah). These principles have been presented in detail at the end of the Surah. In between, the Sūrah lays down the basic principles, and sometime even secondary rules in detail, for providing guidance to man in all spheres of life, modes of 'ibādah (worship), ethics, individual and social behaviour, economic relationships, ways and means of improving oneself externally and internally.

الْمُفْلِحُوْنَ ۝ۙ

With the name of Allah,

The All-Merciful, the Very-Merciful.

Alif. Lam. Mim. That Book has no doubt in it - a guidance for the God-fearing, who believe in the unseen, and are steadfast in salah, and spend out of what We have provided them; and who believe in what has been revealed to you and what has been revealed before you, and do have faith in the Hereafter. It is these who are on guidance given by their Lord; and it is just these who are successful. (Verses 1-5)

The Sūrah begins with the Arabic letters Alif, Lām and Mīm (equivalents of A, L and M). Several Sūrahs begin with a similar combination of letters, for example, Hā, Mīm, or Alif, Lām, Mīm, Ṣād. Each of these letters is pronounced separately without the addition of a vowel sound after it. So, the technical term for them is مُتَطَاعَات (Muqatta'at: isolated letters).

According to certain commentators, the isolated letters are the names of the Surahs at the beginning of which they occur. According to others, they are the symbols of the Divine Names. But the majority of the blessed Companions and the generation next to them, the Tabi'in, and also the later authoritative scholars have preferred the view that the isolated letters are symbols or mysteries, the meaning of which is known to Allah alone or may have been entrusted as a special secret to the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم not to be communicated to anyone else. That is why no commentary or explanation of these letters has at all been reported from him. The great commentator Al-Qurtubī has adopted this view of the matter, which is summarized below:

"According to 'Amir Āl-Sha'bī, Sufyān Al-Thawrī and many masters of the science of Ḥadīth, every revealed book contains certain secret signs and symbols and mysteries of Allah; the isolated letters too are the secrets of Allah in the Holy Qur'ān, and hence they are among the مُتَشَابِهَات (Mutashābihāt: of hidden meaning), the meaning of which is known to Allah alone, and it is not permissible for us even to enter into any discussion with regard to them. The isolated letters are not, however, without some benefit to us. Firstly, to believe in them and to recite them is in itself a great merit. Secondly, in reciting them we receive spiritual blessings from the unseen world, even if we are not aware of the fact. Al-Qurtubī adds: "The Blessed Caliphs Abū Bakr, 'Umar, 'Uthmān and 'Alī, and most of the Companions like 'Abdullāh ibn Mas'ūd رضى الله تعالى عنه, firmly held the view that these letters are the secrets of Allah, that we should believe in them as having descended from Allah and recite them exactly in the form in which they have descended, but should not be inquisitive about their meanings, which would be improper". Citing Al-Qurṭubī and others, Ibn Kathīr too prefers this view. On the other hand, interpretations of the isolated letters have been reported from great and authentic scholars. Their purpose, however, was only to provide symbolical interpretation, or to awaken the minds of the readers to the indefinite possibilities of meanings that lie hidden in the Holy Qur'ān, or just to simplify things; they never wished to claim that these were the meanings intended by Allah Himself. Therefore, it would not be justifiable to challenge such efforts at interpretation since it would go against the considered judgment of veritable scholars.

The sentence "That Book has no doubt in it" raises a grammatical and exegetical problem, for the first phrase in the Arabic text reads as "ذَٰلِكَ الْكِتَٰبُ" : Dhālikal kitāb. Now, the word dhālika (that) is used to point out a distant thing, while the word kitāb (book) obviously refers to the Holy Qur'ān itself, which is present before us. So, this particular demonstrative pronoun does not seem to be appropriate to the situation. There is, however, a subtle indication. The pronoun refers back to the prayer for the straight path made in the Sūrah Al-Fātiḥah, implying that the prayer has been granted and the Holy Qur'ān is the answer to the request, which gives a detailed account of the straight path to those who seek guidance and are willing to follow it.

Having indicated this, the Holy Qur'ān makes a claim about itself: "There is no doubt in it". There are two ways in which doubt or suspicion may arise with regard to the validity or authenticity of statement. Either the statement itself is erroneous, and thus becomes subject to doubt; or, the listener makes a mistake in understanding it. In the latter case, the statement does not really become subject to doubt, even if someone comes to suspect it out of a defective or distorted understanding - as the Holy Qur'ān itself reminds us later in the same Sūrah: إِنْ كُنْتُمْ فِي رَيْبٍ: "If you are in doubt..." (2:23). So, in spite of the doubts and objections of a thousand men of small or perverse understanding, it would still be true to say that there is no doubt in this book - either with regard to it having been revealed by Allah, or with regard to its contents.

هُدًى لِلْمُتَّقِينَ: "A guidance for the God-fearing": The Arabic word for the God-fearing is Muttaqin, derived from Taqwā which literally means "to fear, to refrain from", and in Islamic terminology it signifies fearing Allah and refraining from the transgression of His commandments. As for the Holy Qur'ān being a guidance to the God-fearing, it actually means that although the Holy Qur'ān provides guidance not only to mankind but to all existents in the universe, yet the special guidance which is the means of salvation in the other world is reserved for the God-fearing alone. We have already explained in the commentary on the Sūrah "Al-Fātiḥah" that there are three degrees of divine guidance - the first degree being common to the whole of mankind and even to animals etc., the second being particular to men and *jinn*s, and the third being special to those who are close to Allah and have found His favour, the different levels of this last degree being limitless. It is the last two degrees of guidance which are intended in the verse under discussion. With regard to the second degree, the implication is that those who accept the guidance will have the hope of being elevated to the rank of the God-fearing. With reference to the third degree, the suggestion is that those who are already God-fearing may receive further and limitless guidance through the Holy Qur'ān. This explanation should be sufficient to remove the objection that guidance is needed much more by those who are not God-fearing, for now we know that the specification of the God-fearing does not entail a denial of guidance to those who not possess this qualification.

The next two verses delineate the characteristic qualities of the God-fearing, suggesting that these are the people who have received guidance, whose path is the straight path, and that he who seeks the straight path should join their company, adopt their beliefs and their way of life. It is perhaps in order to enforce this suggestion that the Holy Qur'an, immediately after pointing out the attributes peculiar to the God-fearing, proceeds to say:

أُولَئِكَ عَلَىٰ هُدًى مِّن رَّبِّهِمْ وَأُولَئِكَ هُمُ الْمُفْلِحُونَ ٥

It is these who are on guidance given by their Lord, and it is just these who are successful.

The delineation of the qualities of the God-fearing in these two verses also contains, in essence, a definition of Faith (Īmān) and an account of its basic tenets and of the fundamental principles of righteous conduct:

الَّذِينَ يُؤْمِنُونَ بِالْغَيْبِ وَيُقِيمُونَ الصَّلَاةَ وَمِمَّا رَزَقْنَاهُمْ يُنْفِقُونَ ٥

Who believe in the unseen, and are steadfast in Salah and spend out of what We have provided them.

Thus, the first of the two verses, mentions three qualities of the God-fearing - belief in the unseen, being steadfast in Salāh, and spending in the way of Allah. Many important considerations arise out of this verse, the most significant being the meaning and definition of Īmān (Faith).

Who are the God-fearing

The Definition of Īmān

The Holy Qur'an has provided a comprehensive definition of Iman in only two words يُؤْمِنُونَ بِالْغَيْبِ "Believe in the unseen". If one has fully understood the meaning of the words Īmān and Ghayb, one will have also understood the essential reality of Īmān.

Lexically, the Arabic word Īmān signifies accepting with complete certitude the statement made by someone out of one's total confidence and trust in him. Endorsing someone's statement with regard to sensible or observable facts is, therefore, not Īmān. For example, if one man describes a piece of cloth as black, and another man endorses the statement, it may be called Taṣḍīq (confirmation) but not Īmān, for such an endorsement is based on personal observation, and does, in no way, involve any confidence or trust in the man who has made the statement. In the terminology of the Sharī'ah, Īmān signifies accepting with complete certitude the statement made by a prophet only out of one's total confidence and trust in him and without the need of personal observation.¹

As for the word Ghaib, lexically it denotes things which are not known to man in an evident manner, or which are not apprehensible through the five senses. The Holy Qur'an uses this word to indicate all the things which we cannot know through the five senses or through reason, but which have been reported to us by the Holy Prophet ﷺ. These include the essence and the attributes of Allah, matters pertaining to destiny, heaven and hell and what they contain, the Day of Judgment and the things which happen on that Day, divine books, all the prophets who have preceded the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم in short, all the things mentioned in the last two verses of the Sūrah Al-Baqarah. Thus, the third verse of the Sūrah states the basic creed of the Islamic faith in its essence, while the last two verses provide the details.

So, belief in the unseen ultimately comes to mean having firm faith in everything that the Holy Prophet has taught us - subject to the necessary condition that the teaching in question must have come down to us through authentic and undeniable sources. This is how the overwhelming majority of Muslim scholars generally define 'Iman' (See al-'Aqidah al-Tahawiyyah, 'Aqa'id al-Nasafi etc.).

According to this definition, 'Imān' signifies faith and certitude, and not mere knowledge. For, a mental knowledge of the truth is possessed by Satan himself, and even by many disbelievers - for example, they knew very well that the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم was truthful and that his teachings were true, but they did not have faith in him nor did they accept his teachings with their heart, and hence they are not Muslims.

The Meaning of 'Establishing' Salāh

2. The second quality of the God-fearing is that they are "steadfast in the prayer." The verb employed by the Holy Qur'an here is

1. It would be helpful to note that in the everyday idiom of the West, and even in modern social sciences, "faith" has come to mean no more than an intense emotional state or "a fixe emotion". As against this, the Islamic conception of 'Imān' is essentially intellectual, in the original signification of "Intellect" which the modern West has altogether forgotten.

Yuqīmūna (generally rendered in English translations as "they establish", which comes from the word Iqamah signifying "to straighten out"). So, the verb implies not merely saying one's prayers, but performing the prayers correctly in all possible ways and observing all the prescribed conditions, whether obligatory (Fard) or necessary (Wājib) or commendable (Mustahabb). The concept includes regularity and perpetuity in the performance of Ṣalāh as also an inward concentration, humility and awe. At this point, it may be noted that the term does not mean a particular ṣalāh, instead, it includes all fard, wājib and nafl prayers.

Now to sum up - the God-fearing are those who offer their prayers regularly and steadfastly in accordance with the regulations of the Shari'ah, and also observe the spiritual etiquette outwardly and inwardly.

Spending in the way of Allah: Categories

The third quality of the God-fearing is that they spend in the way of Allah. The correct position in this respect, which has been adopted by the majority of commentators, is that it includes all the forms of spending in the way of Allah, whether it be the fard (obligatory) Zakāh or the Wājib (necessary) alms-giving or just voluntary and nafl (supererogatory) acts of charity. For, the Holy Qur'an usually employs the word Infaq with reference to nafl (supererogatory) alms-giving or in a general sense, but reserves the word Zakāh for the obligatory alms-giving. The simple phrase: يَسَارِفُونَ : "Spend out of what We have provided them" inspires us to spend in the way of Allah by drawing our attention to the fact that anything and everything we possess is a gift from Allah and His trust in our hands, and that even if we spend all our possessions in the way of Allah, it would be proper and just and no favour to Him. But Allah in His mercy asks us to spend in His way "out of" what (مَا) he has provided - that is, only a part and not the whole.

Among the three qualities of the God-fearing, faith is, of course, the most important, for it is the basic principle of all other principles, and no good deed can find acceptance or validity without faith. The other two qualities pertain to good deeds. Now, good deeds are many; one could make a long list of even those which are either obligatory or necessary. So, the question arises as to why the Holy Qur'ān should be content to choose for mention only two - namely, performing Ṣalāh and spending in the way of Allah. In answering this question, one could say that all the good deeds which are obligatory or necessary for man pertain either to his person and his body or to his possessions. Among the personal and bodily forms of 'Ibādāt (acts of worship), the most important is the Ṣalāh. Hence the Holy Qur'an mentions only this form in the present passage. As for the different forms of 'Ibādāt pertaining to possessions, the word Infaq (spending) covers all of them. Thus, in mentioning only two good deeds, the Holy Qur'ān has by implication included all the forms of worship and all good deeds. The whole verse, then, comes to mean that the God-fearing are those who are perfect in their faith and in their deeds both, and that Islam is the sum of faith and practice. In other words, while providing a complete definition of 'Imān (Faith), the verse indicates the meaning of Islam as well. So, let us find out how 'Imān and Islam are distinct from each other.

The distinction between 'Imān and Islam

Lexically, 'Imān signifies the acceptance and confirmation of something with one's heart, while Islam signifies obedience and submission. 'Imān pertains to the heart; so does Islam, but it is related to all the other parts of the human body as well. From the point of view of the Shari'ah, however, 'Imān is not valid without Islam, nor Islam without 'Imān. In other words, it is not enough to have faith in Allah and the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم in one's heart unless the tongue expresses the faith and also affirms one's allegiance and submission. Similarly, an oral declaration of faith and allegiance is not valid unless one has faith in one's heart.

In short, 'Imān, and Islam have different connotations from the lexical point of view. It is on the basis of this lexical distinction that the Holy Qur'ān and Ḥadīth refer to a difference between the two. From the point of view of the Sharī'ah, however, the two are inextricably linked together, and one cannot be valid without the other - as is borne out by the Holy Qur'ān itself.

When Islam, or an external declaration of allegiance, is not accompanied by ʿImān or internal faith, the Holy Qurʾān terms it as Nifāq (hypocrisy), and condemns it as a greater crime than an open rejection of Islam:

إِنَّ الْمُنَافِقِينَ فِي الدَّرَكِ الْأَسْفَلِ مِنَ النَّارِ

Surely the hypocrites will be in the lowest depths of Hell. (4:145)

In explanation of this verse let us add that so far as the physical world goes, we can only be sure of the external state of a man, and cannot know his internal state with any degree of certainty. So in the case of men who orally declare themselves to be Muslims without having faith in their heart, the Shariʿah requires us to deal with them as we would deal with a Muslim in worldly affairs; but in the other world their fate would be worse than that of the ordinary disbelievers. Similarly, if ʿImān or acknowledgment in the heart is not accompanied by external affirmation and allegiance, the Holy Qurʾān regards this too as kufr or rejection and denial of the Truth - speaking of the infidels, it says:

يَعْرِفُونَهُ كَمَا يَعْرِفُونَ أَبْنَاءَهُمْ

They know him (that is, the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم) as they know their own sons (2:146);

or in another place:

جَحَدُوا بِهَا وَاسْتَيْقَنَتْهَا أَنْفُسُهُمْ ظُلْمًا وَعُلُوًّا

Their souls knew them (the signs sent by Allah) to be true, yet they denied them in their wickedness and their pride. (27:14)

My respected teacher, ʿAllamah Sayyid Muḥammad Anwar Shāh used to explain it thus - the expanse which ʿImān and Islam have to cover in the spiritual journey is the same, and the difference lies only in the beginning and the end; that is to say, ʿImān starts from the heart and attains perfection in external deeds, while Islam starts from external deeds and can be regarded as perfect when it reaches the heart.

To sum up, ʿImān is not valid, if acknowledgment in the heart does not attain to external affirmation and allegiance; similarly, Islam is not valid, if external affirmation and allegiance does not attain to confirmation by the heart. Imām Ghazzālī and Imām Subki both have arrived at the same conclusion, and in Musāmahah, Imām Ibn al-Humām reports the agreement of all the authentic scholars in this respect.²

...who believe in what has been revealed to you and in what has been revealed before you, and do have faith in the Hereafter.

This verse speaks of some other attributes of the God-fearing, giving certain details about faith in the unseen with a special mention of

2. Today one finds a very wide-spread confusion, sometimes amounting to a total incomprehension, with regard to the distinction between Islam and 'Imān, essentially under the influence of Western modes of thought and behaviour and, to be more specific, that of the ever-proliferating Protestant sects and schools of theology. Since the middle of the 19th century there have sprouted in almost every Muslim country a host of self-styled Reformists, Revivalists, Modernists et al, each pretending to have understood the "real" Islam for the first time, and each adopting an extremist, though untenable, posture with regard to Islam and 'Imān. On the one hand, we have people claiming that Islam is only a matter of the "heart" (a word which has during the last four hundred years been used in the West as an equivalent of "emotion" or, worse still, of "emotional agitation") or of "religious experience" (a very modish term brought into currency by William James). As a corollary, they stubbornly refuse to see the need for a fixed ritual or an ethical code, all of which they gladly leave to social exigency or individual preference. They base their claims on the unquestioned axiom that religion is "personal" relationship between the individual and "his" God. It is all too obvious that this genre of Modernist "Islam" is the progeny of Martin Luther with cross-pollination from Rousseau. On the other hand, we have fervent and sometimes violent champions of Islam insisting on a merely external performance of rituals - more often on a mere conformity to moral regulations, and even these, of their liking. They would readily exclude, and are anyhow indifferent to, the internal dimension of Islam. A recent modification of this stance (in the wake of a certain Protestant pioneering, it goes without saying) has been to replace divinely ordained rituals by acts of social service or welfare, giving them the status and value of acts of worship. Counselling on divorce, abortion, premarital sex and the rest of the baggage having already become a regular part of the functions of a Protestant clergyman, it would not be too fond to expect, even on the part of our Modernists, the speedy inclusion of acts of entertainment as well. There is still another variety of deviationists, more visible and vociferous than the rest, and perhaps more pervasive and pernicious in their influence, finding easy credence among a certain section of Muslims with a sloppy western-style education. While dispensing with the subtle distinctions between Islam and 'Imān, they reduce Islam itself to a mere system of social organization, or even to state-craft. According to their way of looking at things, if Muslims fail to set up a social and political organization of a specified shape, they would cease to be Muslims. Applied to the history of Islam, this fanciful notion would lead (Continued) faith in hereafter. Commenting on this verse, the blessed Companions 'Abdullāh ibn Mas'ūd and 'Abdullāh ibn 'Abbās رضى الله عنهم اجمعين have said that in the days of the Holy Prophet ﷺ God-fearing Muslims were of two kinds, - those who used to be associators and disbelievers but accepted Islam, and those who used to be among the people of the Book (that is, Jews and Christians) but embraced Islam later on; the preceding verse refers to the first group, and this verse to the second. Hence this verse specifically mentions belief in the earlier Divine Books along with belief in the Holy Qur'ān, for, according to the Ḥadīth, people in the second group deserve a double recompense, firstly, for believing in and following the earlier Books before the Holy Qur'ān came to replace them, and secondly, for believing in and following the Holy Qur'ān when it came as the final Book of Allah. Even today it is obligatory for every Muslim to believe in the earlier Divine Books except that now the belief has to take this form: everything that Allah has revealed in the earlier Books is true (excepting the changes and distortions introduced by selfish people), and that it was incumbent upon the people for whom those Books had been sent to act according to them, but now that all the earlier Books

(Continued) to the grotesque conclusion that no Muslim had ever existed. These are only a few examples of the intellectual distortions produced by refusing to define Islam and 'Imān clearly and ignoring the distinction between the two. Contrary to all such modernizing deviations, Islam in fact means establishing a particular relationship of obedience and servitude with Allah. This relationship arises neither out of vague "religious experiences" nor out of social regimentation; in order to attain it, one has to accept all the doctrines and to act upon all the commandments specified in the Holy Qur'ān, the Ḥadīth and the Shari'ah. These doctrines and commandments cover all the spheres of human life, individual or collective, right up from acts of worship down to social, political and economic relations among men, and codes of ethics and behaviour, morals and manners, and their essential purpose is to produce in man a genuine attitude of obedience to Allah. If one acts according to the Shari'ah, one, no doubt, gains many worldly benefits, individual as well as collective. These benefits may be described as the raison d'être of the commandments, but are in no way their essential object, nor should a servant of Allah seek them for themselves in obeying Him, nor does the success or failure of a Muslim as a Muslim depend on attaining them. When a man has fully submitted himself to the commandments of Allah in everything he does, he has already succeeded as a Muslim, whether he receives the related worldly benefits or not.

and Shari'ahs have been abrogated, one must act according to the Holy Qur'an alone. ³

3. Exactly as predicted by a Hadith, today we see all around us a proliferation of "knowledge" and of "writing". One of the dangerous forms the process has taken is the indiscriminate translation at least into European languages and the popularization of the sacred books of all possible religious and metaphysical traditions - not only the Hindu, the Chinese or the Japanese, but also the Shamanic or the Red Indian. The lust for reading sacred books has virtually grown into a mania, specially among the modern young people with their deep sense of being uprooted and disinherited, and all considerations of aptitude have been contemptuously set aside. In these circumstances, Muslims with a Western orientation are naturally impelled to ask themselves as to what they can or should make of such books which sometimes seem to offer similarities and parallels to the Holy Qur'an itself, and more often to the Sufi doctrines. The problem has already attained noticeable proportions, for in 1974 the government of Turkey found it necessary to ban the entry of certain Hindu sacred books like the Bhagavadgita and Upanishads. The correct doctrinal position in this respect is that it is obligatory for every Muslim, as an essential part of the Islamic creed, to believe in all the prophets and messengers of Allah and in the Divine Books (not in their distorted forms, but as they were originally revealed) that have specifically been mentioned by their names in the Holy Qur'an, and also to believe that Allah has sent His messengers and His books for the guidance of all the peoples and all the ages, and that Muhammad ﷺ is the last prophet and the Holy Qur'an the final Book of Allah which has come down to replace the earlier Books and Shari'ahs. As to the question of the authenticity and divine origin of a particular book held in reverence by an earlier religion or metaphysical tradition, a Muslim is not allowed to affirm such a claim unequivocally, nor should he unnecessarily reject such a possibility. In so far as contents of the book concerned agree with what the Holy Qur'an has to say on the subject, we may accept the statement as true, otherwise spiritual etiquette requires an average Muslim to keep quiet and not meddle with things which he is not likely to understand. As for reading the sacred books of other traditions, it should be clearly borne in mind that a comparative study of this nature requires a very special aptitude which is extremely rare, and hence demands great caution. A cursory reading of sacred books, motivated by an idle curiosity or by a craze for mere information, may very well lead to an intellectual disintegration or to something still worse, instead of helping in the "discovery of the truth" and the acquisition of "peace" which a comparative study is widely supposed to promise. Even when the aptitude and the knowledge necessary for the task is present, such a study can be carried out only under the supervision of an authentic spiritual master. In any case, we cannot insist too much on the perils of the enterprise.

An argument to the Finality of Prophethood

The mode of expression helps us to infer from this verse the fundamental principle that the Holy Prophet Muḥammad صلى الله عليه وسلم is the last of all the prophets, and the Book revealed to him is the final revelation and the last Book of Allah. For, had Allah intended to reveal another Book or to continue. The mode of revelation even after the Holy Qur'ān, this verse, while prescribing belief in the earlier Books as necessary for Muslims, must also have referred to belief in the Book or Books to be revealed in the future. In fact, such a statement was all the more needed, for people were already familiar with the necessity of believing in the Torah, the Evangile and the earlier Books, and such a belief was in regular practice too, but if prophethood and revelation were to continue even after the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم, it was essential that the coming of another prophet and another book should be clearly indicated so that people were not left in doubt about this possibility. So, in defining 'Imān', the Holy Qur'ān mentions the earlier prophets and the earlier Books, but does not make the slightest reference to a prophet or Book to come after the last Prophet ﷺ. The matter does not end with this verse. The Holy Qur'ān touches upon the subject again and again in no less than forty or fifty verses, and in all such places it mentions the prophets, the Books and the revelation preceding the Holy Prophet ﷺ but nowhere is there even so much as a hint with regard to the coming of a prophet or of a revelation in the future, belief in whom or which should be necessary. We cite some verses to demonstrate the point:

وَمَا أَرْسَلْنَا مِنْ قَبْلِكَ

And what We have sent down before you. (16:43)

وَلَقَدْ أَرْسَلْنَا رُسُلًا مِنْ قَبْلِكَ

And We have certainly sent messengers before you". (40:78)

وَلَقَدْ أَرْسَلْنَا مِنْ قَبْلِكَ رُسُلًا

And certainly before you We have sent messengers. (20:47)

وَمَا أَنْزَلْنَا مِنْ قَبْلِكَ

And what was revealed before you. (4:60)

وَلَقَدْ أُوحِيَ إِلَيْكَ وَإِلَى الَّذِينَ مِنْ قَبْلِكَ

And it has certainly been revealed to you and to those who have gone before you... (39:65)

كَذَلِكَ يُوحِي إِلَيْكَ وَإِلَى الَّذِينَ مِنْ قَبْلِكَ

Thus He reveals to you and He revealed to those who have gone before you. (42:3)

كَمَا كُتِبَ عَلَى الَّذِينَ مِنْ قَبْلِكَ

Fasting is decreed (literally, written) for you as it was decreed for those before you. (2:183)

مِثْلَ مَا كُنَّا نُرْسِلُكَ مِنْ قَبْلِكَ

Such was Our way with the messengers whom We sent before you. (17:77)

In these and similar verses, whenever the Holy Qur'an speaks of the sending down of a Book or a revelation or a prophet or a messenger, it always attaches the conditional phrase, Min qabl (before) or Min Qablik (before you), and nowhere does it employ or suggest an expression like min ba'd (after you). Even if other verses of the Holy Qur'an had not been explicit about the finality of the prophethood of Muhammad ﷺ and about the cessation of revelation, the mode of expression adopted by the Holy Qur'an in the present verse would in itself have been sufficient to prove these points.

The God-fearing have Faith in the Hereafter

The other essential quality of the God-fearing mentioned in this verse is that they have faith in Al-Ākhirah (the Hereafter). Lexically the Akhirah signifies 'that which comes after something'; in the present context, it indicates a relationship of contrast with the physical world, and thus signifies the other world which is beyond physical reality as we know it and also beyond the sensuous or rational perception of man. The Holy Qur'an gives to the Hereafter other names too - for example, Dar al-Qarar (the Ever-lasting Abode), Dar al-Hayawān (the Abode of Eternal Life) and Al-'Uqba (the Consequent). The Holy Qur'an is full of vivid descriptions of the Hereafter, of the joys of heaven and of the horrors of hell. Although faith in the Hereafter is included in faith in the unseen which has already been mentioned, yet the Holy Qur'an refers to it specifically because it may, in a sense, be regarded as the most important among the constitutive elements of faith in so far as it inspires man to translate faith into practice, and motivates him to act in accordance with the requirements of his faith. Along with the two doctrines of the Oneness of God and of prophethood, this is the third doctrine which is common to all the prophets and upon which all the Shari'ahs are agreed.⁴

Faith in the Hereafter: A revolutionary belief

The belief in the Hereafter, among Islamic doctrines, is the one whose role in history has been what is nowadays described as revolutionary, for it began with transmuting the morals and manners of the followers of the Holy Qur'an, and gradually gave them a place of distinction and eminence even in the political history of mankind. The reason is obvious. Consider the case of those who believe that life in the physical world is the only life, its joys the only joys and its pains the only pains, whose only goal is to seek the pleasures of the senses and the fulfilment of physical or emotional needs, and who stubbornly refuse to believe in the life of the Hereafter, in the Day of Judgment

4. There is a deplorable misconception with regard to the Hereafter, quite wide-spread among those who are not, or do not want to be, familiar with the Holy Qur'an and who have at the same time been touched by the rationalism, materialism and libertarianism of the Western society, which makes them cherish certain mental and emotional reservations at least about the horrors of hell, if not about the joys of heaven. Some of them have gone to the preposterous length of supposing that these are the inventions of the 'Ulama' whom they describe as 'abscurantists' - of course, in the jargon of the Western Reformation and of the so-called Enlightenment. They ignore the obvious fact that faith in the Holy Qur'an necessitates faith in every word of the Holy Qur'an, and that it is not possible to affirm one part of the Book while denying another and yet remain a Muslim-- أَفْتَرِمُونَ : بِغَضِ الْكُتُبِ وَتَكْفُرُونَ : "What, do you believe in one part of the Book and deny another?" (2:85) Moreover, these enlightened Muslims have never made a serious attempt to take into account the complex historical factors that led to the rise of the Enlightenment in Europe, nor the meaning of the subsequent development in ethical ideas. We may, therefore, give a few and very brief indications. There has been no dearth, even in the hey-day of the Enlightenment, of thinkers who have had no scruples in dispensing with ethics altogether which they look upon as superstition or tyranny and hence a blight for the human personality.

and the assessment of everyone's deeds, and in the requital of the deeds in the other world. When such people find the distinction between truth and falsehood, between the permissible and the forbidden, interfering with the hunt for the gratification of their desires, such differentiations naturally become intolerable to them.

Now, who or what can effectively prevent them from committing crimes? The penal laws made by the state or by any other human authority can never serve either as real deterrents to crime or as agents of moral reform. Habitual criminals soon grow used to the penalties. A man, milder or gentler of temperament or just timid, may agree to forego the satisfaction of his desires for fear of punishment, but he would do so only to the extent that he is in danger of being caught. But in his privacy where the laws of the state cannot encroach upon his freedom of action, who can force him to renounce his pleasures and accept the yoke of restraints? It is the belief in the Hereafter and the fear of Allah, and that alone, which can bring man's private behaviour in line with his public behaviour, and establish a harmony between the inner state and the outer. For the God-fearing man knows for certain that even in the secrecy of a well-guarded and sealed room and in the darkness of night somebody is watching him, and somebody is writing down the smallest thing he does. Herein lies the secret of the clean and pure society which arose in the early days of Islam when the mere sight of a Muslim, of his manners and morals, was enough to make non-believers literally fall in love with Islam. For (Continued) But even those thinkers who have recognised the indispensable need for regulations and rules, if not principles, for human conduct in order to preserve social order or to make social life possible, have in general had no qualms about discarding the very idea of divine sanction - despite the intimation of Voltaire, the arch-priest of relationalism, that man would have to invent God, even if He did not exist. As to the nature and origin of the ethical regulations and the sanction behind them, Western thinkers have from time to time tried to promote various agencies - the sovereign state, social will or convention or custom, the supposedly pure and innocent nature of man himself with its capacity for self-regulation, and finally biological laws. The second half of the twentieth century has witnessed the withering away of all these ethical authorities which has left the modern man without even a dim prospect of constructing a new illusion. It is only in this perspective that one can properly consider the significance of the belief in the hereafter for human society.

true Faith in the Hereafter, certitude must follow Oral Affirmation.

Before we proceed, we may point out that in speaking of faith in the hereafter as one of the qualities of the God-fearing, the Holy Qur'an does not use the word yu'minūna (believe) but the word yūqinūna (have complete certitude), for the opposite of belief is denial, and that of certitude is doubt and hesitation. Thus, we find a subtle suggestion here that in order to attain the perfection of 'Imān it is not enough to affirm the hereafter orally, but one must have a complete certitude which leaves no room for doubt - the kind of certitude which comes when one has seen a thing with one's own eyes. It is an essential quality of the God-fearing that they always have present before their eyes the whole picture of how people will have to present themselves for judgment before Allah in the hereafter, how their deeds will be assessed and how they will receive reward or punishment according to what they have been doing in this world. A man who amasses wealth by usurping what rightfully belongs to others, or who gains petty material ends by adopting unlawful means forbidden by Allah, may declare his faith in the hereafter a thousand times and the Shari'ah may accept him as a Muslim in the context of worldly concerns, but he does not possess the certitude which the Holy Qur'an demands of him. And it is this certitude alone which transforms human life, and which brings in its wake as a reward the guidance and triumph promised in verse 5 of this Sūrah:

أُولَٰئِكَ عَلَىٰ هُدًى مِّن رَّبِّهِمْ وَأُولَٰئِكَ هُمُ الْمُفْلِحُونَ

It is these who are on guidance given by their Lord; and it is just these who are successful.

Verses 6-7

إِنَّ الَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا سَوَاءٌ عَلَيْهِمْ ءَأَنذَرْتَهُمْ أَمْ لَمْ تُنذِرْهُمْ لَا يُؤْمِنُونَ ۝ خَتَمَ اللَّهُ عَلَىٰ قُلُوبِهِمْ وَعَلَىٰ سَمْعِهِمْ وَعَلَىٰ أَبْصَارِهِمْ غِشَاوَةٌ وَلَهُمْ عَذَابٌ عَظِيمٌ ۝

Surely for those who have disbelieved, it is all the same whether you warn them or you warn them not: they would not believe. Allah has set a seal on their hearts and on their hearing, and on their eyes there is a covering; and for them there lies a mighty punishment.

(Verses 6-7)

After affirming the Holy Qur'ān as the Book of Guidance and as being beyond all doubt, the first five verses of the present Surah refer to those who derive full benefit from this Book and whom the Holy Qur'ān has named as Mū'minūn (true Muslims) or Muttaqūn (the God-fearing), and also delineate their characteristic qualities which distinguish them from others. The next fifteen verses speak of those who refuse to accept this guidance, and even oppose it out of sheer spite and blind malice. In the time of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم there were two distinct groups of such people. On the one hand were those who came out in open hostility and rejection, and whom the Holy Qur'ān has termed as kafirūn (disbelievers); on the other hand were those who did not, on account of their moral depravity and greed, had even the courage to speak out their minds and to express their disbelief clearly, but adopted the way of deceit and duplicity. They tried to convince the Muslims that they had faith in the Holy Qur'ān and its teachings, that they were as good a Muslim as any and would support the Muslims against the disbelievers. But they nursed denial and rejection in their hearts, and would, in the company of disbelievers, assure them that they had nothing to do with Islam, but mixed with Muslims in order to deceive them and to spy on them. The Holy Qur'ān has given them the title of Munāfiqūn (hypocrites). Thus, these fifteen verses deal with those who refuse to believe in the Holy Qur'ān - the first two are concerned with open disbelievers, and the other thirteen with hypocrites, their signs and characteristics and their ultimate end.

Taking the first twenty verses of this Sūrah together in all their detail, one can see that the Holy Qur'ān has, on the one hand, pointed out to us the source of guidance which is the Book itself, and, on the other, divided mankind into two distinct groups on the basis of their acceptance or rejection of this guidance - on the one side are those who have chosen to follow and to receive guidance, and are hence called Mū'minūn (true Muslims) or Muttaqūn (the God-fearing); on the other side are those who reject the guidance or deviate from it, and are hence called Kāfirūn (disbelievers) or Munāfiqūn (hypocrites). People of the first kind are those whose path is the object of the prayer at the end of the Surah Al-Fātiḥah, صِرَاطَ الَّذِينَ أَنْعَمْتَ عَلَيْهِمْ : "the path of those on whom You have bestowed Your grace", and people of the second kind are those against whose path refuge has been sought غَيْرِ الْمَغْضُوبِ عَلَيْهِمْ وَلَا الضَّالِّينَ "Not of those who have incurred Your wrath, nor of those who have gone astray.

This teaching of the Holy Qur'an provides us with a fundamental principle. A division of mankind into different groups must, in order to be meaningful, be based on differences in principle, not on considerations of birth, race, colour, geography or language. The Holy Qur'an has given a clear verdict in this respect:

خَلَقَكُمْ فَمِنْكُمْ كَافِرٌ وَمِنْكُمْ مُؤْمِنٌ

"It was He that created you: yet some of you are disbelievers and some of you are believers" (64:2).

As we have said, the first two verses of this Surah speak of those disbelievers who had become so stubborn and obstinate in their denial and disbelief that they were not prepared to hear the truth or to consider a clear argument. In the case of such depraved people, the usual way of Allah has always been, and is, that they are given a certain kind of punishment even in this world - that is to say, their hearts are sealed and their eyes and ears stopped against the truth, and in so far as truth is concerned they become as if they have no mind to think, no eyes to see and no ears to listen. The last phrase of the second verse speaks of the grievous punishment that is reserved for them in the other world. It may be observed that the prediction that: لَا يُؤْمِنُونَ : "they shall not believe" is specifically related to those disbelievers who refused to listen to the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم and who, as Allah knew, were going to die as disbelievers. This does not apply to disbelievers in general, for there were many who later accepted Islam.

What is Kufr ? (Infidelity)

As for the definition of kufr (disbelief), we may point out that lexically the word means to hide, to conceal. Ingratitude is also called kufr, because it involves the concealing or the covering up of the beneficence shown by someone. In the terminology of the Shari'ah, kufr signifies the denial of any of those things in which it is obligatory to believe. For example, the quintessence of 'Imān as well as the very basis of the Islamic creed is the requirement that one should confirm with one's heart and believe with certitude everything that the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم has brought down to us from Allah and which has been established by definite and conclusive proof; therefore, a man who has the temerity to question or disregard even a single teaching of this kind will be described as a kāfir (disbeliever or infidel).

The meaning of 'Indhār' (warning) by a Prophet

In translating the first of these two verses, we have used the English verb 'to warn' for the Arabic word Indhār. This word actually signifies bringing news which should cause alarm or concern, while Ibshār signifies bringing good news which should make people rejoice. Moreover, Indhār is not the ordinary kind of warning meant to frighten people, but one which is motivated by compassion and love, just as one warns one's children against fire or snakes or beasts. Hence a thief or a bandit or an aggressor who warns or threatens others cannot be called a Nadhīr (warner). The latter is a title specially reserved for the prophets عليهم السلام, for they warn people against the pains and punishments of the other world out of their compassion and love for their fellow men. In choosing this title for the prophets, the Holy Qur'ān has made the subtle suggestion that for those who go out to reform others it is not enough merely to convey a message, but that they must speak to their listeners with sympathy, understanding and a genuine regard for their good.

In order to comfort the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم the first of these verses tells him that some of the disbelievers are so vain, arrogant and opinionated that they, in spite of recognizing the truth, stubbornly persist in their refusal and are not prepared to hear the truth or to see obvious proofs, so that all the efforts he makes for reforming and converting them will bear no fruit, and for them it is all one whether he tries or not.

The next verse explains the reason, that is, Allah has set a seal on their hearts and ears, there is a covering on their eyes, all the avenues of knowing and understanding are thus closed, and now it would be futile to expect any change in them. A thing is sealed so that nothing may enter it from outside; the setting of a seal on their hearts and ears also means that they have altogether lost the capacity for accepting the truth.

The Holy Qur'an describes the condition of these disbelievers in terms of their hearts and ears having been sealed, but in the case of the eyes it refers to a covering. The subtle distinction arises from the fact that an idea can enter the heart from all possible directions and not from one particular direction alone, and so can a sound enter the ears; an idea or a sound can be blocked only by sealing the heart and the ears. On the contrary, the eyes work only in one direction, and can see only the things which lie in front of them; if there is a covering on them, they cease to function. (See Mazhari)

Favour withdrawn by Allah is a punishment

These two verses tell us that the other world is the place where one would receive the real punishment for one's disbelief or for some of one's sins. One may, however, receive some punishment for certain sins even in this world. Such a punishment sometimes takes a very grievous form - that is, the divine favour which helps one to reform oneself is withdrawn, so that, ignoring how one's deeds are to be assessed on the Day of Judgment, one keeps growing in disobedience and sin, and finally comes to lose even the awareness of evil. In delineating such a situation certain elders have remarked that one punishment for an evil deed is another evil deed which comes after, and one reward for a good deed is another good deed which comes after. According to a Hadīth, when a man commits a sin, a black dot appears on his heart; this first dot disturbs him just as a smudge on a white cloth is always displeasing to us; but if, instead of asking Allah's pardon for the first sin, he proceeds to commit a second, another dot shows up, thus, with every new sin the black dots go on multiplying till the whole heart turns dark, and now he can no longer see good as good nor evil as evil, and grows quite incapable of making such distinctions. The Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم added that The Holy Qur'an uses the term Ra'n or Rain (rust) for this darkness: as in Mishkāt from the Musnad of Aḥmad and Tirmidhī.

كَلَّا بَلْ رَانَ عَلَى قُلُوبِهِمْ مَا كَانُوا يَكْسِبُونَ

No. But what they did has rusted their hearts (83:14)

According to another authentic Hadīth reported by Tirmidhī from the blessed Companion Abu Hurairah رضى الله عنه the Holy Prophet ﷺ has said, "When a man commits a sin, his heart grows dark, but if he seeks Allah's pardon, it becomes clear again". (See Qurtubī)

It should be carefully noted that in announcing that it is all one whether the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم warns the disbelievers or not, the Holy Qur'an adds the condition 'Alaihim (for them), which clearly indicates that it is all one for the disbelievers alone, and not for the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم, for he would in any case get a reward for bringing the message of Allah to his fellow-men and for his efforts to teach and reform them. That is why there is not a single verse in the Holy Qur'an which should dissuade the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم from calling even such people to Islam. From this we may infer that the man who strives to spread the Word of Allah and to reform his fellow-men does always get a reward for his good deed, even if he has not been effective.

A doubt is removed

We may also answer a question which sometimes arises in connection with the second of these two verses that speaks of the hearts and the ears of the disbelievers having been sealed and of their eyes being covered. We find a similar statement in another verse of the Holy Qur'an:

كَلَّا بَلْ رَانَ عَلَى قُلُوبِهِمْ مَا كَانُوا يَكْسِبُونَ

No. But what they did has rusted their hearts. (83:14)

which makes it plain that it is their arrogance and their evil deeds themselves that have settled on their hearts as a rust. In the verse under discussion, it is this very rust which has been described as 'a seal' or 'a covering'. So, there is no occasion here to raise the objection that if Allah Himself has sealed their hearts and blocked their senses, they are helpless and cannot be held responsible for being disbelievers, and hence they should not be punished for what they have not themselves chosen to do. If we consider the two verses (2:7 and 83:14) together, we can easily see why they should be punished - in adopting the way of arrogance and pride they have, wilfully and out of their own choice, destroyed their capacity for accepting the truth, and thus they themselves are the authors of their own ruin. But Allah, being Creator of all the actions of His creatures, has in verse 2:7 attributed to Himself the setting of a seal on the hearts and the ears of the disbelievers, and has thus pointed out that when these people insisted, as a matter of their own choice, on destroying their aptitude for receiving the truth, Allah produced, as is His way in such cases, the state of insensitivity in their hearts and senses.

And among men there are some who say, "We believe in Allah and in the Last Day", Yet they are no believers. They try to deceive Allah and those who believe, when they are deceiving none but their own selves, and they are not aware. In their hearts there is a malady, so Allah has made them grow in their malady; and for them there lies a grievous punishment, for they have been lying. And when it is said to them, "Do not spread disorder on the earth", they say, "We are nothing but reformers." Beware, it is, in fact, they who spread disorder, but they are not aware. And when it is said to them, "Believe as people have believed," they say, "Shall we believe as fools believe?" Beware, it is, in fact, they who are the fools, but they do not know. And when they meet those who believe, they say, "We have entered Faith;" but when they are alone with their Satans, they say, "Indeed, we are with you; we were only mocking." It is Allah who mocks them, and lets them go on wandering blindly in their rebellion. These are the people who have bought error at the price of guidance; so their trade has brought no gain, nor have they found guidance. Their case is as if a man kindles a fire, and when it illuminates everything around him, Allah takes away their lights and leaves them in layers of darkness -- they see nothing. Deaf, dumb and blind, they shall not return. Or (it is) like a rainstorm from the sky carrying darkness, thunder and lightning; they thrust their fingers in their ears against thunderclaps for the fear of death, and Allah encompasses the disbelievers -- and lightning (all but) snatches away their eyes; every time a flash gives them light, they walk by it; and when darkness grows upon them, they stand still. And if Allah willed, He would certainly take away their hearing and their eye: surely Allah is powerful over everything. (Verses 8 - 20)

As we have seen, the Sūrah Al-Baqarah opens with the declaration that the Holy Qur'ān is beyond all doubt. The first twenty verses of the Sūrah delineate the features of those who believe in the Holy Qur'ān and of those who do not -- the first five dealing with the former, under the title of Al-Muttaqūn (the God-fearing); the next two with those disbelievers who were quite open and violent in their hostility -- that is, Al-Kafirūn (the disbelievers or the infidels), and the following thirteen with those crafty disbelievers who claimed to be Muslims but, in reality, were not so. This second variety of the disbelievers has received from the Holy Qur'an the name of Al-Mūnāfiqūn (the hypocrites).

Of these thirteen verses, the first two define the characteristic behaviour of the hypocrites thus:

وَمِنَ النَّاسِ مَنْ يَقُولُ آمَنَّا بِاللَّهِ وَيَايَوْمَ الْآخِرِ

And among the men there are some who say, 'We believe in Allah and in the Last Day', yet they are no believers. They try to deceive Allah and those who believe, when they are deceiving none but their own selves, and they are not aware. These verses expose their claim to be Muslims as false and deceitful, and show that they are only trying to be clever. Obviously, no one can deceive Allah - probably they themselves could not have had such a delusion. But the Holy Qur'an equates, in a way, their attempt to deceive the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم and the Muslims with the desire to deceive Allah Himself (See Qurṭubī)

Such a desire, the Holy Qur'an points out, can have only one consequence - they end up by deceiving no one but themselves, for Allah Himself cannot possibly be deceived, and Divine Revelation protects the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم from all trickery and deceit, so that the hypocrites themselves will have to bear, in the other world as well as in this, the punishment for their presumptuousness.

The third verse indicates why the hypocrites behave so foolishly and why they fail to see the folly of their course:

فِي قُلُوبِهِمْ مَرَضٌ فَزَادَهُمُ اللَّهُ مَرَضًا

In their hearts there is a malady, so Allah has made them grow in their malady.

Now, illness or disease, in the general medical sense, is a state in which a man has lost the balanced proportion of the elements within him necessary to keep him healthy, so that his body can no longer function properly, which may finally lead to his total destruction. In the terminology of the Holy Qur'ān and the Ḥadīth, the word 'disease' is also applied to certain mental or psychic states (we are using the two terms in the original and more comprehensive sense) which hinder man from attaining any degree of spiritual perfection, for they gradually deprive him of the ability to perform good deeds, and even of ordinary human decency, till he meets with his spiritual death. The great spiritual master, Junaid of Baghdad, has said that just as the diseases of the body arise from an imbalance among the four humours, the diseases of the heart arise from a surrender to one's physical desires. According to the present verse, the disease hidden in their hearts is unbelief and rejection of the truth, which is as much a physical sickness as a spiritual one. It is all too obvious that being ungrateful to one's creator and nourisher and going against His commandments is to be spiritually sick. Moreover, to keep this disbelief concealed for the sake of petty worldly gains and not to have the courage to speak out one's mind is no less a disease of the soul. Hypocrisy is a physical disease too in so far as the hypocrite is always shuddering for fear of being exposed. Jealousy being a necessary ingredient of hypocrisy, he cannot bear to see the Muslims growing stronger in the world, and yet the poor hypocrite cannot even have the satisfaction of unburdening his heart of the venom. No wonder that all this tension should express itself in physical ailment.

As for Allah making them grow in their malady, it means that they are jealous of the growing strength of the Muslims, but it is Allah's will to make the position of the Muslims even stronger, as they can see for themselves, which feeds their bile and keeps the disease of their hearts growing.

The fourth and the fifth verses expose the sophistry of the hypocrites - their activities threatened to produce a general chaos and disorder, and yet, in their mealy-mouthed way, they pretended to be men of good will and to be serving the cause of peace and order. The Holy Qur'ān makes it clear that oral claims alone do not decide the question whether one is working for order or disorder, for what thief would call himself a thief? It depends on what one does, not on what one says. If a man's activities do result in mischief, he will be called a mischief-maker, even if he had no such intention.

These two verses, thus, describe the state of their insensitivity and ignorance - they regard their defects as merits. The sixth verse shows the other aspect of this depravity - the merit of others (that is, the unalloyed faith of the Muslims) changes into a defect, and even becomes contemptible in their eyes.⁵

This verse also places before the hypocrites a criterion of true faith (Īmān): أَمِرُوا كَمَا آمَنَ النَّاسُ: "Believe as people have believed". According to the consensus of commentators, the Arabic word Nās: الناس (people) in this verse refers to the blessed Companions of the Holy Prophet ﷺ because it is just these 'people' who had embraced the Faith and had accepted the Holy Qur'ān as the word of Allah while it was being revealed. So, the verse indicates that the only kind of Iman (faith) acceptable to Allah is the one which should be similar to that of the blessed Companions, and that the Īmān of others would be worthy of the name only when they believe in the same things in the same way as the Companions did. In other words, the Īmān of the Companions is a touchstone for testing the Īmān of all the other Muslims; any belief or deed which departs from their faith and practice, however pleasing in its looks or good in its intention, is not valid according to the Shari'ah. There is a consensus of commentators on this position. One should also notice that the hypocrites used to call the blessed Companions 'fools' (Sufahā). This has always been the way of those who go astray - anyone who tries to show them the right path is, in their eyes, ignorant and stupid. But who could, the Holy Qur'ān points out, be more stupid than the man who refuses to see clear signs?

In the seventh verse, we see the double-facedness and trickery of the hypocrites. In the company of the Muslims, they would vociferously declare their faith in Islam; but, going back to their own

5. As for the hypocrites declaring openly that they were not prepared to believe as others did believe, and as for their dubbing the Muslims as fools, it is obvious that they could have been so outspoken only before the poor among the Muslims, otherwise they used to be very careful about keeping their disbelief concealed.)

people, would reassure them that they had never left the way of their ancestors, and had been meeting the Muslims only to make fun of them.

The eighth verse is a comment on this attitude of complacency and self-congratulation on the part of the hypocrites. They are mightily pleased with themselves in the belief that they can so easily make a fool of the Muslims and get away with it, while they are, in fact, only making a fool of themselves. For Allah has, in His forbearance and mercy, given them a long rope, but this is a provision for their being thrown into ridicule. It took place like this. Since the hypocrites saw no apparent signs of divine punishment descending on themselves, they were encouraged in their complacency and rebellion, so that the cup of their iniquity was full, and one day they were caught. Allah acted like this in response to their mockery; so, the Holy Qur'an describes this divine action too as a mockery on the part of Allah.

The ninth verse shows the basic denseness of the hypocrites - how they failed to make use of the ordinary sense of discrimination. They had grown up in a pagan society, and knew very well what the way of the infidels was. Now they had become familiar enough with Islam too, and could easily see the difference. But, in their greed, and for the sake of petty worldly profit, they still chose disbelief as against Islam, and bartered away something as invaluable as 'Imān (faith) for something as worthless, and even harmful as kufr (infidelity). In giving the name of 'trade' or 'commerce' to this action, the Holy Qur'an suggests that these worldly-wise men had no understanding even of the art of trading.

The last four verses bring out the miserable plight of the hypocrites with the help of two extended similes. The choice of two examples is meant to divide the hypocrites into two kinds of men. On the one hand were those in whom disbelief had taken deep roots, so that they had little inclination towards Islam, but pretended to be Muslims for worldly motives - the Holy Qur'an compares them to the man who, having found light, again loses it, and is left in darkness. On the other hand were those who did recognize the truth of Islam, and sometimes wished to be genuine Muslims, but worldly interests would not allow them to do so, and they remained in a perpetual state of hesitation and doubt - they have been likened to the men caught in a thunderstorm who move forward a step or two when there is a flash of lightning, but, when it is over, again get stuck. In the course of these parables, the hypocrites have also been warned that they are not beyond the power of Allah, and that He can, as and when He likes, take away their sight and hearing, and even destroy them.

Injunctions and related considerations

(1) It has sometimes been debated as to whether the distinction between Kufr (infidelity or disbelief) and Nifāq (hypocrisy) still holds good even after the days of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم. The correct position with regard to this question is this. At that time, there were two ways of identifying a hypocrite and declaring him to be one - either Allah Himself informed the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم through revelation that such and such a man was not a Muslim at heart but a hypocrite, or a man through some word or deed overtly repugnant to the Islamic creed or practice showed himself up as a hypocrite, thus providing a clear evidence against himself. Divine revelation having ceased with the departure of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم from this world, the first way of identifying a hypocrite is no longer available, but the second way is still valid. That is to say, if a man is found, on certain evidence, to be guilty, in word or deed, of rejecting or opposing or distorting or holding in scorn the basic doctrines of Islam undeniably established by the Holy Qur'ān, the Ḥadīth and ijmā' (consensus), he would be regarded as a Munāfiq (hypocrite) in spite of his claim to be a true Muslim. The Holy Qur'ān gives such a hypocrite the name of a mulhid or heretic- الَّذِينَ يَلْحَدُونَ فِي آيَاتِنَا : "Those who distort Our verses", 41:40), and the Ḥadīth calls him a zindīq. One must also add that since the kufr (infidelity) of such a man has been proved by clear and definite evidence, the Shari'ah will not put him in a separate category, but deal with him as it would deal with any other kāfir (infidel). That is why the authentic scholars are unanimous in concluding that after the departure of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم the question of hypocrites ceased to be a relevant one - now anyone who is not a genuine Muslim will be regarded as kāfir. The famous author, Al-Ainī, in his commentary on Al-Bukhārī, reports from Imām Mālik that after the days of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم this is the only available means of identifying 'hypocrisy', and that a man who carries this mark could be called a hypocrite.

(2) A little reflection on these verses would reveal the true nature of Islam and ʾĪmān (faith) and also that of kufr (disbelief), for the Holy Qurʾān reports the claim of the hypocrites to be Muslims: أَمَّا بِاللّٰهِ : "we believe in Allah", (2:8), forthwith refutes this claim: وَمَا هُمْ بِمُؤْمِنِينَ : "yet they are no believers". In order to understand fully the implications of these verses, one should bear in one's mind the fact that the hypocrites in question were actually Jews. Now, belief in Allah and in Hereafter is, no doubt, an essential part of their creed as well; what was not included in their creed, as defined by their religious scholars, was the belief in the prophethood of Muḥammad صلى الله عليه وسلم. In declaring their faith in Islam, the Jews very cleverly used to leave out the belief in the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم and mention only two elements: belief in Allah and belief in the Hereafter. So far as such a declaration goes, they cannot be called liars, and yet the Holy Qurʾān refutes their claim to be Muslims, and regards them as liars. Why?

The fact is that, for one to be a Muslim, it is not sufficient merely to declare one's faith in Allah and the Hereafter in any form or manner which suits one's individual or collective fancy. As for that, associators of all kinds do, in one way or another, believe in Allah and consider Him to be Omnipotent⁶ but the Holy Qurʾān does not allow any of these things to pass for ʾĪmān (faith). ʾĪmān or faith in Allah must, in order to be valid and worthy of the name, conform to what the Holy Qurʾān specifically lays down with regards to the divine names and attributes; similarly, belief in the Hereafter can be valid only when it is true to the specifications of the Holy Qurʾān and the Ḥadīth.⁷

6. Even peoples described by the Westerners as "savages" or "primitives" - though "degenerates" would be far closer to the mark - have at least a vague notion of a Supreme Deity, and usually very vivid ideas about the other world.

7. There is no end to the making of books, and no end to the making of gods and to the naming of gods - above all, in our own day. Reason, Nature, Man, Life, all having served their turn and grown rusty, are being replaced by more fancy names - "the ground of being" of the so-called Christian Existentialism, the ultimate "archetype of the Collective Unconscious" of Jungian psychology, and what not. They have lately invented a goldless theology too.

In the light of this explanation one can see that the Jews who pretended to be Muslims believed neither in Allah nor in the Hereafter according to these definite requirements. For, on the one hand, they regarded the Prophet 'Uzair or Ezra عليه السلام as the son of God, and, on the other, cherished the fond belief that the progeny of the prophets, no matter how it acted, would always remain 'the chosen of God', and would not be called to account on the Day of Judgment, or at the worst receive only a token punishment. These being their beliefs, the Holy Qur'ān rightly rejects their claims to faith in Allah and the Hereafter.

(3) As we have already said, verse 13 defines what 'Imān (faith) really is: آمِنُوا كَمَا آمَنَ النَّاسُ : "Believe as other men have believed". In other words, the criterion for judging one's claim to 'Imān is the 'Imān of the blessed Companions of the Holy Prophet ﷺ, and any claim to Iman which does not conform to it is not acceptable to Allah and to the Holy Prophet ﷺ. If a man has the presumption⁸ to interpret an Islamic doctrine or verse of the Holy Qur'ān in a way which departs from the explicit and clear explanation provided by the Holy Qur'ān itself or by the Holy Prophet ﷺ, his individual opinion and belief, no matter how much it titillates the palate of his contemporaries or feeds their fancy, will have no value or validity in the eyes of the Sharī'ah. For example, the *Qādiānīs*⁹ claim that like Muslims they too believe in the doctrine of the Finality of the Prophethood of Muḥammad ﷺ, but in this respect they deviate from what the Holy Prophet ﷺ has himself stated, and what the Companions believed in, and distort the doctrine so as to make room for the prophethood of Mirza Ghulam Aḥmad of Qādiān; so, according to the indication of the Holy Qur'ān, they come under this indictment: مَا هُمْ بِمُؤْمِنِينَ : "They are no believers."

In short, if a man interprets an Islamic doctrine in a way which is repugnant to the 'Imān of the blessed Companions, and yet claims to be a Muslim on the basis of his adherence to this doctrine and also performs his religious duties exactly like Muslims, he will not be considered a Mu'min (true Muslim) until and unless he agrees to conform to the criterion of 'Imān laid down by the Holy Qur'ān.

8. As is all too common these days.

9. Who style themselves as Ahmadis.

Removal of a doubt

We may also dispel a misunderstanding which often arises - and is more often made to arise with an ulterior motive - with regard to the famous dictum in the Ḥadīth and Fiqh (Islamic Jurisprudence) that the 'people of the Ka'bah' (Ahl al-Qiblah), that is, those who turn towards the Ka'bah in offering prescribed Salah cannot be branded as infidels. The verse under discussion clearly defines the meaning of the phrase, Ahl al-Qiblah. The term pertains only to those who do not deny any of the basic essential doctrines and commandments of Islam which are called the Darūriāt (essentials). For that matter even the hypocrites mentioned in the Holy Qur'ān used to offer their prayers exactly as the Muslims did; but turning towards Ka'bah while praying was not taken to be sufficient to make them acceptable as true Muslims, simply because they did not have faith in all the essentials of Islam as the blessed Companions did.

Lying is contemptible

(4) The verse أَمَّا بِاللَّهِ وَبِالْيَوْمِ الْآخِرِ : "We believe in Allah and in the Last Day" shows us how disgusting it is to tell a lie - even the hypocrites, with all their hostility to Islam, tried to refrain from it as far as possible. In claiming to be Muslims, they used to mention only their faith in Allah and in the Day of Judgment, but left out the faith in the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم for fear of telling a lie.

Misbehaving Prophets is to misbehave with Allah

(5) These verses denounce the hypocrites for trying to be clever with Allah Himself and to deceive Him, although no one among them could probably have had such an intention or even thought of such a possibility. What they were actually doing was to try to deceive the Holy Prophet ﷺ and the Muslims. Allah has equated this effort with an attempt to deceive Him, and has thus indicated that a man who is in any way impertinent to a prophet or a man of Allah is ultimately guilty of being impertinent to Allah Himself - this should be true above all in the case of the Holy Prophet ﷺ who stands in his station at the head of all created beings.

The curse of telling lies

(6) There is another subtle and very significant point here. According to these verses, the hypocrites would meet with a grievous punishment for having told lies. Now, their greatest crime was disbelief and hypocrisy in matters of faith, and they had been committing other crimes as well, like nursing envy and malice against Muslims in their hearts and actually conspiring against them. And yet here the grievous punishment has been connected with their habit of telling lies. This is an indication that basically this nefarious habit was their real crime, which gradually led them to hypocrisy and disbelief. In other words, although hypocrisy and disbelief are much greater crimes, yet they arise from the habit of telling lies. That is why the Holy Qur'an combines the sin of lying with the sin of idol worship in the same phrase:

فَاجْتَنِبُوا الرِّجْسَ مِنَ الْأَوْثَانِ وَاجْتَنِبُوا قَوْلَ الزُّورِ ۝

"Guard yourselves against the filth of idols and against telling lies" (22:30)

Who are reformers and mischief-makers

(7) As these verses report, when the hypocrites were asked not to spread disorder in the land through their prevarication and double dealing, they used to reply emphatically: إِنَّمَا نَحْنُ مُصْلِحُونَ: "We are nothing but reformers." The word Innamā (nothing but), used in the Arabic text, indicates not merely emphasis but exclusivity. So, their reply would mean that they were nothing but reformers, the servants of order, and that their activities could have nothing to do with disorder. Commenting on their reply, the Holy Qur'an says:

أَلَا إِنَّهُمْ هُمُ الْمُفْسِدُونَ وَلَكِنْ لَا يَشْعُرُونَ ۝

"Beware, it is, in fact, they who spread disorder, but they are not aware."

Now, we learn two things from this comment. Firstly, the activities of the hypocrites did actually produce disorder in the land. Secondly, they did not indulge in these activities with the express intention or design of creating disorder - they were not even aware of the possibility that their actions could be the cause of disorder. For, among the things which spread disorder in the world, there are some which are commonly recognized to be mischievous and disorderly activities, and hence every sensible and conscientious man refrains from them e.g., theft, robbery, murder, rape etc.; on the other hand, there are some which in their external aspect do not appear to be mischief or disorder, but, working unseen, they have the necessary consequence of destroying the morals of men which, in its turn, opens the door to all kinds of disorder.

This is exactly what the hypocrites were doing. No doubt, they refrained from theft, robbery etc.; it was on this count that they denied their being mischievous, and emphatically asserted that they were serving the cause of order. But all this while they had been freely giving vent to their malice and envy by conspiring with the enemies of the Muslims. These are things which finally bring man down to the level of beasts. Once he has lost his awareness of ethical values and human decency, even an average man becomes an agent of social disorder - of a disorder much greater than that released by thieves or robbers, or even beasts are capable of producing. For, the mischief of robbers and beasts can be controlled by the physical power of law and government. But laws are made and enforced by men. What happens to laws, when man has ceased to be man, can easily be witnessed all around us in the world of today. Everyone takes it for granted that humanity is on the march and the modern man is so far the ultimate in civilization; the network of educational institutions covers every hamlet on the face of the earth; legislative bodies keep buzzing night and day; organizations for the promulgation of laws spend billions, and circumlocution offices proliferate. And yet crime and disorder keep in step with the march of civilization. The reason is simple.

Law is not an automatic machine; it requires men to make it work. If man ceases to be man, neither laws nor bureaucratic agencies can provide a remedy for the all-pervading disorder. It is for this that the greatest benefactor of mankind, the Holy Prophet ﷺ, concentrated all his attention on making men real men - in all the plenitude of the term. Once this has been achieved, crime or disorder comes to an end of itself without the help of enormous police forces and extensive system of law-courts. As long as people acted upon his teachings in certain parts of the world, man saw a kind of peace and order prevail the like of which had never been witnessed before nor is likely to be witnessed when these teachings are abandoned or disregarded.

In so far as actual practice is concerned, the essence of the teachings of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم is fear of Allah and solicitude for the assessment of one's deeds on the Day of Judgment. If these are absent, no constitution or legal code, nor administrative body or university can force or induce man to keep away from crime. Those who run the world in our day invent ever-new administrative measures to prevent crime, but they not only neglect the very soul of administration, the fear of Allah, but even deploy the means of destroying it - all of which has the necessary consequence that the remedy only helps to feed the malady.

To another aspect of the question, it is easy enough to find a cure for thieves and robbers and for all those who create disorder openly. But the miscreants who have been described in these verses always appear in the garb of reformers, brandishing colourful schemes of social amelioration which are only a mask for personal interests, and for raising the slogan, إِنَّا نَحْنُ مُصْلِحُونَ: "We are nothing but reformers." Hence it is that Allah, while asking men not to spread disorder on the earth, has also said in another place:

وَاللَّهُ يَعْلَمُ الْمُفْسِدَ مِنَ الْمُصْلِحِ ط

"And Allah knows the one who makes mischief distinct from him who promotes good." (2:220)

This is an indication that Allah alone¹⁰ knows the states of men's hearts and their intentions, and He alone knows the nature and consequences of each human deed as to whether it would help the cause of order or of disorder. So, to serve the cause of order, it is not sufficient merely to possess such an intention; much more essential than that is to orient oneself in thought and deed in harmony with the Shari'ah, for an action may, in spite of the best intentions, sometimes result in mischief and disorder, if it is not guided by the Shari'ah.

Verses 21-22

يَا أَيُّهَا النَّاسُ اعْبُدُوا رَبَّكُمُ الَّذِي خَلَقَكُمْ وَالَّذِينَ مِنْ قَبْلِكُمْ
لَعَلَّكُمْ تَتَّقُونَ ۝ الَّذِي جَعَلَ لَكُمُ الْأَرْضَ فِرَاشًا وَالسَّمَاءَ

10. Can distinguish between order and disorder, for He alone.

بَنَاءً وَأَنْزَلَ مِنَ السَّمَاءِ مَاءً فَأَخْرَجَ بِهِ مِنَ الثَّمَرَاتِ رِزْقًا لَّكُمْ
فَلَا تَجْعَلُوا لِلَّهِ أَنْدَادًا وَأَنْتُمْ تَعْلَمُونَ ۝

O men, worship your Lord - who created you and those before you, so that you may become God-fearing - who made the earth a bed for you and the sky a roof, and sent down water from the sky, then through it brought forth, out of fruits, provision for you. So, do not set up parallels to Allah when you know. (Verses 21-22)

A review of verses linked together

The second verse of the Sūrah 'Al-Baqarah' provides the answer to the prayer made in the Sūrah Al-Fātiḥah, اِهْدِنَا الصِّرَاطَ الْمُسْتَقِيمَ: "Guide us in the straight path"- that is to say, the guidance man has prayed for is present in this book, for the Holy Qur'ān is from the beginning to the end a detailed account of the straight path. Then, the Surah proceeds to divide men into three groups according to whether they accept the guidance of the Holy Qur'ān or not. Three verses speak of the true and God-fearing Muslims, who not only accept but also act upon the guidance, and the next two verses of those disbelievers who oppose it openly.

Then come thirteen verses dealing with the hypocrites who are hostile to this guidance, but, for the sake of petty worldly interests or in seeking to harm the Muslims, try to keep their disbelief concealed and to present themselves as Muslims. Thus, the first twenty verses of the Surah, in dividing men into three groups on the basis of their acceptance or rejection of the guidance, indicate that the proper criterion for dividing men into groups is neither race or colour, nor language nor geography, but religion. Hence those, who believe in Allah and follow the guidance He has provided in the Holy Qur'ān, form one nation, and those who disbelieve form a different nation - the Holy Qur'ān calls the former the 'party of Allah' and the latter - 'the party of Satan' (58:19-22)

Then, the present verses (21 and 22), addressing the three groups together, present the message for which the Holy Qur'ān has been revealed. In asking men to give up the worship of created beings and to worship Allah alone, they adopt a mode of expression which not only makes an affirmation but also supports it with arguments so clear that even an average man, only if he uses his common sense, cannot help being convinced of the Oneness of God.

Commentary :

In starting the address, verse 21 uses the Arabic word An-nās, which signifies man in general, or man as such - so, the word covers all the three groups we have just mentioned. And the message delivered by the verse is: اُعْبُدُوا رَبَّكُمْ : "Worship your Lord." The Arabic word 'Ibādah (worship) connotes expending all energies one has in total obedience to somebody, and shunning all disobedience out of one's awe and reverence. (Rūh-al-Bayān) We have earlier explained the meaning of the word Rabb (one who gives nurture). Let us add that the choice of this particular name from among the Beautiful names of Allah is very meaningful in the present context, for the affirmation has thus been combined with the argument in a very short sentence. The word Rabb indicates that only He is, or can be, worthy of being worshipped, He is the final and absolute Cause of nurturing man - Who changes man through gradual stages of development from a drop of water into healthy, sentient and rational being, and Who provides the means for his sustenance and growth. This truth is so obvious that even an ignorant or intellectually dull man would, on a little reflection, not fail to see and admit that such a power of nurturing can belong only to Allah, and not to a created being. What can a creature do for man, when it owes its very existence to the Creator? Can a needy one come to the help of another? And if it appears to be doing so, the act of nurturing must in reality and ultimately belong to the One Being on whom both have to depend in order to exist at all. So, who else but the Rabb can be worthy of adoration and worship?

The sentence is addressed to all the three groups of men, and for each it has a different meaning. "Worship your Lord": the phrase calls upon the disbelievers to give up worshipping created beings and to turn to the Creator; it asks the hypocrites to be sincere and true in their faith; it commands the sinning Muslims to change their ways and try to be perfect in their obedience to Allah; and it encourages the God-fearing Muslims to be steadfast in their worship and obedience, and to make a greater effort in the way of Allah (Rūh-al-Bayān).

The two verses proceed to enlarge upon the theme by specifying certain special qualities of the Rabb: "الَّذِي خَلَقَكُمْ وَالَّذِينَ مِنْ قَبْلِكُمْ": "Who created you and those before you." This is a quality which one cannot even imagine to belong to a created being, for it can pertain only to the Creator - that is, the quality of giving existence to what did not exist before, and of producing from the darkness and filth of the mother's womb a creature as lovely and noble as man.

In adding to the phrase: "الَّذِي خَلَقَكُمْ": "who created you" the words, "وَالَّذِينَ مِنْ قَبْلِكُمْ" and "those before you," the verse shows that Allah alone is the Creator of all mankind. It is also significant that the verse mentions only "those before you" and not "those who will come after you", and through this omission suggests that there will not be any Ummah (a traditional community formed by all the followers of a prophet) to succeed the Ummah of the Holy Prophet ﷺ, for no prophet will be sent down after the Last Prophet ﷺ, and hence no new 'Ummah' will arise.

The final phrase of verse 21 لَعَلَّكُمْ تَتَّقُونَ has been translated here as "so that you may become God-fearing". It may also be translated to mean "So that you may save yourselves from hell", or "So that you may guard yourselves against evil." But the point is that one can hope to attain salvation and paradise only when one worships Allah alone, and does not associate anyone else with Him.

Before we proceed, we must clarify a very important doctrinal point. The phrase (لَعَلَّكُمْ تَتَّقُونَ) which has been translated here as "so that you may become God-fearing" employs the Arabic particle l'alla which indicates an expectation or hope, and is used on an occasion when it is not definite that a certain action or event would necessarily be actualized. Now, if one does really possess Īmān (faith) and does really believe in Tauhīd, one would, in consequence definitely attain salvation and go to Heaven, as Allah Himself has promised. But here the certainty has been expressed in terms of an expectation or hope in order to make man realize that no human action by itself and in itself can bring salvation as a necessary reward. One can attain salvation and go to Heaven only by the grace of Allah alone. The ability to perform good deeds, and Īmān itself is only a sign of divine grace, not the cause.

The next verse recounts some other qualities of Allah with regard to the act of nurturing, with the difference that while verse 21 spoke of the bounties of Allah pertaining to the human self, verse 22 speaks of those pertaining to man's physical environment. Since man's being basically has two dimensions, one internal (Anfus) and the other external (Āfāq), the two verses, in a summary way, encompass all the kinds of blessings that descend on man from Allah.

Among the cosmic bounties, the first to be mentioned is the earth which has been made a bed for man. It is neither soft and fluid like water on which one cannot settle, nor hard like stone or steel that should make it difficult to be harnessed for man's purposes, but has been given a middle state between the soft and the hard for man to utilize it conveniently in his daily life. The Arabic word, Firāsh (bed), which literally means 'somethings spread out', does not necessarily imply that the earth is not round, for the great globe of the earth, in spite of being round, appears to be flat to the onlooker, and the usual way of the Holy Qur'an is to describe things in an aspect which should be familiar to an average man, literate or illiterate, city dweller or rustic.

The other bounty is that the sky has been made like an ornamented and beautiful ceiling. The third is that Allah sent down water from the sky. This, again, does not necessarily mean that water comes down directly from the sky without the medium of clouds - even in everyday idiom, a thing coming down from above is said to be coming from the sky. The Holy Qur'an itself, on several occasions, refers to Allah sending down water from the clouds:

أَأَنْتُمْ أَنْزَلْتُمُوهُ مِنَ الْمُزْنِ أَمْ نَحْنُ الْمُنْزِلُونَ ۝

"Did you send it down from the clouds, or did We send it?" (56:69)

وَأَنْزَلْنَا مِنَ الْمُعْصِرَاتِ مَاءً ثَبَّاجًا

"And have sent down from the rain-clouds abundant water." (78:14)

The fourth bounty is to bring forth fruits with this water, and to provide nourishment to man from them.

The first three of these bounties are of an order in which man's effort or action, his very being even, does not enter at all. There was no sign of man when the earth and the sky already existed, and clouds and rain too were performing their functions. As for these things, not even an ignorant fool could ever fancy that all this could be the work of a man or an idol, or of a created being. In the case of producing fruits and making them serve as nourishment for man, however, a simpleton may, on a superficial view, attribute this to human effort and ingenuity, for one can see man digging the earth, sowing the seed and protecting the plants. But the Holy Qur'an has, in certain verses, made it quite clear that human effort has nothing to do with the act of growing trees and bringing out fruits, for human activity accomplishes nothing more than removing the hindrances to the birth and growth of a plant, or protecting it from being destroyed. Even the water which feeds the plant is not the creation of the farmer - all he does is to make the water reach the plant at the proper time in a proper quantity. The actual birth and growth of the tree, and the putting forth of leaves, branches and fruits is the work of Divine Power, and of no one else. Says the Holy Qur'an :

أَفَرَأَيْتُمْ مَا تَحْمِلُونَ ۚ أَأَنْتُمْ تَزْرَعُونَهُ أَمْ نَحْنُ الزَّارِعُونَ

"Have you considered the soil you till? Is it you that give them growth or We ? " (56:63)

The only answer which man can find to this question posed by the Holy Qur'an is that undoubtedly it is Allah alone who makes the plants grow.

In short, this verse mentions four qualities of Allah which cannot possibly be found in a created being. Having learnt from these two verses that it is Allah, and no one else, who brings man into existence out of nothingness, and provides the means of his sustenance through the earth, the sky, the rains and the fruits, one cannot, if one possesses a little common sense, help acknowledging that Allah, and no one else, is worthy of all worship and obedience, and that the ultimate iniquity is to turn away from Him who made man exist and gave him the means of survival and growth, and to prostrate oneself before others who are as helpless as man. Allah has put man at the head of all His creatures so that the universe should serve him, while he should totally devote himself to the worship and remembrance of Allah and obedience to Him without distraction. But there are men so given to their indolence and ignorance that they forget the One God, and in consequence, have to serve a billion gods.

In order to rescue men from this slavery to others, the Holy Qur'an says at the end of this verse:

فَلَا تَجْعَلُوا لِلّٰهِ اَنْدَادًا وَاَنْتُمْ تَعْلَمُونَ ۝

"So, do not set up parallels to Allah when you know."

That is to say, once one has understood that, in reality, Allah alone is the Creator and the Provider, one will have also understood that no one else can be worthy of worship and of being associated with Allah as an equal or rival god.

To sum up, these two verses call men to what is the essential purpose of sending down all the Divine Books and all the prophets - Tauhid, or the affirmation and the worship of the one God.

Tauhid is a doctrine which has an all-pervading and radically transforming impact on every sphere of human life, internal as well as external, individual as well as collective. For, once a man comes to believe that there is only One Being who alone is the Creator, the Lord and Master of the universe, who alone is all-powerful and ordains the slightest movement of the smallest atom, and without whose will no one can harm or do good to another - such a man, rich or poor, in joy or sorrow, would always look only towards that One Being, and gain the insight to discover behind the veil of apparent causes the workings of the same Omnipotence.

If our modern worshippers of 'energy' only had some understanding of the doctrine of Tauhid, they would easily see that power resides neither in steam nor in electricity, but that the source of all powers is the One Being who has created steam and electricity. To know this, however, one must have insight. The greatest philosopher in the world, if he fails to see this truth, is no better than the rustic fool who saw a railway-train move at the waving of a green flag and stop at the waving of a red flag, and concluding that it was the power of the green and red flags that controlled the movement of the huge train, made an obeisance to them. People would laugh at the rustic, for he did not know that the two flags are merely signs, while the train is actually run by the driver, or, better still, by the engine. A more perceptive observer would ascribe the function to the steam inside the engine. But he who believes in the One God would laugh at all these wise men, for he can see through the steam, the fire and the water even, and discover behind the appearances the might of the One and Only Being who has created fire and water, and whose will makes them perform their allotted functions.

The Doctrine Of Tauḥīd : A source of peace in human life

Tauḥīd, the most fundamental doctrine of Islam, is not a mere theory, but the only effective way of making man a man in the real sense of the term - it is his first and last refuge and the panacea for all his ills. For the essence of this doctrine is that every possible change in the physical universe, its very birth and death is subject to the will of the One and Only Being, and a manifestation of His wisdom. When this doctrine takes hold of a man's mind and heart, and becomes his permanent state, all dissension ceases to exist and the world itself changes into a paradise for him, as he knows that the enmity of the foe and the love of the friend equally proceed from Allah who rules over the hearts of both. Such a man lives his life in perfect peace, fearing none and expecting nothing from anyone: shower him with gold, or put him in irons, he would remain unmoved, for he knows where it comes from.

This is the significance of the basic declaration of the Islamic creed, لَا إِلَهَ إِلَّا اللَّهُ (there is no God but Allah). But, obviously, it is not enough to affirm the Oneness of God orally; one must have a complete certitude, and must also have the truth always present close to one's heart, for Tauḥīd is to see God as one, and not merely to say that He is one. Today, the number of those who can respect this basic formula of the Islamic creed runs to millions all over the world - far more than it ever did, but mostly it is just an expense of breath: their lives do not show the colour of Tauḥīd; or otherwise, they should have been like their forefathers who were daunted neither by wealth nor by power, awed neither by numbers nor by pomp and show to turn their back upon the Truth - when a prophet could all by himself stand up against the world, and say: فَتِمَّ كَيْدُكُمْ فَلَا تُنْظَرُونَ : "So try your guile on me, then give me no respite" (17:195). If the blessed Companions and their successors came to dominate the world in a few years, the secret lay in this Tauḥīd, correctly understood and practised. May Allah bless all the Muslims with this great gift!

Verses 23-24

وَإِنْ كُنْتُمْ فِي رَيْبٍ مِّمَّا نَزَّلْنَا عَلَىٰ عَبْدِنَا فَأْتُوا بِسُورَةٍ مِّثْلِهِ
 ٥ مِّثْلِهِ وَادْعُوا شُهَدَاءَكُمْ مِمَّنْ دُونِ اللَّهِ إِنْ كُنْتُمْ صَادِقِينَ ٥
 فَإِنْ لَّمْ تَفْعَلُوا وَلَنْ تَفْعَلُوا فَاتَّقُوا النَّارَ الَّتِي وَقُودُهَا النَّاسُ
 وَ الْحِجَارَةُ أُعِدَّتْ لِلْكَافِرِينَ ٥

And if you are in doubt as to that which we have revealed to Our servant, then bring a Sūrah the like of this, and do call your supporters other than Allah, if you are true. But if you do not - and you never shall - then guard yourselves against the fire, the fuel of which are men and stones. It has been prepared for disbelievers. (Verses 23-24)

The Guidance which the Holy Qur'ān provides to man rests on two basic principles - Tauḥīd (the Oneness of God) and Risalah (Prophethood). The two preceding verses (21 and 22) affirm the Oneness of God in presenting certain acts peculiar to Allah alone as a proof; these two verses (23 and 24) affirm the prophethood of Muḥammad ﷺ in presenting the word of Allah as a proof. In both the places, the mode of argument is the same. The preceding verses mention certain things which no one could or can do except Allah - for example, creating the sky and the earth, sending down water from the sky, bringing forth fruits with water; and the point of the argument is that since no one except Allah can do these things, no one else can be worthy of being worshipped. These two verses refer to a kind of speech which cannot possibly come from anyone except Allah, and the like of which no human being can ever produce just as the helplessness of man and other creatures in the matter of creating the sky and the earth etc. is a demonstration of the fact that these are the acts of Allah alone, in the same way the helplessness of all created beings in the matter of producing something equal to or resembling the Word of Allah is a demonstration of the fact that this is the Word of Allah alone. Here the Holy Qur'ān challenges all men the world over, those of the present and those of the future, to produce even a small passage like this, if they suppose it to be the work of a man, for other men may also be capable of accomplishing what one man has achieved. In case individuals should fail in such an effort, the Holy Qur'ān allows them the facility of calling to their aid all possible helpers - they could even hold an international 'workshop' for the purpose. The next verse forewarns them that such a venture would never succeed, and threatens with the fires of hell, for having once acknowledged his inability to produce something to equal the Holy Qur'ān, which is a clear evidence of its being the word, not of man but of a Being who stands above all created things, if a man still persists in his disbelief, he is only seeking a place in hell. The Holy Qur'ān asks men to beware of such a fate.

The Miraculous Qur'ān is a prophethood of Muhammad ﷺ

Thus, the verses, in emphasizing the miraculous character of the Holy Qur'ān, present it as the evidence of the prophethood of Muḥammad صلى الله عليه وسلم and of his truth. No doubt, the miracles of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم are innumerable, each more marvellous than the other, but in mentioning only one of these here - one that pertains to the sphere of knowledge, namely, the Holy Qur'ān - Allah has pointed out that this is the greatest. Even among the miracles of all the prophets عليهم السلام this particular miracle has a special distinction. It has been the way of Allah to show His omnipotence by manifesting some miracles through each prophet or messenger. But each miracle appears with a certain prophet, and ends with him. The Holy Qur'ān, on the contrary, is a miracle which is to survive till the end of time.

As for the phrase : "وَأِنْ كُنْتُمْ فِي رَيْبٍ : "And if you are in doubt," we may remark that the verse employs the Arabic word, raib for 'doubt'. According to Imam Rāghib al-Isfahānī, raib signifies a kind of hesitation or indecision or suspicion which has no basis, and can therefore be easily overcome with the help of a little reflection. That is why the Holy Qur'ān says that having this kind of doubt (raib) is not consistent with being a man of knowledge, even if he were not a Muslim:

وَلَا يَرْتَابُ الَّذِينَ أُوتُوا الْكِتَابَ وَالْمُؤْمِنُونَ

"So that the people of the Book and Muslims should have no doubt". (74:31)

Similarly, at the very beginning of the Sūrah Al-Baqarah the Holy Qur'an refers to itself as the Book لَا رَيْبَ فِيهِ: "In which there is no doubt (raib).". In the present verse again it uses the word raib to say: وَإِنْ كُنْتُمْ فِي رَيْبٍ: "if you are in doubt", the implication being that the truths enunciated by the Holy Qur'an are so clear and evident that there is no room for any hesitation or indecision or suspicion to arise except for those who do not possess knowledge.

As for the people who hesitate in accepting the Holy Qur'an as the Word of Allah, and suspect that it is the work of the Holy Prophet ﷺ or of some other man, the verse proposes an easy test - they should produce a passage (a Sūrah) resembling or equalling the Holy Qur'an in order to substantiate their claim; but if they fail, they should finally acknowledge the Holy Qur'an to be undoubtedly the Word of Allah. The Arabic word "Sūrah" means a "limited or definite piece"; as a technical term, a Sūrah is a passage of the Holy Qur'an which has been set apart from other passages by Divine Commandment (Wahy), there being 114 Sūrahs in the Holy Qur'an, some long and others very short. The present verse uses the word Sūrah without the definite article "Al", and hence includes the shortest of the Sūrahs in the challenge thrown out to the doubters.

At this point, the objection can arise that the failure of one man or one group of men does not necessarily argue the inability of another man or group in the matter. The Holy Qur'an meets this objection by declaring:

وَادْعُوا شُهَدَاءَكُمْ مِنْ دُونِ اللَّهِ إِنْ كُنْتُمْ صَادِقِينَ

"And do call your supporters other than Allah, if you are true".

The Arabic word used here is Shuhadā', the plural or Shāhid which signifies 'one who is present' - a witness is called a Shāhid, for he has to be present in the court of law. In this verse, the word Shuhadā' refers either to men in general - implying that the doubters could call to their aid any men whatsoever from anywhere in the world -, or specifically to the idols of the disbelievers of Makkah who thought that these blocks of stone would appear on the Day of Judgment as witnesses in their favour.

The next verse foretells that the doubters shall never succeed, even if they tried with all their individual or collective might, in producing a passage which could resemble the Holy Qur'an. If they should still persist in their denial, the verse threatens them with the fire of Hell, which has already been prepared for such stubborn disbelievers.

The infidels of Makkah, history tells us, were ready to give up their very lives for the purpose of obliterating Islam. In throwing out to them this challenge, the Holy Qur'an gave them an easy chance of accomplishing their purpose, and even hurt their tribal sense of honour by predicting that they would never be able to take up the challenge. And yet not a single contender came up for the trial, which was a clear admission of their helplessness and an acknowledgment of the Holy Qur'an being the Word of Allah. This fact establishes the Holy Qur'an as the evident miracle of the Holy Prophet ﷺ. Since the challenge still stands, the miracle too lives on, and shall live to the end of the world.

The Holy Qur'an: A living miracle

As for the Holy Qur'an being a miracle, the subject has been thoroughly discussed in scores of books by the greatest scholars in all the ages and in different languages. We may mention a few outstanding ones: Naẓm al-Qur'an by al-Jāhīz, written in the 3rd century A.H.; 'Ijāz al-Qur'an' by Abū 'Abdullāh Wāsiṭī, written early in the 4th century; a small book, 'Ijāz al-Qur'an' by Ibn 'Isā Rabbānī, written later in the 4th century; a long and comprehensive book, 'Ijāz al-Qur'an' by Qādi Abū Bakr Bāqillānī, written early in the 5th century; the subject has also been discussed at length in well-known books like 'Al-Itqan' by Jalāl al-Dīn al-Suyūṭī, 'Al-Khasā'is al-Kubra' by the same author, 'At-Tafsīr al-Kabir' by Imām Rāzī, and 'Ash-Shifa' by Qādi 'Iyad; more recently still, 'Ijāz al-Qur'an', by Mustafa Sadiq al-Rafī'i, and 'Al-Waḥy al-Muḥammadi' by Sayyid Rashid Riḍā; and finally 'Ijāz al-Qur'an' by Shabbir Aḥmad Uthmānī. We may, in passing, draw attention to another peculiar quality of the Holy Qur'an that, beside comprehensive and voluminous commentaries, scores of books have been written on different aspects of the Book of Allah and on the innumerable considerations which arise from it.

We cannot provide even a brief resume of all that has been written on the subject, the literature being so vast. We shall, however, give a few brief indications as to why the Holy Qur'an is held to be a miracle of the Prophet of Islam: صلى الله عليه وسلم

Qualities that make the Qur'an a miracle

(1) The Holy Qur'an is incomparable for its comprehensiveness even among the Sacred Books of the world; on the one hand, it brings to man the ultimate knowledge of a metaphysical order, and, on the other, provides guidance for all the spheres of human life, spiritual or physical, individual or collective. Those who suspect the Book to have been the product of a human agency should remind themselves of the simple fact that it appeared at a time and in a place which offered no facilities for acquiring the kind of education which is necessary for composing such a book - in fact, the Arabs were in those days known as the Ummiyyūn, 'the illiterates', and that the Book came through the Holy Prophet ﷺ who could not even read or write, and who had not tried to learn even the arts of poetry and rhetoric on which the Arabs prided themselves. This fact, in itself, is nothing short of a miracle.

(2) The Holy Qur'an is, no doubt, a guidance for all men without any distinction of time or place, but the first to be addressed were the Arabs of the Age of Ignorance. In affirming that no human being could produce even a few verses comparable to its own, the Holy Qur'an did not confine the challenge merely to the richness of meaning and the quality of wisdom, but included the mode of expression as well. Now, the 'illiterates' of Arabia had no pretensions to wisdom or knowledge, but they certainly fancied themselves for their eloquence - to them, the aliens were just 'The Dumb' (Al-'Ajam). And some of them were so mad in their hostility to the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم that, if they could see a chance of hurting him in doing so, they would readily have slit their own throats out of sheer spite. And yet no one came forward to accept the challenge. This helplessness in a contest which should have been easy for a people so gifted with a spontaneous eloquence - does it not argue that the Holy Qur'an is not the word of man, but the Word of Allah? As a matter of fact, the most discriminating among the contemporary Arabs did admit, though in private, that the Holy Qur'an was inimitable; some of them had the honesty to say so in public and some accepted Islam, while others in spite of this admission, could not give up the ways of their forefathers, or sufficiently overcome tribal rivalries, particularly their hostility to Banū 'Abd Munāf, the tribe of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم to embrace Islam.

Ja'āl al-Din al-Suyūti has, in his 'Al-Khasā'is al-Kubrā', reported a number of incidents which illustrate the point. When the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم and the Holy Qur'ān began to attract the attention of people even outside Makkah, the enemies of Islam became worried about the huge crowds that would assemble there for the annual pilgrimage and would be likely to fall under his spell. Their tribal chiefs wanted to find an effective strategem to prevent such a situation from arising, and they referred the problem to Walīd ibn Mughīrah, the eldest and the wisest among them. To begin with, they suggested that they could tell the pilgrims that the Holy Qur'ān was (May Allah forgive us for reporting a blasphemy) only the ravings of a lunatic. But Walīd could foresee that when the pilgrims heard the Holy Prophet ﷺ speaking with such lucidity and eloquence, they would immediately know that the allegation was not true. Next they thought of dismissing him as a mere poet. But Walid warned them that, an understanding of the arts of poetry being innate in most Arabs, the pilgrims would easily see that he was no poet. Then, they considered the possibility of putting him down as one of the soothsayers. But Walīd feared that they would again discover how false the imputation was, and would only turn against the accusers. In summing up his own impression of the Holy Qur'ān, he said: "By God, there is not a single man among you who knows more about Arabic poetry than me. And, by God, I find in this speech a kind of sweetness and grace which I have never found in the speech of any poet or of any eloquent man." After a good deal of thought, he finally advised them to accuse the Holy Prophet ﷺ of being a sorcerer who employed his black art in separating sons from fathers, and wives from husbands.

Exactly the same was the impression made by the Holy Qur'ān on many other people, who expressed similar views - for example, Nadr ibn Hārith, a tribal chief; Unais, the brother of the blessed Companion, Abū Dharr; As'ad ibn Zurārah, another tribal chief, and Qais ibn Nasībah of the Banū Sulaim tribe. Even the vilest enemies of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم like Akhnas ibn Shariq, Abu Sufyān and, of all persons, Abu Jahl himself are reported to have stealthily crept in the darkness of night to the house of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم to hear him reciting the Holy Qur'ān, and to have been so entranced by the Word of Allah that they could not tear themselves away from the place till it was dawn. Yet they continued to be stubborn in their denial, for, as Abū Jahl confessed in so many words, they had been successfully vying with the tribe of Banū 'Abd Munāf in all possible virtues, but now that their rivals had produced a prophet, they could not come up with something to match the claim.

In short, the Arabs failed to take up the challenge of the Holy Qur'ān, and admitted their helplessness; nor has any one else succeeded in the attempt since then - all of which goes to show that the Holy Qur'ān can only be the Word of Allah, not of man.

(3) The Holy Qur'ān made many predictions about future events, and things turned out to be exactly as it had declared. For example, the infidels of Makkah were not prepared to believe the prophecy that the people of Rum, or the Byzantians, would finally rout the Persians after having suffered an initial defeat. The infidels made it a point of honour, and put a wager on it, but were humiliated to see the prophecy come true before the stipulated period of ten years was over.

(4) The Holy Qur'ān gives a clear account of some of the earlier prophets, of their Shari'ah and of their peoples, and of many historical events since the beginning of the world. Even the best scholars among the Jews and the Christians did not possess such exact information. The Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم, who had never attended a school nor been in the company of a learned man, could not have provided all these details for himself without having received the knowledge from Allah.

(5) Several verses of the Holy Qur'ān disclosed what certain people had tried to keep concealed in their hearts, and they had to confess that this was just what they had been thinking. We shall cite only two instances.

إِذْ هَمَّتْ طَائِفَتَيْنِ مِنْكُمْ أَنْ تَفْشَلَا

"When two of your battalions thought of falling away. . ." (3:122)

and ,

يَقُولُونَ فِي أَنْفُسِهِمْ لَوْلَا يُعَذِّبُنَا اللَّهُ بِمَا نَقُولُ

"They say in their hearts, 'Why does Allah not punish us for what we say?'"

(6) The Holy Qur'ān predicted that such and such men would not be able to do such and such things, and then it turned out that, in spite of having the power, they could not do these things. The Jews claimed to be the 'Chosen of God' and His friends. Since one is always eager to meet one's friends, the Holy Qur'ān asked them to substantiate their claim by wishing for death and for going back to Allah, but at the same time declared: وَلَنْ يَشَاءُوا أَبَدًا: "And they shall never wish for it" (62:7). Now, expressing a wish for death should not be difficult for anyone, if he wishes to establish his bonafides; for the Jews in particular, it would have been an easy way of refuting the Holy Qur'an. But, in spite of all their hatred for the Holy Prophet ﷺ, they knew in their hearts that the Holy Qur'ān was the Book of Allah, and feared that if they told a lie in this matter, they would actually die. And they kept quiet.

(7) When the Holy Qur'ān is recited (in Arabic, of course), it affects in a strange and indefinable way the heart of even a casual listener, Muslim or non-Muslim. History reports many instances of people accepting Islam merely because they happened to be passing by when the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم was reciting the Holy Qur'ān - such was the case, for example, of the blessed Companion Jubair ibn Muṭ'im.

(8) The best book in the world, if read four or five times, begins to lose its charm even for the most fervent admirer. But the peculiar quality of the Holy Qur'ān, and of it alone, is that the more one reads or recites it, the more eager one becomes to do so again and again. Even among the sacred books of the world, the Holy Qur'ān is unique in this respect.

(9) The sacred books of many religions have been lost or no longer exist in an integral and authentic form. But Allah has promised in the Holy Qur'ān that He Himself will protect this Book, and preserve it against the slightest change upto the end of time. During the fourteen centuries of the history of Islam, millions of copies, written by hand or printed, have been spread all over the globe as no other sacred book has been. But in this respect the greatest miracle of the Holy Qur'ān is that in all the ages and in all the places where Muslims have lived, there have been millions of people who have known the Book by heart without the alteration of a single consonant or vowel. So, Allah has preserved His Last Book not merely in the shape of written words, but, above all in the hearts of men. Allah is Ever-Living, so will His Word live for ever beyond the interference of created beings.

(10) There is no other book which should comprehend all the forms of knowledge and wisdom in so short a space as does the Holy Qur'ān, fulfilling all possible spiritual needs of man, and providing him with guidance for all the spheres of his internal or external, individual or social activity.

(11) It is not merely a theoretical guidance that the Holy Qur'ān has offered. Which other book, sacred or otherwise, has had such a vast and deep impact on the history of mankind in such a short time? Which other book has brought about such a radical change in the individual and collective life of millions of men within the space of a few years ? For when the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم departed from this world, Islam had, in spite of all opposition and without the modern media of communication, already established a new order of life all over the Arabian peninsula, and within the next few decades the message of the Holy Qur'ān had reached India on one side, and Spain on the other. Can such pervasiveness be anything but a miracle?

Answers to some doubts

Before we leave the subject, we may also deal with certain doubts which have been expressed with regard to the miraculous nature of the Holy Qur'ān. It has, for example, been suggested that some people, at one time or another, must have taken up the challenge of the Holy Qur'ān, and produced something comparable to it, but their compositions have not been preserved and have not come down to us. But the objection is fanciful. The number of people hostile to Islam has, in any age, been much larger than that of Muslims, and they have possessed far greater and much more efficacious means of publicity than Muslims ever have. If any seemingly successful attempt had been made to produce an imitation of the Holy Qur'ān, it would not only have been preserved but also been widely publicised. After all, the infidels of Makkah used to bring all kinds of wild and fanatic charges against the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم. For instance, they accused him of having learnt all that he taught from the monk, Buhīrā whom he had met only once in Syria; or, they imputed the Holy Qur'ān to the authorship of a Roman slave who, being an alien, could not have been a master of the Arabic language and of the characteristically Arab form of eloquence - the Holy Qur'ān itself has reported this calumny. But even they, for all their venom, never pretended to have produced something resembling the Holy Qur'ān. Anyhow, whatever funny or flimsy attempts have been made to match the Holy Qur'ān are on record in the books of history. For example, Musaylama of Yemen, known as the Great Liar, came out with a string of obscenities as a reply to the Word of Allah, but his own people dismissed them for what they were worth. At a later date, the famous man of letters, 'Abdullāh Ibn al-Muqaffa' thought of trying his wits against the Holy Qur'ān, but soon gave up in despair.¹¹

The point, however, is that if someone had really produced even three or four verses comparable to those of the Holy Qur'ān, the matter could not have gone without being passed down to us at least by the enemies of Islam. Of late a different kind of objection has sometimes been raised. They say that the impossibility of successfully imitating a book does not by itself argue that it is the Word of Allah or a miracle, for poets like Shakespeare or Ḥāfiẓ too have never been imitated successfully. But a miracle is, by definition, something which occurs without the like means having been employed. Every poet or writer in the world, even the greatest, is known to have undergone a process of education and training in his art, and to have made use of certain means and methods which are humanly possible. But the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم, as we have said before, did not even know reading or writing, and was never interested in learning the arts of eloquence. Moreover, it is not merely a question of literary style. In considering the Holy Qur'an as a miracle, we must, above all, take into account the spiritual efficacy and the transforming power it has, and which it has been showing these last fourteen hundred years.¹²

11. A latter-day adventurer has been the Irish novelist James Joyce who congratulated himself on having faced up to the Challenge of the Holy Qur'ān in his "Finnegans Wake". Soon recognized to be at least very funny, this book can already be seen to be going up in a smoke of jokes.

وَبَشِّرِ الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا وَعَمِلُوا الصَّالِحَاتِ أَنَّ لَهُمْ جَنَّاتٍ تَجْرَى مِنْ
تَحْتِهَا الْأَنْهَارُ، كُلَّمَا رُزِقُوا مِنْهَا مِنْ ثَمَرَةٍ رِزْقًا قَالُوا هَذَا
الَّذِي رُزِقْنَا مِنْ قَبْلُ وَأُتُوا بِهِ مُتَشَابِهًا وَلَهُمْ فِيهَا أَزْوَاجٌ
مُطَهَّرَةٌ وَهُمْ فِيهَا خَالِدُونَ ٥

And give good tidings to those, who believe and do what is virtuous, that for them there are gardens beneath which rivers flow. Every time they are given a fruit from there to eat, they will say, 'this is what we have been given before'; and they are given one resembling the other. And for them there shall be wives purified; and there they are eternal. (Verse 25)

Verse 24 spoke of the fire of hell which has been prepared to

12. We may conclude this discussion by quoting a passage from the well-known scholar of comparative religion and traditional civilizations, Frithjof Schuon: The superhuman value of a revealed Book cannot be apparent in an absolute fashion from its earthly form, nor from its conceptual content alone; in reality, the Divine and therefore miraculous quality of such a Book is of an order quite other than that of the most perfect dialectic or the most brilliant poetry. This quality shows itself first of all in a richness of meanings - a feature that is incapable of being imitated - and also in what might be called the underlying divine 'magic' which shines through the formal expression and proves itself by its results in souls, and in the world, in space and in time. Only this Divine substance can explain the spiritual and theurgic efficacy of the Qur'anic verses, with its consequences in miraculously rapaid expansion of primitive Islam in the conditions in which it took place, as well as in the stability of Moslem institutions and the extraordinary fruitfulness of Islamic doctrine." ("Dimensions of Islam", London, 1970 page 55).

punish those who do not believe in the Holy Qur'ān; the present verse announces the reward for those who believe.

As for the fruits with which believers will be regaled in Paradise, some commentators say that this concerns only the fruits of Paradise which would be alike in shape, but each time different in taste. Others say that these fruits would resemble the fruits of the earth in shape alone, but their taste would be totally different. Anyhow, the point is that the believers would have a kind of joy in Paradise they had never known before, and that this joy would keep renewing itself at every moment.

Thus, the fruits of Paradise¹³ may share a common name with the fruits of the earth, but they will be of a different nature.

The wives which the believers will have in Paradise, will be clean externally and pure internally - that is to say, free from everything that is physically disgusting like excrement and menstruation, and from everything that is morally disgusting like bad temper or unfaithfulness.

13. We must sound a note of caution here. Our modernists have for some time been quite fond of asserting that in speaking of the fruits of Paradise and its other joys, the Holy Qur'ān has employed only a metaphysical mode of expression in order to suggest spiritual bliss which, by its very nature, is intangible. We do not mean to rule out the possibility or the desirability of analogical or symbolical interpretations of the verses of the Holy Qur'ān. In fact, many authentic Muslim scholars, particularly the Sufis, have made such attempts which have proved to be very illuminating in many ways. But no genuine Sufi has ever claimed that symbolical interpretation (I'tibār) is the same thing as exegesis (tafsīr), or that his own interpretation was exclusively the only valid one. The purpose of analogical interpretation has always been to serve as an aid in spiritual realization or in the elaboration of metaphysical doctrines, and not to negate or oppose the regular mode of exegesis. What our modern exegetes overlook in their zeal and in their simplicity is the obvious fact that if a thing is being used as a metaphor or a symbol, it does not necessarily argue that it does not exist objectively. In allowing for symbolical interpretations, we must carefully remember that since the Holy Qur'ān has spoken of the fruits of Paradise and of similar things, they must have an objective existence, though not a physical one (in the current sense of the word), and even though we have no knowledge as to their nature and state - all of which we can safely leave to Allah Himself. That way lies security, for that is the Straight Path.

The joys of Paradise will also be unlike the joys of the earth in that they will not be short-lived, nor will one have to be trembling with the fear of losing them, for the believers shall live in perpetual bliss for ever.

In giving these good tidings to those who believe, the Holy Qur'an adds another condition - that of good deeds -, for without good deeds, one cannot deserve such good tidings on the merit of Īmān (faith) alone. Īmān itself can, no doubt, save a man from being consigned to the fires of hell for ever, and every Muslim, even if he is a great sinner, will finally be taken out of hell, once he has undergone a period of punishment. But no one can altogether escape the fires of hell unless he has been doing good deeds defined by the Shari'ah. (Rūḥ al Bayān: Qurṭubī)

Verses 26-27

إِنَّ اللَّهَ لَا يَسْتَحْيَى أَنْ يَضْرِبَ مَثَلًا مَّا بَعُوضَةً فَمَا فَوْقَهَا
فَأَمَّا الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا فَيَعْلَمُونَ أَنَّهُ الْحَقُّ مِنْ رَبِّهِمْ وَأَمَّا الَّذِينَ
كَفَرُوا فَيَقُولُونَ مَاذَا أَرَادَ اللَّهُ بِهَذَا مَثَلًا يُضِلُّ بِهِ كَثِيرًا
وَيَهْدِي بِهِ كَثِيرًا وَمَا يُضِلُّ بِهِ إِلَّا الْفَاسِقِينَ ۝ الَّذِينَ
يَنْقُضُونَ عَهْدَ اللَّهِ مِنْ بَعْدِ مِيثَاقِهِ وَيَقْطَعُونَ مَا أَمَرَ اللَّهُ بِهِ
أَنْ يُوصَلَ وَيُفْسِدُونَ فِي الْأَرْضِ ۚ أُولَٰئِكَ هُمُ الْخَاسِرُونَ ۝

Indeed, it does not embarrass Allah to use as a parable, a gnat or what exceeds it. Now, as for those who believe, they know it is the truth from their Lord; while those who disbelieve say, "What could have Allah meant by this parable?" By this He lets many go astray, and by this He makes many find guidance. But He does not let anyone go astray thereby except those who are sinful - those who break the Covenant of Allah after it has been made binding, and cut off what Allah has commanded to be joined, and spread disorder on the earth - it is these who are the losers. (Verses 26-27)

In the foregoing verses, it was affirmed that the Holy Qur'ān does not admit of any kind of doubt, and that if someone should have a suspicion as to its being the Word of God, he should try to produce even a small Surah comparable to it. These two verses refer to an objection raised by the disbelievers with regard to the Holy Qur'ān, and provide an answer to them. They had been saying that had the Qur'ān been the Word of Allah, it would not have employed contemptible creatures like an ant or a gnat in its parables, for such a thing goes against the sublimity and majesty of Allah, when it would embarrass even a man with some sense of dignity. The Holy Qur'ān points out that when one intends to speak of a detestable thing or person or situation, in a parable, the use of a gnat or something even more contemptible neither transgresses the principles of eloquence or logic, nor does it go against the sense of dignity or modesty, and hence Allah does not feel shy in using such imagery. The Holy Qur'ān also shows that doubts of this kind arise only in the minds of those whom their disbelief has drained of all power to see things in a proper perspective, while such empty misgivings never touch the minds and hearts of true believers.

Qur'ānic Parables: Test and guidance

The Holy Qur'ān proceeds to suggest even a raison d'être for the use of such parables: they serve as a test for men. In the case of those who are ready to think and to understand, they become a source of guidance; but for those who refuse to understand, out of indifference or out of a stubborn hostility and denial, they are a cause of greater confusion and misguidance. In elaborating this point, the Holy Qur'ān specifies that these parables throw into confusion only those disobedient and rebellious people who disavow the covenant they have made with Allah, break all those relationships which Allah has commanded them to keep intact, and consequently produce an ever-widening disorder and anarchy in the world.

Who is fāsiq ?

The Arabic word used by the Holy Qur'ān in speaking of the disobedient is Al-fāsiqīn, its root being fasaqa which means 'to go outside or to stray beyond a limit'. In the terminology of the Shari'ah, fisq signifies 'going beyond the circle of obedience to Allah, or transgressing the commandments of Allah'. Now, transgression does not stop at being merely disobedient in one's actions, but can sometimes lead to outright denial and disbelief. So, the word fāsiq is applied to a disbeliever (kāfir) as well - such a use of the word is frequent in the Holy Qur'an. A Muslim who is a habitual sinner is also called a fāsiq - this is how the jurists (Fuqaha') ordinarily use the word, making the fāsiq a counterpart of the kāfir on the opposite side. That is to say, a man who commits a major sin and does not repent, or who insists on committing minor sins and makes it a habit, would be called a fāsiq in the terminology of the Fuqaha'; on the other hand, a man who commits such sins publicly and openly without being ashamed of it is called a fājir. (See Mazharī)

Living by the Covenant with Allah

The Covenant which the transgressors disavow refers to the one that all men made with Allah before any of them came down to the earth. The Holy Qur'an says that Allah brought together the spirits of all men, and asked them: أَلَسْتُ بِرَبِّكُمْ: "Am I not your Lord?" And they replied with one voice: بلى: "Yes" (7:172). This acceptance and affirmation of Allah as their only Lord and Master requires that men should in no way be disobedient to Him. Allah's books and His prophets come down to the world to remind them of this Covenant, to renew it, and to teach them in detail how to act upon it. Now, those who break this Covenant, how can they ever be expected to learn from the prophets and the books of Allah?

Islamic concern about relationship to others

The cutting asunder of what Allah has commanded should be joined includes all kinds of relationships -- the one between Allah and His seryant, the one between a man and his parents and relatives, between him and his neighbours and friends, between one Muslim and another, between one man and another. Actually, Islam means fulfilling one's obligations with regard to all these relationships, and this is also the way to follow the Shari'ah. Deficiency in fulfilling these obligations produces all kinds of disorder among men, and thus the transgressors end up by being destructive for others and for themselves. It is these, the Holy Qur'an says, who are the losers -- in this world as in the other.

Injunctions and related considerations:

(1) Verse 26 shows if one intends to explain something useful or essential for the spiritual guidance of one's readers or listeners, it is neither sinful nor reprehensible to refer to something which is generally supposed to be contemptible or dirty, nor does it go against the dignity of the writer or the speaker. Examples of the use of such images or parables occur in the Holy Qur'ān, the Ḥadīth, and in the writings of the Sūfīs and other great Muslim scholars, all of whom have disregarded the habitual idea of modesty or seriousness in the interest of the real object to be attained.

(2) The reference to the disavowing of one's covenant with Allah indicates that the infringement of a contract or agreement made with one's fellow men is a grave sin, which may have the consequence of depriving a man of the ability to do good deeds.

(3) Verse 27 shows that it is essential for us to maintain the relationships which the Sharī'ah has commanded us to keep intact, and that it is forbidden to break them. Indeed, religion itself signifies the divinely ordained laws which bind us to fulfil our obligations with regard to Allah (Huqūqullāh) and with regard to His servants (Huqūq al-'Ibād). According to this verse, the fundamental cause of disorder in human society is the sundering of these relationships.

(4) The Holy Qur'ān says that real losers are those who go against divine commandments. There is a suggestion here that real loss pertains to the other world, the loss of this world being too small a thing to be worthy of serious consideration.

Verses 28-29

كَيْفَ تَكْفُرُونَ بِاللَّهِ وَكُنْتُمْ أَمْوَاتًا فَأَحْيَاكُمْ ثُمَّ يُمِيتُكُمْ ثُمَّ يُحْيِيكُمْ ثُمَّ إِلَيْهِ تُرْجَعُونَ ۝ هُوَ الَّذِي خَلَقَ لَكُمْ مَّا فِي الْأَرْضِ جَمِيعًا ثُمَّ اسْتَوَىٰ إِلَى السَّمَاءِ فَسَوَّاهُنَّ سَبْعَ سَمَوَاتٍ ۚ وَهُوَ بِكُلِّ شَيْءٍ عَلِيمٌ ۝

"How is it that you deny Allah despite that you were lifeless and He gave you life, then He will make you die, then make you live again, and then to Him you will be returned? It is He who created for you all that the earth contains; then He turned to the heavens and made them seven skies -- and He is the knower of all things." (Verses 28-29)

The earlier verses affirmed the existence and the Oneness of Allah, and prophethood, giving self-evident proofs and refuting the whimsical and false notions of the doubters and the disbelievers. These two verses speak of the blessings which Allah has showered on man, pointing out that all the same there are men who do not recognize the bounty of Allah and persist in their denial -- the suggestion being that if they do not want to take the trouble of considering the arguments which have been advanced by the Holy Qur'ān in the earlier verses, they should, as every man with an undistorted nature must, at least be grateful to their benefactor, for even this would be a way of realizing why they should be obedient to Allah.

The first of these two verses refers to the blessings which are particular to the very being of man -- that is to say, he had no life before Allah gave him existence. The second verse refers to the general blessings which are common to man and other creatures -- firstly, the earth and all that it contains and on which man's life immediately depends, and secondly, the skies with which life on earth is directly related.

Verse 28 begins by expressing surprise at those who insist on being ungrateful to Allah and on denying Him. On the face of it, the disbelievers had never denied Allah but only the Holy Prophet ﷺ, all the same, the Holy Qur'ān equates such a denial with the denial of Allah Himself.

Then, the verse reminds man that once he was "dead" (amwāt), or that he had no life. He existed, if at all, in the shape of billions of lifeless particles aimlessly floating; Allah brought them together, made them into a man, and gave them life.

The verse proceeds to warn him that Allah will take away his life, and then give it back to him a second time. This second life refers to the Day of Judgment when Allah will collect the lifeless and scattered particles of each and every man again, and give him a new life. Thus, the first 'death' or 'state of lifelessness' was at the beginning before man received life from Allah; the second death comes when a man completes the life-span allotted to him; and the second life will be given on the Day of Judgment.

The verse ends by telling man that he will ultimately go back to Allah. This, of course, refers to the Resurrection when all men will rise from their graves, will be assembled for giving an account of their deeds, and be finally punished or rewarded according to what they had been doing in the world.

According to this verse, the chief blessing of Allah for man is life, for without life he cannot profit from any other blessing. This is obvious enough. But the verse counts death too as a blessing. It is so, because physical death is the door to the perpetual life of the other world after which there is no death.

In recounting the blessings which man has received from Allah, verse 29 refers to Allah having created for man "all that the earth contains." This small phrase comprehends all kinds of benefits which accrue to him from the earth and its produce. Then, the verse speaks of the creation of the sky and its division into seven skies or heavens, as they are usually called in English. In this context, the Holy Qur'an uses the Arabic word, Istawā which initially means 'to stand upright, to climb', and thence signifies 'to turn or pay attention to something', and, in a wider sense, 'to take a straight and firm decision which nothing can hinder'. The implication here is that Allah being Omniscient and Omnipotent, it was not at all difficult for Him to create the universe, once He had decided to do so.

The life in 'Barzakh'

(The period between death and resurrection)

(1) Verse 28 shows that a man who does not apparently deny Allah, but refuses to accept the Holy Prophet ﷺ as the Messenger of Allah, and the Holy Qur'an as the Book of Allah, would still be counted among those who do not believe in Allah.

(2) Verse 28 mentions only one kind of life which is to follow one's physical death - that is, the life which will begin on the Day of Resurrection - but says nothing about the life in the grave, although the Holy Qur'ān and Ḥadīth explicitly speak of how people will be questioned about their faith in their graves, and will also receive some reward or punishment. Now, this life in the grave is something intermediary (Barzakh) between the life which man has in this world and one he will have in the other. In other words, it is a state in between the two, resembling the life one has while dreaming; it can be called a supplement to the life of this world as also a prelude to the life hereafter. In short, this intermediary life is not in itself a distinct entity, and hence need not be mentioned separately.

(3) According to verse 29, everything in the universe has been created for man. It means that there is nothing in the universe from which man does not derive some benefit in one way or the other, directly or indirectly. There are things which man uses physically as food or medicine; other things are useful for him without his knowing it; even poisonous or dangerous things do him some good; even things which are forbidden for him in one of their aspects, may in some other aspect be quite beneficial; finally, almost everything can serve to teach him a lesson or illuminate him in the interest of his life in the Hereafter. The great Sūfī Ibn 'Aṭā' remarks in connection with this verse: 'Allah has created the universe for you so that it should serve you and you should serve Allah. A wise man should thus know that he will certainly get what has been created for him, and should not, in worrying about it, forget the Being for whom he himself has been created' (Al-Baḥr al-Muḥīṭ).

(4) On the basis of verse 29, some scholars have come to the conclusion that since everything in the world has been created for man, it is essentially legitimate (Ḥalāl) and permissible (Mubāḥ) for man to make use of everything, except the things which have been forbidden by the Sharī'ah. So, the use of a thing is to be regarded as lawful so long as the Holy Qur'ān or the Ḥadīth does not forbid it.

On the contrary, some other scholars say that the mere fact of a thing having been created for the benefit of man does not argue that it automatically becomes lawful to make use of it. So, the use of everything is essentially unlawful unless an explicit statement in the Holy Qur'ān or the Ḥadīth, or an argument based on them establishes the use of a thing as legitimate.

There are still other authentic scholars who have not taken sides in this controversy. Ibn Hayyan, in his commentary 'Al-Baḥr al-Muḥīṭ', points out that this verse does not provide a valid basis for either of the two views, for the letter lām in the phrase خَلَقَ لَكُمْ : khalaqa lakum indicates causation, signifying that the universe has been "created for your sake." So, one cannot draw any conclusion from the phrase as to the use of everything being essentially legitimate or illegitimate. The injunction with regard to the legitimacy or the illegitimacy of the use of particular things have been provided elsewhere in the Holy Qur'ān and the Ḥadīth, and it is obligatory to follow these injunctions.

(5) Verse 29 shows that the earth was created before the skies, as indicated by the word, ثُمَّ : Thumma ('then'). Another verse of the Holy Qur'ān seems to be saying the opposite: وَالْأَرْضَ بَعْدَ ذَلِكَ دَحَاهَا : "He spread out the earth after this." (79:30) But it does not necessarily mean that the earth was created after the skies. What it actually implies is that although the earth had already been created when the skies came into being, yet a final shape was given to it after the creation of the skies.

(Al-Baḥr al-Muḥīṭ, etc.)

(6) According to verse 29, the skies are seven in number. This shows that the opinion of the ancient Greek astronomers and some Muslim philosophers, who used to speak of nine heavens, was no more than a conjecture.

Verses 30-33

وَإِذْ قَالَ رَبُّكَ لِلْمَلَكَةِ إِنِّي جَاعِلٌ فِي الْأَرْضِ خَلِيفَةً ۖ قَالُوا أَتَجْعَلُ فِيهَا مَنْ يُفْسِدُ فِيهَا وَيَسْفِكُ الدِّمَاءَ وَنَحْنُ نُسَبِّحُ بِحَمْدِكَ وَنُقَدِّسُ لَكَ ۗ قَالَ إِنِّي أَعْلَمُ مَا لَا تَعْلَمُونَ ۝ وَعَلَّمَ آدَمَ الْأَسْمَاءَ كُلَّهَا ثُمَّ عَرَضَهُمْ عَلَى الْمَلَائِكَةِ فَقَالَ أَنْبِئُونِي بِأَسْمَاءِ هَؤُلَاءِ إِنْ كُنْتُمْ صَادِقِينَ ۝ قَالُوا سُبْحَانَكَ لَا عِلْمَ لَنَا إِلَّا مَا عَلَّمْتَنَا إِنَّكَ أَنْتَ الْعَلِيمُ الْحَكِيمُ ۝ قَالَ يَادُمُ أَنْبِئْهُمْ بِأَسْمَائِهِمْ ۚ

فَلَمَّا أَنْبَأَهُمْ بِأَسْمَائِهِمْ قَالَ أَلَمْ أَقُلْ لَكُمْ إِنِّي أَعْلَمُ غَيْبَ
السَّمُوتِ وَالْأَرْضِ وَأَعْلَمُ مَا تُبْدُونَ وَمَا كُنْتُمْ تَكْتُمُونَ ٥

And when your Lord said to the angels, "I am going to create a deputy on the earth!" They said, "Will You create there one who will spread disorder on the earth and cause bloodsheds while we, along with your praises, proclaim Your purity and sanctify Your name?" He said, "Certainly, I know what you do not know." And He taught Ādam the names, all of them; then presented them before the angels, and said, "Tell me their names, if you are right." They said, "To You belongs all purity! We have no knowledge except what You have given us. Surely, You alone are the all-knowing, all-wise." He said, "O Ādam, tell them the names of all these." When he told them their names, Allah said, "Did I not tell you that I know the secrets of the skies and of the earth, and that I know what you disclose and what you have been concealing. (Verses 30 - 33)

The preceding verses recounted the general and some of the particular blessings of Allah, and asked man to recognize them and not to be ungrateful and disobedient to his Benefactor. Now, ten verses, beginning with the 30th, tell the story of the father of mankind, Ādam عليه السلام, in continuation of this theme and also by way of illustration. For, blessings are of two kinds - tangible and intangible. Food, water, money, houses, or lands are some of the tangible blessings; while honour, happiness or knowledge are intangible ones. The earlier verses were concerned with blessings of the first kind; these verses speak of those of the second kind - that is to say, how Allah bestowed the gift of knowledge on Ādam عليه السلام, made the angels prostrate themselves before him to show their respect, and gave men the honour of being his sons.

The creation of Ādam عليه السلام

The present three verses relate how Allah, having decided to create Ādam عليه السلام and to make him His deputy on the earth, spoke of it to the angels - seemingly by way of a trial, suggesting that they should express their opinions in this matter. The angels submitted that they could not understand why men were being chosen to be the deputies, for some of them would shed blood and spread disorder on this earth. They thought that they themselves were more suited to perform this function, as the nature of angels is wholly good, no evil deed can possibly come out of them, they are totally obedient to Allah, and should hence be more capable of managing the affairs of the world. In replying to them, Allah first adopted the mode of authority, and told the angels that they knew nothing about the nature and the needs of deputation on the earth, and that Allah alone was the one to know it fully. The second answer was in the mode of wisdom - Ādam عليه السلام had been given preference over the angels on account of his superiority in the station of knowledge, because in order to function properly as a deputy on the earth one must know the names, the properties and the characteristics of the things to be found there, and the angels had no aptitude for this kind of knowledge.

(1) A question arises here as to why Allah chose to speak of His decision to the angels. Was it merely to inform them? Was it to seek their advice? Or, was it to make them express their opinion on the subject?

Why Allah discussed Ādam's creation with angels?

As for seeking advice, it is obvious enough that one turns for advice to wise and trustworthy people only when one cannot see all the aspects of a problem clearly, and does not want to depend on one's own knowledge and understanding alone, or when the rights of others are equal to one's own, and they too have to be consulted, as happens in the counsels of the world. Evidently, neither of the two situations obtain in the present case. Allah is the creator of the universe, and knows everything about the smallest particle of dust; He sees and hears everything, apparent or hidden. How can He stand in need of anyone's advice? Similarly, He does not run the universe under the parliamentary system, in which all have equal rights and everyone has to be consulted directly or indirectly. He is the Lord and Master, and all His creatures, be they men or angels, are His slaves - no one has the right to question Him about His actions, and to ask Him why He did this or why He did not do that: لَا يُسْأَلُ عَمَّا يَفْعَلُ وَهُمْ يُسْأَلُونَ : "He cannot be questioned as to what He does, while they are to be questioned." (21:23)

In fact, Allah did not mean to seek the advice of the angels, nor was there any need for it, but He, in His wisdom, gave a mere statement the form of a consultation in order to teach men the advisability of mutual consultation. After all, the Holy Prophet ﷺ was a messenger of Allah, and all the information he needed in dealing with the affairs of the world could have been conveyed to him by means of revelation, and yet the Holy Qur'an asks him to seek the advice of his Companions, so that the Islamic community should learn this lesson from him and the way of mutual consultation should be established through him. In short, this is the first raison d'être of the mode of expression adopted by Allah. (Rūḥ al-Bayān)

The other has been suggested by the Holy Qur'an itself. Before the appearance of man, the angels had taken it for granted that Allah would not create a being who should be superior to them and greater in knowledge - as has been reported in a narration coming down from the blessed Companion Ibn 'Abbās and cited by Ibn Jarīr in his commentary. But Allah knew that He would create a being who would be superior to all other creatures and greater than them in knowledge, and who would receive the gift of divine viceregency. So, Allah mentioned this in the assembly of the angels so that they may disclose what they had been thinking. Speaking according to their own lights, they very humbly submitted that a creature like man who carried within himself a tendency towards evil and disorder and who would not balk even at blood-shed, could not be expected to maintain peace and order on the earth, while they themselves, being free of all evil, and perfect in their obedience and devotion, could perform the function more satisfactorily. They did not mean to raise an objection to the choice which Allah had made, for angels are innocent of such sentiments; they were only being curious, and wanted to know the raison d'être of such a choice.

To begin with, Allah gave them a very brief reply - اِنْزِ اَعْلَمُ مَا لَا تَعْلَمُونَ :

"I know what you do not know", implying that they are not aware of the nature and the requirements of divine viceregency, which had led them to suppose that only pure and innocent beings could fulfil the conditions necessary for such a responsible position.

Then, Allah demonstrated the truth to them in a vivid form. He gave to Ādam عليه السلام a kind of knowledge for which he alone had been endowed with the proper aptitude, and not the angels. That is to say, He taught him the names, the properties and qualities of all the existents, animate or inanimate. Angelic nature is not capable of such awareness - for example, an angel cannot really experience the pain of hunger and thirst, the tumult of passions, the torment from the bite of a scorpion or a snake, or the exhilaration from an intoxicant. Only Ādam عليه السلام had the capacity to learn such things, and he was taught to know them. Then, there is no indication in the Holy Qur'ān to show that he was taught in privacy, apart from the angels. It may well be that the teaching in itself was open to the angels as well as to him; his nature allowed him to receive it, and he learnt the lesson, while, they were impeded by their own proper nature, and could not. Or, it may be that the teaching did not take an external form at all, but that the Adamic nature was made to carry this particular kind of knowledge within itself without the need of a formal education, just as an infant does not have to be taught how to suck the mother's milk, or a duckling how to swim. As to the question why Allah, being omnipotent, did not change the nature of the angels and make them learn these things, we shall say that the question, in fact, boils down to this: Why did not Allah change the angels into men? For, if their nature had been altered, they would no longer have remained angels, but become men.

In short, through this demonstration Allah made the angels realize how wrong they were in supposing that He would not create any being superior to them in any way, and that they themselves were more suitable for being the viceregents of Allah than Ādam عليه السلام. Since they failed to name the things which Ādam عليه السلام could, they came to see that purity and innocence is not the criterion in choosing a deputy or viceregent but the knowledge of the things which are to be found on the earth, of the ways of using them, and of the consequences which would follow from such a use.

We can also infer a general principle from the episode - it is necessary for a ruler to know fully the nature, the temperament and the peculiarities of the people over whom he is to rule, without which he cannot enforce justice and order. If one does not know the pain of being hungry, how can one deal justice to the man who has unjustly been kept hungry?

We may also point out that in expressing their opinion, the angels were neither raising an objection, nor being vain and proud, nor asserting their right; it was, on their part, only a humble submission, and an offer of their services. When they found that there was another being who was, with his special kind of knowledge, more suitable for the function, they as humbly acknowledged the fact and withdrew their earlier opinion in saying: سُبْحَانَكَ لَا عِلْمَ لَنَا إِلَّا مَا عَلَّمْتَنَا إِنَّكَ أَنْتَ الْعَلِيمُ الْحَكِيمُ : "To You belongs all purity! We have no knowledge except what You have given us. Surely, You alone are the all-knowing, the all-wise." In the present context, the phrase, "To You belongs all purity" also has the implication that Allah is free from the charge of having withheld from the angels the knowledge which He gave to Ādam عليه السلام, for, being the all-knowing and the all-wise, He gives to each creature the kind and the degree of knowledge and understanding which He, and He alone, knows to be in consonance with the specific nature of that creature.

Another question which may arise out of this episode is: How did the angels come to know that man would shed blood? Did they possess the knowledge of hidden things and of divine secrets? Or, was it a mere conjecture on their part? Most of the authoritative scholars believe, on the basis of certain آثار : 'Āthār' or reports available about the blessed Companions, that it was Allah Himself who had informed the angels on this occasion as to how man would behave on the earth. (See 'Rūḥ al-Ma'ānī'). It is only then that they became curious about the raison d'être of man being chosen as the viceregent in spite of his propensity to evil.

Beside demonstrating the superiority of Ādam عليه السلام in knowledge, Allah dispelled the misgivings of the angels with regard to the evil propensities in man by the short and simple answer, إِنْ أَعْلَمُ مَا لَا : "Certainly, I know what you do not know." There is a subtle suggestion here - what makes man fit for viceregency is just the peculiarity which, in the eyes of the angels, made him unfit for this function. For, a deputy or viceregent is needed on the earth just for the purpose of preventing blood-shed and disorder; if there is no possibility of disorder in a place, where is the need for sending there an administrator? Thus, it was the Divine Will and Wisdom that, just as Allah had created beings as innocent and sinless as the angels, or beings as totally evil as Satan and his progeny, or beings like the jinns in whom evil dominated over good, He would also create beings in whom good and evil should be equally mixed, who should try to conquer the evil in themselves and to grow in goodness so as to seek and attain the pleasure of their Creator.

Allah is the creator of the language

(2) This episode, according to Imām al-Ash'arī, shows that language as such has been created by Allah Himself, and not invented by man - its use by different kinds of men has later on produced the many forms of language.

(3) One should note a subtle suggestion here in the use of two words. In asking the angels for the names of things, Allah said, أَتَشْرُونِي : "Tell Me"; but in commanding Ādam عليه السلام to do so, He said, أَتَنْهَهُمْ : "Tell them." The difference in the mode of expression shows that Ādam عليه السلام was given the rank of a teacher, and the angels that of pupils. It is thus an indication of his superiority over them. Another thing the episode indicates is that an increase or decrease is possible in the degree of knowledge the angels possess, for they were given, through Ādam عليه السلام, at least a primary knowledge about a thing which they did not know before.

Man is the viceregent of Allah on the earth

(4) These verses tell us that a viceregent was appointed to keep order on the earth and to promulgate divine laws. From here we learn the basic principles for the governance of men on the earth. The ultimate sovereignty in the universe belongs to Allah Himself, as is explicitly stated in many verses of the Holy Qur'ān: إِنَّ الْحُكْمَ إِلَهِ : "Judgment belongs to Allah alone" (6:57); لَهُ مُلْكُ السَّمَوَاتِ وَالْأَرْضِ : "The sovereignty of the skies and the earth belongs to Him alone" (9:116); لَهُ الْخَلْقُ وَالْأَمْرُ : "Verily, His is the Creation and the Command." (7:54)

But He has, in His wisdom, chosen to send His viceregents to the earth for maintaining spiritual and temporal order. Their function is to announce and promulgate divine commandments, to teach men how to abide by these laws, and sometimes even to exercise temporal power as well as spiritual authority under divine guidance. The appointment is made directly by Allah Himself, and is in no sense a reward for the good deeds or the spiritual effort of the individual concerned. There is a total consensus of all the authentic scholars of the Islamic Ummah on the doctrine that prophethood is not a thing which one can attain through one's personal effort or on the merit of one's good deeds, but that Allah Himself, in His supreme knowledge and wisdom, chooses certain individuals for acting as His messengers, prophets and vice-regents. The Holy Qur'ān has explicitly declared it in several verses: أَلَلَّهَ يَصْطَفِي مِنَ الْمَلَائِكَةِ رُسُلًا وَمِنَ النَّاسِ إِنَّ اللَّهَ سَمِيعٌ بَصِيرٌ : "Allah chooses His messengers from among the angels and from among men; surely Allah is All-Hearing, All-Seeing" (22:75); أَلَلَّهَ أَعْلَمُ حَيْثُ يَجْعَلُ رُسُلَهُ : "Allah knows best whom to entrust with His message" (6:124).

These viceregents receive divine commandments directly from Allah, and then promulgate them in the world. The chain of viceregents began with Ādam عليه السلام and continued in the same way upto the Holy Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ .

The Holy Prophet ﷺ was the last Caliph of Allah on earth

(5) The Holy Prophet ﷺ came to the earth as the last viceregent (Khalīfa), the last Messenger (Rasūl) and the last prophet (Nabiyy) of Allah, endowed with certain special qualities peculiar to him which he does not share with any other prophet. We may mention some of these characteristics:

(a) Each of the earlier prophets was sent for the guidance of a particular country or people, and his authority was limited to his jurisdiction alone, - for example, Mūsā and 'Īsā - (Moses and Jesus Christ (عليهم السلام) were sent to Banī Isrā'īl (the Israelites). But the Holy Prophet ﷺ has been sent for the guidance of all the men and all the jinns, and his authority extends to all the members of the two species. The Holy Qur'ān has declared the universality of his prophethood in these words: قُلْ يَا أَيُّهَا النَّاسُ إِنِّي رَسُولُ اللَّهِ إِلَيْكُمْ جَمِيعًا الَّذِي لَهُ مُلْكُ السَّمَوَاتِ وَ الْأَرْضِ : "Say: O mankind, I am the messenger of Allah to you all, of Him to whom belongs the sovereignty of the skies and of the earth" (7:158). A ḥadīth of the Sahīh of Muslim reports the Holy Prophet ﷺ as having said that he had been made superior to all other prophets in six things. The first of these is, of course, the universality of his prophethood.

(b) Just as the viceregency and prophethood of all the earlier prophets was limited to particular peoples and countries, in the same way it was also limited to specific periods; when the age of one prophet was over, another prophet would come to take his place as the new viceregent. On the contrary, the Holy Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ has been sent by Allah as the last of all prophets; his prophethood is not circumscribed within a specific period, but shall last till the end of time.

(c) It has so happened that the teachings and the Shari'ah of each of the earlier prophets would remain intact for a time, but then gradually people would start deviating from them and distorting them till they became unrecognizable; at this stage Allah would send a new prophet with a new Shari'ah. But the Shari'ah of the Holy Prophet ﷺ is to remain alive in its integral form upto the end of the universe. Allah has taken upto Himself the responsibility of protecting the words and the meanings of the Holy Qur'ān:

إِنَّا نَحْنُ نَزَّلْنَا الذِّكْرَ وَإِنَّا لَهُ لَحَافِظُونَ

"It is We who have sent down the Remembrance (i.e. the Holy Qur'ān) and We are its Protector" (15:9).

Similarly, He has made a special provision for the preservation of the Ḥadīth which contains the teachings of the Holy Prophet ﷺ that is to say, in spite of all the vicissitudes of time there shall remain till the Doomsday a group of people who will preserve these teachings and transmit them accurately to others, and who will receive help and protection from Allah Himself. Since Allah has ordained the survival of the Holy Qur'ān and the Ḥadīth, there is obviously no need for a new prophet or messenger or viceregent and no room for a new Shari'ah.

(d) Contrary to the case of all the earlier prophets, the prophethood and viceregency of the last of them, Muḥammad ﷺ, is not limited to a particular period, but is to continue upto the end of time, and those who succeed him for the preservation of spiritual and temporal order in the world, are to be, not the viceregents of Allah, but the viceregents of the Holy Prophet ﷺ and his deputies. A ḥadīth reported by al-Bukhārī and Muslim both says:

كانت بنو إسرائيل تسوسهم الأنبياء ، كلما هلك نبي خلفه نبي وانه ،
لأنبي بعدى وسيكون خلفاء فيكثرون

"The Israelites were governed by their prophets. When a prophet died, another would come to take his place. And beware, no prophet is to come after me. Of course, there will be my deputies (Khulafā'), and there will be many of them."

The issue of Caliphate after the Holy Prophet ﷺ

(e) Allah has ordained that after the Holy Prophet ﷺ his Ummah, or the Islamic community, shall as a body enjoy the privilege which has been that of the prophets عليهم السلام. That is to say, the Ummah as a collective body has been declared to be innocent and under the special protection of Allah Himself, so that it will never unanimously agree upon a doctrinal error or a deviation, and hence any decision which has been arrived at in religious matters through the consensus of the Ummah is to be regarded as manifestation of Divine Commandment. That is why the consensus of the Ummah has been accepted as the third source of the Shari'ah, the first two being the Holy Qur'ān and the Hadith. For the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم has himself said, "لن تجتمع امتى على الضلالة": "My Ummah shall never collectively agree upon error." And we have already referred to another ḥadīth which tells us that no matter how much the world has changed or how indifferent people have grown to the Truth, there shall always remain in the Islamic Ummah a group of people who will defend and preserve the Truth, and who will finally win.

(6) Since it has been ordained that the Islamic Ummah as a body shall never go wrong, the responsibility of choosing a deputy to the Holy Prophet ﷺ has also been entrusted to it. Now, for the governance of the earth the legitimate way is that the Ummah should select a Khalīfah who, once chosen, would solely be responsible for the maintenance of spiritual and temporal order. And it is also possible that there should be a single Khalīfah for the whole world.

The first to succeed the Holy Prophet ﷺ as his deputies were the First Four Great Khalīfahs, known as al-Khulafā' al-Rashidūn (or the rightly-guided ones, commonly translated as the 'Orthodox Caliphs'), and the Khilafāt order functioned according to the proper principles upto the end of their time. So, their decisions are not merely temporary judgments, but have a permanent legislative value, and carry an authority in their own degree, for the Holy Prophet ﷺ has said, عليكم بسنتي و سنة الخلفاء الراشدين: 'Follow my way steadfastly, and the way of the rightly-guided Khalīfahs.'

After the age of the rightly-guided Khalīfahs, different rulers appeared in different regions, but none of them can be described as a Khalīfah of the whole Islamic community in the proper sense of the term, though they may be called the Amīrs of particular regions. When it became practically impossible for all the Muslims of the world to agree upon one man as their Khalīfah, and it became customary to have a separate Amīr for each region, people accepted the principle that the man who had been chosen or acknowledged by the majority of the Muslims in a country, should be called the Amīr of that country. The basis for this procedure has been provided by the Holy Qur'an itself: وَأَمْرُهُمْ شُورَى بَيْنَهُمْ: "And they conduct their affairs by mutual consultation" (42:38).

The modern legislative assemblies are a form of mutual consultation, with the difference that they are quite free to make whatever laws they like according to their own opinion, while an Islamic legislative assembly, its members and their Amīr all shall be bound by the law which Allah has sent us through the Holy Prophet ﷺ. There are certain specific conditions for the membership of an Islamic assembly as well as for the choice of an Amīr. And, most important of all, laws must be made within the bounds of the basic principles laid down by the Holy Qur'ān and Sunnah, the authority of which the assembly cannot have the right to question.

Let me give a brief summary of the whole discussion. The verses which tell us of how Allah informed the angels about his intention to send a viceregent to the earth, provide us with some of the fundamental principles of the governance of man:-

- (a) The sovereignty of the skies and of the earth belongs to Allah Himself.
- (b) The function of promulgating the Commandments of Allah on the earth is performed by a viceregent who is at the same time a messenger of Allah and His Prophet ﷺ .
- (c) The chain of such viceregents ends with the Holy Prophet ﷺ , for he is the last Messenger and Prophet ﷺ .
- (d) Now the function of viceregency is performed by the deputies of the Holy Prophet ﷺ .
- (e) Such a deputy (Khalīfah) is to be chosen by the Ummah or Islamic community.¹⁴

14. (1) Some Modernists have zealously taken to the habit of interpreting these verses as implying that man as a viceregent of Allah is required to make a 'progress' in 'Science' - that is, in the empirical study of physical phenomena; a so-called 'Muslim' translator of the Holy Qur'ān has even had the temerity to translate the name 'Ādam' by the English word 'Man', thus denying the existence and prophethood of Ādam عليه السلام . In order to dispel such grave errors and distortions of word and meaning, let us point out that the 'names' which Allah taught to Ādam عليه السلام do not refer merely to the chemical or biological or psychological properties of things and men, but to their essential qualities and aptitudes - we are using the word 'essential' in the technical and metaphysical sense of the word in which it was originally used in the West too. Maulana Ashraf Alī Thānavi adds in his 'Bayān al-Qur'ān' that the knowledge of the 'names' even includes a knowledge of the injunctions of the Sharī'ah as to the distinction between the lawful and the unlawful. Then, there are many great Sūfīs who maintain that Ādam عليه السلام was given the knowledge of 'the names of Allah' - not of all the divine names in detail, of course, for it is not possible for a created being to comprehend the Infinite, but of divine names in a summary form. This interpretation

وَإِذْ قُلْنَا لِلْمَلَائِكَةِ اسْجُدُوا لِآدَمَ فَسَجَدُوا إِلَّا إِبْلِيسَ أَبَى

And when We said to the angels: "Prostrate before Adam!" So, they prostrated, all but Iblis. He refused, and joined the infidels." (Verse 34)

The episode recounted in the foregoing verses has shown how the angels came to learn that Adam عليه السلام was superior to them in so far as he possessed the forms of knowledge necessary for the function of

has been advanced by as authentic a commentator as Qadi Thanauallah of Pānīpat in his 'Tafsīr al-Mazharī'. In the explanation of this subtle point we may say that every thing that exists reflects some divine attribute, which in its turn is a manifestation of a divine name; thus, divine names are the essential principles or roots of all things, and one who knows divine names does also know things in their inner natures.

(2) With regard to the question of the viceregency of Allah, we cannot pass over a very serious distortion of the authentic doctrine which has been introduced by the Modernists and seems to be growing in currency. Under the influence of Western Humanism, and specially in their indifference to doctrinal matters, the Modernists have come to identify the prophet and the father of mankind, Ādam عليه السلام totally with the biological species called 'man', and have made out as if every individual member of this species, unconditionally and without any qualifications, is born to be a viceregent of Allah. The error has been promoted by a thoughtless misreading of Sufi metaphysical texts and Sufi poetry. What our Modernists have never cared to learn is the concept of degrees and their distinctions. The Sufis, no doubt, often speak of 'man' as being the viceregent of Allah, but what they are actually referring to is not a biological organism or species, but 'Al-Insān Al-Kāmil', 'the Universal Man' - a term which the orientalists have wrongly rendered as 'the perfect man', thus introducing ethical implications in the sphere of pure metaphysics. In the writings of the Sufis, prose and poetry both, 'Man' also stands for 'the Total and Essential Reality of man' (Al-Ḥaqīqah al-Jāmi'ah al-Insāniyyah). Now, the Universal Man par excellence is the Holy Prophet ﷺ; this is the first degree of "manhood" to which belong the Aulia' (Men of Allah or the great saints) and those rulers who dealt justice according to the Shari'ah.

Then, there are lower degrees pertaining to the pious and the virtuous Muslims down to the lowest degree where stand people who are sinful, yet, being Muslims, can hope for salvation. Allah alone knows best as to divine viceregency, while they themselves did not, nor did the jinns. Now, Allah willed to manifest this superiority in a visible and concrete form. So, He commanded the angels to prostrate themselves before Ādam عليه السلام in his honour. They obeyed except Iblis or Satan who, in his pride, refused to do so.

If we go by the words of the Holy Qur'ān, the command was given to the angels alone, but, in excepting Iblis from those who obeyed, the text also suggests that the command was given to all the created beings that existed at that time and possessed understanding, including the jinns as well as the angels. But the Holy Qur'ān mentions the angels alone, because when superior beings like the angels were required to show their respect for Ādam عليه السلام, inferior creatures like the jinns must, it goes without saying, have been ordered to do the same.

Angels prostrate before Ādam

(1) In this verse, the angels have been commanded to prostrate themselves before Ādam عليه السلام. Another verse of the Holy Qur'ān tells us that the parents and the brothers of Yūsuf (Joseph) عليه السلام on reaching Egypt, prostrated themselves before him (12:100). Evidently such a prostration cannot have been intended as an act of worship, for worshipping anyone other than Allah is an act of association (Shirk) and infidelity (Kufr), and hence cannot possibly be allowed by any who belongs to which degree; below the degree of the blessed Companions one can never speak with certitude. If we allow ourselves to associate viceregency with an ordinary Muslim, it would only be viceregency, so to say, by reflection, just as the 'Imān of every Muslim is only a reflection of the 'Imān of the Holy Prophet ﷺ. Any way, the necessary condition of receiving even a faint reflection of viceregency and "Manhood" is that one should be a Muslim, for, as the Holy Qur'ān has explicitly declared, 'Allah shall not now accept any faith except Islam.' As for attributing viceregency of "Manhood" to common man as such is concerned, it can at best only be viceregency, to use Aristotelean terms, in potency and not in act - it cannot be effective unless it is actualized through a total submission to the Shari'ah and a strenuous spiritual effort and waiting upon the grace of Allah. In fact, the highest excellence open to man now is to be in word and deed and thought a perfect follower of the Sunnah, the way of the Holy Prophet ﷺ.

Shari'ah. So, it appears that in the days of the ancient prophets prostrating oneself before somebody must have been just an act of courtesy or a way of showing one's respect, and enjoyed the same value as we do in our own days things like a simple greeting, a hand-shake, the kissing of hand, or standing up in someone's honour. Imam Al-Jassās has said in his Ahkām al-Qur'ān that it was permissible in the Shari'ah of the earlier prophets عليهم السلام to prostrate oneself in honour of one's elders, but that the Shari'ah of the Holy Prophet ﷺ has forbidden gestures like prostrating oneself, or bowing down very low or standing with one hand placed on the other in the manner of the Salāh before someone, all of which may suggest an act of worship, and has allowed only greeting (Salām) and hand-shake as a gesture of courtesy or respect.

It is easy to understand the raison d'être of such a prohibition. Association, infidelity and the worship of anyone other than Allah are things which in their nature go against the very principle of Īmān (faith), and cannot therefore be tolerated by any Shari'ah. There are, however, certain acts and gestures which are not in themselves acts of 'association' or infidelity, but may, on account of the ignorance or indifference of people, become a prelude to 'association' and infidelity. So, the Shari'ahs of the earlier prophets did not forbid such acts in an absolute manner, but prevented them from being used as the instruments of 'association' and infidelity. For example, making pictures of living things is not in itself an act of 'association' or infidelity, and was hence permissible in the earlier Shari'ahs. In speaking of how the jinns used to serve Sulayman عليه السلام (Solomon) the Holy Qur'an itself says: يَعْمَلُونَ لَهُ مَا يَشَاءُ مِنْ مَحَارِبَ وَمَقَائِلَ : "They made for him whatever he liked - places of worship, and pictures." (34:13) Similarly, prostrating oneself before somebody as a gesture of respect was permissible in the earlier Shari'ahs. But gradually the practice opened the way to 'association' and infidelity on account of people's ignorance and thoughtlessness, and even caused grave distortions in the Shari'ahs of different prophets, which had to be rectified by other prophets and other Shari'ahs.

Since the Holy Prophet ﷺ is the last of all the prophets and messengers of Allah, and his Shari'ah is the last of all Shari'ahs and is to remain valid upto the end of time, Allah has, in order to protect it against all distortion, stopped every chink through which 'association' or idolatry could possibly enter. That is why this Shari'ah has strictly forbidden all those practices which had at one time or another served as a means towards 'association' or idol-worship.

For example, making pictures of living things has been totally banned; prostrating oneself before somebody, even as a mark of respect, has been forbidden; it is not permissible to offer one's Salah (prayer) at those hours of the day which the infidels had reserved for worshipping their gods, for even this slight and external correspondence might lead to 'association'; and, according to a Hadith reported by Muslim, one is not allowed to call one's slave an "abd", nor is a slave allowed to call his master a "rabb" - the words respectively signify "a slave" and 'one who gives nurture', and are as such harmless, but they can be misconstrued, and may mislead ignorant slaves or helpless and subjugated people into the worship of their masters: hence the prohibition.

With regard to the question of prostration, we may add that, according to some authentic scholars, Salāh, the basic form of Islamic worship, comprises of four kinds of actions - standing upright, bowing, sitting down, and prostrating oneself; the first two of these, standing up and sitting down, are actions which one habitually does in the course of one's daily chores, and which one also performs as acts of worship in the course of a Salāh (prayer), but the other two, bowing down and prostrating oneself, are actions which one does not go through as a matter of habit, and which are characteristically associated with Salāh (prayer) and 'Ibādah (worship); hence it is that the Islamic Shari'ah has identified them with acts of worship, and forbidden the Muslims to bow down or prostrate themselves before anyone other than Allah.

Given that the Holy Qur'an itself speaks of prostration as a mark of respect, one would wish to know on what grounds it has been affirmed that the Islamic Shari'ah has forbidden this practice. As to this question, we may point out that several well-known narrations coming down to us from the Holy Prophet ﷺ through quite a large number of his blessed Companions, are there to establish that prostrating oneself before somebody as a mark of respect is unlawful (harām). To cite only one such narration, the Holy Prophet ﷺ has said that, if he could allow people to prostrate themselves before anyone other than Allah as a mark of respect, he would have commanded wives to prostrate themselves before their husbands. This clearly shows that prostration as a mark of respect is absolutely forbidden, and no allowance can, in this respect, be made in favour of any created being. We may add that the Ḥadīth we have just referred to has come down to us through twenty Companions, while, according to Tadrīb al-Rawī, the famous book on the fundamentals of the science of Ḥadīth, a Tradition which has been reported by only ten Companions is called Mutawātir, and enjoys the same authority in the matter of injunctions as the Holy Qur'ān.

(2) The Holy Qur'ān describes Iblīs or Satan as an infidel. His infidelity does not arise from disobedience in his action, for, according to the Sharī'ah, giving up an obligation in practice is only a sin and a transgression, and does not constitute infidelity. Iblīs became an infidel, because he had defied and challenged a divine commandment, and had, in refusing to prostrate himself, virtually said that, in his opinion, Ādam عليه السلام was not worthy of it.

(3) Iblīs had attained such a high degree in science and knowledge that he was called Tā'ūs al-Malā'ikah : "The Peacock Among the Angels." How did he, then, come to commit such a suicidal error? Some scholars say that it was because of his pride and vanity that Allah took back from him the wealth of knowledge and understanding, and hence he came to act like an ignorant fool. Others have suggested that his error was due to self-love and ambition. The famous commentary, 'Rūh al-Bayān' resolves the question by quoting a line of verse in Arabic which shows that once the aid of Allah has been withdrawn from a man, he can no longer save himself from sins, and all the effort he makes only serves to push him farther and farther into misguidance. May Allah, in his mercy, save all of us from such a fate! The commentary draws from it the conclusion that one should not be vain about one's learning or one's deeds or even about one's Īmān (faith), for Īmān is valid only if it lasts till one's final breath and into the first stage of one's journey to the other world.

Verses 35-36

وَقُلْنَا يَا آدَمُ اسْكُنْ أَنْتَ وَزَوْجُكَ الْجَنَّةَ وَكُلَا مِنْهَا رَغَدًا حَيْثُ

 اهْبِطُوا بَعْضُكُمْ لِبَعْضٍ عَدُوٌّ وَلَكُمْ فِي الْأَرْضِ مُسْتَقَرٌّ وَ
 مَتَاعٌ إِلَىٰ حِينٍ ٦

And We said, "O Ādam, dwell, you and your wife, in Paradise, and eat at pleasure wherever you like, but do not go near this tree or you shall join the transgressors." Then, Satan caused them to slip from it, and brought them out of where they had been. And We said, "Go down, you all, some of you enemies of some; and on the earth there will be for you a dwelling place and enjoyment for a time." (Verses 35 - 36)

This is a continuation of the story of Ādam عليه السلام. When his superiority over the angels and his fitness for the role of viceregent had been announced to the angels and been acknowledged by them, and Iblis had been condemned as an infidel and expelled from Paradise on account of his pride and his defiance of divine authority, Ādam and Ḥawwā عليها السلام (Eve), his wife, received a command from Allah to live in Paradise and enjoy its blessings. But they were also instructed not to eat the fruit of a particular tree. Now, having been disgraced because of Ādam عليه السلام, Iblīs or Satan had an account to settle with him, and as soon as he got the opportunity, he tricked them into eating from this tree. Because of this error on their part, they too were ordered to leave Paradise, and to go down and live on the earth. They were at the same time warned that their existence on the earth would no longer be full of perpetual bliss as it had been in Paradise, but that there would be dissension and enmity among men, their progeny, which would spoil the joy of earthly life.

Since these events took place after Ādam عليه السلام had been created and the angels had been commanded to prostrate themselves before him, some scholars have concluded from it that the creation of Ādam عليه السلام and the prostration of the angels took place somewhere outside Paradise, and that he was sent there later on. But the words of the Holy Qur'ān do not exclude the other interpretation that both the events took place in Paradise, but that he had not been told at that time where he was to live, which was done later.

When Ādam and Ḥawwā عليها السلام were sent to live in Paradise, they were allowed to eat whatever they liked 'at pleasure' - the Arabic word in the text being 'Raghadan', which signifies provision for which one does not have to work, and which is never exhausted nor falls short. Thus, their life was totally free from all care.

They were commanded not to go near a certain tree - which was an emphatic way of asking them not to eat its fruit. The tree has not been given a specific name either in the Holy Qur'ān or in the Hadith. Some commentators say that it was wheat, others say that it was a fig-tree or a grape-vine. But it is not really necessary to make specific what the Holy Qur'ān has left vague. (See Qurtubi) ¹⁵

According to the Holy Qur'ān, it was Satan who 'caused them to slip' (azallahumā). It clearly shows that the error and disobedience of Ādam and Hawwā عليها السلام was not of the kind which technically constitutes a sin, but arose out of a misunderstanding produced by Satan. They ate the forbidden fruit, because Satan had cleverly deceived them. ¹⁶

A question arises here as to how Satan got into Paradise for seducing Ādam and Hawwā عليها السلام, when he had already been expelled from there for refusing to prostrate himself. There are many possible ways in which he can have played his trick. Possibly he never

15. Even the Bible does not name the tree. As to the apple being the fruit concerned, it is only a popular misunderstanding arising from the fact that the Latin word "Malum" means an "apple" as well as a "sin, or evil."

16. We may note that in the previous episode the Holy Qur'ān used the name Iblīs - a word which comes from the root Balas, 'to be disappointed', and hence signifies "one who has lost all hope of receiving the grace of Allah." In the present episode he has been called Al-Shaytān - a word which comes from the root Shatn, "to be far away", and hence signifies "one who has been removed far away from the mercy of Allah." Iblīs is a proper name, while Shaytān is the name of a genus. When the Holy Qur'ān speaks of Al-Shaytān, it always refers to Iblīs. But the common noun Shaytan, or its plural Shayaṭīn refers to the genus, which includes men and jinns both. It would be interesting to add that the root Shayt means 'the excess of anger and rage', and may possibly be the basis of the word Shaytān.

met them, but planted the suggestion in their minds from afar - a thing which Satan can always do, and of which we have a specimen in the work of the hypnotists. It is equally possible that Satan, being one of the jinns whom Allah has given certain unusual powers denied to man, assumed the shape of a snake or of something else, and thus succeeded in entering Paradise. Perhaps it was because of this disguise that Ādam عليه السلام did not remember Allah's warning that Satan was his enemy. According to the Holy Qur'ān, Satan assured them on oath that he was one of their well-wishers (7:21). It apparently suggests that he did actually meet them, and speak to them face 'o face.

The Holy Qur'ān says that Satan فَاخْرَجَهُمَا : "brought them out" of the state in which they had been living. In actual fact, they were 'brought out' under a divine command, but since Satan served as a means and as an intermediary, the action has been attributed to him.¹⁷

In commanding Ādam and Hawwā عليها السلام to go down from Paradise, Allah also said, بَعْضُكُمْ يَكُونُ عَدُوٌّ : 'Some of you (shall be the) enemies of some.' If Satan had not been turned out of the skies till then, he is included in this address, the implication being that the enmity between Satan on the one hand, and Ādam and Hawwā عليها السلام and their progeny on the other, would continue on the earth too. But if Satan, as some scholars maintain, had already been expelled, then the addressees are Ādam and Hawwā عليها السلام and their progeny; the implication would now be that Ādam and Hawwā عليها السلام would have to undergo a double punishment, firstly that of being banished from Paradise, secondly that of seeing enmity arise among their children which must make life unpleasant for parents. (Bayān al-Qur'ān)

They were also told that the earth would be a temporary dwelling-place for them, and that they would have to leave it too, which also meant that they would not find real peace of mind there.

Ādam and Hawwa in Paradise

- (1) In allowing Ādam and Hawwā عليها السلام to eat at pleasure, and in forbidding them to go near the tree, Allah used, according to the text of the Holy Qur'ān, the verbs for the dual number, thus including both in the address. But in asking them to live in Paradise Allah did not address both of them, but said: أَنْتَ وَزَوْجُكَ : "You and your wife." This form of address yields two legal principles: (a) the husband is responsible for providing a dwelling-place for his wife (b) for the purpose of dwelling the wife is dependent on the husband, and she must live in the house in which her husband lives.

(2) In this context the Arabic word 'uskun (live) suggests that their stay in Paradise was to be temporary, not permanent which is a usual condition for the ownership of a house. Allah did not say that Paradise had been given to them, but only asked them to live there, for Allah knew that certain things were going to happen on account of which they would have to leave this dwelling-place. Moreover, the right to 'own' a dwelling-place in Paradise is earned through Īmān (faith) and good deeds, which one can acquire only after the Day of Judgment. The Fuqahā' (jurists) have derived from it the principle that, if a man asks someone to live in his house, the other man does not thereby acquire the ownership of the house nor the right to a permanent stay. (Qurṭubī)

(3) In allowing Ādam and Hawwā عليها السلام to eat at pleasure, Allah used the verb for the dual number, and said: "كُلَا" meaning 'eat both of you'. This indicates that in the matter of food the wife is not subservient to her husband, but can eat whatever she needs or likes, as can the husband.

(4) Allah also allowed them to eat from wherever they liked. This shows that man has the right to move freely from one place to another according to his needs or wishes.

(5) Allah did not want them to eat the fruits of a certain tree, but as a precautionary measure He commanded them not to approach it even. It is from here that the Fuqahā' have derived one of the basic principles of Islamic law, which requires that the things or actions which are likely to serve as means to sin or as its instruments are equally forbidden. That is to say, there are certain things which are not forbidden in themselves, but when there is a danger that in making use of them a man would become involved in an unlawful activity, they too have to be forbidden.

The Prophets are innocent of all sins

(6) As we have seen here, Ādam عليه السلام had been forbidden to eat the fruit of a certain tree, and had also been warned against the machinations of his enemy, Satan, and yet he had eaten the forbidden fruit. It is seemingly a sin, while the Holy Qur'ān, the Ḥadīth and rational arguments too establish the innocence and sinlessness of all the prophets. There is an absolute consensus of the four great Imams of Islamic law and of all the authentic scholars on the doctrine that each and every prophet is innocent of and protected against all sins, major or minor. Some people have suggested that prophets are not protected against minor sins, but the majority of authentic scholars does not agree with this opinion. (Qurṭubī) It is necessary for prophets to be thus protected, because they are sent down to be the guides of men - if a guide can go against the commandments of Allah and commit a sin, major or even minor, people would no longer be ready to trust his word or deed. If one cannot have trust and faith even in the prophets, how can the work of spiritual guidance be possible? Hence the necessity of prophets being sinless.

The Holy Qur'ān does, however, relate certain incidents which tend to suggest that a certain prophet committed a sin, and drew upon himself the displeasure of Allah. The story about Ādam عليه السلام eating the forbidden fruit is one such instance. According to the consensus of the authentic scholars, in all cases a prophet comes to commit an error through a misunderstanding or just forgetfulness, and it is never a deliberate and wilful transgression of divine commandment. As is well-known, a Mujtahid is one who possesses the necessary qualifications for finding out through analogical deduction the rule for a case regarding which no specific commandment is present in the Holy Qur'ān or the Ḥadīth; if he makes a mistake in determining the rule, he still receives a reward from Allah for having made the effort. The mistake made by a prophet is always of this nature, or is due to oversight and hence pardonable, and cannot be called a 'sin' in the technical sense. Moreover, a prophet, being under the protection of Allah, can never show oversight or forgetfulness in things which are directly concerned with his prophetic and legislative function, but only in personal matters. (See al-Baḥr al-Muḥīṭ)

The station of the prophets, however, is so exalted, that even a little oversight on the part of a great man is considered to be a great error. That is why such slips on the parts of certain prophets have been described in the Holy Qur'ān as 'sins', and Allah has shown his displeasure too, although they are not 'sins' in their nature.

As for the error committed by Ādam عليه السلام commentators have advanced several explanations:-

(a) A certain tree was pointed out to Ādam عليه السلام as being forbidden. But it was not this particular tree alone that was intended, but all the trees of this kind. The Ḥadīth too relates a similar case. Holding a piece of silk and some gold in his hand, the Holy Prophet ﷺ said that those two things were forbidden to the men in his Ummah. Obviously the ban does not apply to these very pieces of silk and gold alone, but to silk and gold as such. But it is quite possible for someone to imagine that only the particular pieces which the Holy Prophet ﷺ held in his hand were forbidden. Similarly, Ādam عليه السلام thought that the prohibition applied only to the particular tree which had been pointed out to him. Satan exploited this misunderstanding, and assured him on oath that, being a well-wisher, he could never advise him to do something which was wrong or harmful, and that the forbidden tree was quite different, and not the one from which he was asking him to pluck a fruit.

(b) Satan may have suggested to Ādam عليه السلام that the prohibition was valid only upto a period after he had been created, just as infants are denied heavy food till they have grown up, and that since Ādam عليه السلام had now grown stronger, the ban too had been lifted.

(c) It is equally possible that, when Satan told him that if he ate this fruit, the eternal bliss of Paradise would be guaranteed for him, Ādam عليه السلام forgot the prohibition. This verse of the Holy Qur'ān seems to give credence to such a possibility: "فَنَسِيَ وَلَمْ نَجِدْ لَهُ عَزْمًا": Ādam forgot, and We did not find him steadfast." (20:115)

Anyhow, the essential point is that Ādam عليه السلام did not deliberately and wilfully disobey Allah; all that he did was an act of oversight or the kind of mistake which a Mujtahid can make. The error was not, properly speaking, a sin, but Ādam عليه السلام being so close to Allah, and in view of his station of a prophet, even this lapse was regarded as very serious, and described as a 'sin' in the Holy Qur'ān. But the Holy Qur'ān tells us that when he repented and prayed for pardon, Allah forgave him.

Verses 37-39

فَتَلَقَّى آدَمُ مِنْ رَبِّهِ كَلِمَاتٍ فَتَابَ عَلَيْهِ إِنَّهُ هُوَ التَّوَّابُ
الرَّحِيمُ ۝ قُلْنَا اهْبِطُوا مِنْهَا جَمِيعًا فَإِمَّا يَأْتِيَنَّكُمْ مِنِّي هُدًى
فَمَنْ تَبِعَ هُدَايَ فَلَا خَوْفٌ عَلَيْهِمْ وَلَا هُمْ يَحْزَنُونَ ۝ وَالَّذِينَ
كَفَرُوا وَكَذَّبُوا بِآيَاتِنَا أُولَٰئِكَ أَصْحَابُ النَّارِ هُمْ فِيهَا خَالِدُونَ ۝

Then Adam learnt certain words (to pray with) from his Lord; so, Allah accepted his repentance. No doubt He is the Most-Relenting, the Very-Merciful. We said, "Go down from here, all of you. Then, should some guidance come to you from Me, those who follow My guidance shall have no fear, nor shall they grieve. As for those who disbelieve, and deny Our signs, they are the people of the Fire - they shall be there forever." (Verses 37-39)

Ādam's prayer to Allah

The earlier verses have related how Ādam عليه السلام came to commit an error through the seduction of Satan, and how he was commanded to leave Paradise and to go down to the earth. He had never experienced the displeasure of Allah before, nor heard such words of reproach. He could not bear it, and in the tumult of remorse at once wanted to beg humbly for pardon. But he was also afraid that by being importunate he might draw on himself more displeasure. Then, being a prophet, he knew Divine Majesty as ordinary men cannot. So, the fear and the awe dumbfounded him, and he could not utter a word. But Allah knows what passes through men's hearts, and He is also the Most-Merciful and the Most-Generous. Seeing the agony of remorse in Ādam عليه السلام, Allah accepted his repentance, and his grace taught him the words of a prayer so that he could beg for pardon.

Thus pardon was granted to Ādam عليه السلام but Divine wisdom had all the same its own plans in sending him down to the earth - for example, starting through his progeny a new species, man, to be placed between the angels and the jinns; submitting men to the injunctions of the Shari'ah by giving them the power of choice, however limited; instituting divine viceregency among them, and promulgating among them the prohibitions and the commandments of the Shari'ah, so that this new creature may be capable of making a spiritual progress and of attaining a station denied even to the angels. Allah had announced these purposes even before creating Ādam عليه السلام, when He said to the angels: إِنِّي جَاعِلٌ لِّىَ الْأَرْضِ خَلِيفَةً: "I am going to create a deputy on the earth." (2:30)

Descension of Adam was not a punishment

That is why the command for Ādam عليه السلام to go down to the earth was not withdrawn even when he had been pardoned: only the mode was now altered. Earlier the command had been given in the mode of authority, and the sending down to the earth intended as a punishment: hence the reference to the enmity among men. Now, it was in the mode of wisdom, and the sending down to the earth, an honour - the honour of viceregency. Hence the reference to things viceregency involves. In commanding Ādam and Hawwā عليها السلام and their progeny to live on the earth, Allah told them that He would be sending down to men His guidance - that is, the injunctions of the Shari'ah - through revelation, and that those who follow it faithfully shall be free from sorrow and anxiety - in other words, they shall not have to grieve about any loss in the past, nor to worry about some misfortune in the future.

In speaking of how Allah taught Ādam عليه السلام the words of a prayer so that he could offer his repentance properly, the Holy Qur'ān uses the word Talaqqa, which means 'accepting and welcoming a person or thing eagerly', and thus indicates his attitude in receiving the phrases. (See Kashshāf and Rūh al-Ma'ānī)

As to what these phrases were, different things have been reported from different Companions, may Allah be pleased with them, but the generally accepted report is that of the blessed Companion Ibn 'Abbās, رضى الله عنه, according to which these phrases are just the ones which the Holy Qur'an cites in a different place: رَبَّنَا ظَلَمْنَا أَنْفُسَنَا وَإِنْ لَمْ تَغْفِرْ لَنَا وَتَرْحَمْنَا لَنَكُونَنَّ مِنَ الْخَاسِرِينَ "Our Lord, we have wronged ourselves, and if You do not forgive us and have mercy upon us, we will surely be among the losers." (7:23)

The Arabic word for repentance is taūbah which means 'a return'. So, taūbah is not merely an emotional attitude as the English word, 'repentance' seems to suggest. The word taubah is used with reference to Allah as much to men. When the word taubah is employed in case of a man, it signifies a necessary combination of three things:

- (a) Acknowledging one's sin as a sin, being ashamed of it and feeling remorseful.
- (b) Giving up the sin altogether.
- (c) Making up one's mind firmly never to indulge in it again.

If any one of these three elements is missing, the taubah is not genuine. Thus, it is not enough for one's salvation merely to utter the words of repentance, unless the words are supported by remorse for the sins committed in the past, abstinence from them in the present and determination of not giving way to them in the future. So much for the use of the word taubah with reference to man.

In the present passage, the Holy Qur'an uses the word with reference to Allah, and the phrase concerned literally signifies 'Allah returned to Adam'. It means that Allah again turned to him with His mercy and grace, and accepted his taubah.

Injunctions and related considerations :

(1) Asked as to what a man should do if he happens to have committed a sin, several great scholars and Sūfīs have been saying that he should do exactly what his first parents, Adam and Hawwā عليها السلام did - that is, he should be sincerely ashamed of his deed, make up his mind never to indulge in it again, and pray to Allah for His pardon as they had: "رَبَّنَا ظَلَمْنَا أَنْفُسَنَا وَإِنْ لَمْ تَغْفِرْ لَنَا وَتَرْحَمْنَا لَنَكُونَنَّ مِنَ الْخَاسِرِينَ" "Our Lord, we have wronged ourselves, and if You do not forgive us and have mercy upon us, we will surely be among the losers." (7:23) The prayer of Mūsā (Moses) عَلَيْهِ السَّلَام was of the same nature: "رَبِّ إِنِّي ظَلَمْتُ نَفْسِي فَاغْفِرْ لِي" "My Lord, I have wronged myself. Forgive me." (28:16) And when Yūnus (Jonah) عَلَيْهِ السَّلَام made a mistake, he too prayed: "لَا إِلَهَ إِلَّا أَنْتَ سُبْحَانَكَ إِنِّي كُنْتُ مِنَ الظَّالِمِينَ" "There is no God but You. Pure are you. I have certainly become one of the unjust." (21:87) (See Qurtubī)

(2) As we have seen in the previous verses, the Holy Qur'an attributes the error of judgment to Ādam and Hawwā عَلَيْهِمَا السَّلَام both by using the verb azallahuma which indicates the dual number and thus means that Satan 'caused both of them to slip.' In recounting how Allah commanded them 'to go down' to the earth, the Holy Qur'an again uses the verb for the plural number, thus including Hawwā عَلَيْهِمَا السَّلَام in the command. On the contrary, in speaking of the taubah (repentance) of Ādam عَلَيْهِ السَّلَام and the acceptance of his taubah by Allah, verse 37 mentions him alone, and, employing the verb for the singular, leaves out Hawwā عَلَيْهِمَا السَّلَام. Even in other places, the Holy Qur'an attributes the error to Ādam عَلَيْهِ السَّلَام alone - for example, وَعَصَىٰ آدَمُ رَبَّهُ: 'Ādam disobeyed his Lord.' (20:121)

A possible explanation for the omission of Hawwā عَلَيْهِمَا السَّلَام in such a context is that Allah wants woman to be kept hidden from prying eyes, and, in order to provide a cover for her, has not referred to her explicitly while speaking of sin and divine wrath. But when it comes to the question of taubah, the prayer which Allah taught to Ādam عَلَيْهِ السَّلَام employs a verb in the plural number - "Our Lord, we have wronged ourselves", and thus the Holy Qur'an leaves no room for the supposition that the error of Hawwā عَلَيْهِمَا السَّلَام was not pardoned, or that she did not offer repentance. Moreover, woman being inclusive to man in most situations, it was not necessary to mention her specifically every time the story was told. (Qurtubī)

(3) The Arabic word Taubah signifies much more than the English word 'repentance'; similarly, the words Tā'ib and Tawwab mean much more than simply 'one who repents.' Imam Al-Qurtubī says that the word Tawwāb is used with reference to Allah as well as to man.

For example, the Holy Qur'ān applies the word to man in the phrase: ان الله يحب التوابين : "Surely Allah loves those who repent" (2:222) - and in al-tawwabin, 'those who return to Allah'; on the other hand, it speaks of Allah too as al-Tawwāb : مُتَوَاتِبٌ الرَّحِيمُ : "He is the Most-Relenting, the Very-Merciful." (2:37) So, with reference to man, the word signifies 'one who turns away from disobedience and sin, and returns to obedience', while with reference to Allah it signifies 'one who accepts repentance, and turns to man with mercy and grace'. There is another word, Tā'ib which also means 'one who returns', but it is not permissible to use this word with reference to Allah. For, in the case of Allah, only those nouns, adjectives and epithets are permissible which have been used in the Holy Qur'ān and the Hadīth - all other words are disallowed, no matter what their lexical meanings are.

(4) Verse 37 shows that Allah alone has the authority to accept a man's repentance and to forgive his sins. By disregarding this principle, Jews and Christians fell into a great error, for they came to believe that if a priest or a saint forgave their sins, Allah too did the same. Even some ignorant Muslims behave as if they too entertain such a belief. But all such notions are doctrinally false. No religious scholar or saint, ʿālim or murshid, has the authority to forgive sins; all he can do is to pray for the sinner, and seek Allah's pardon.

The obedient are freed of worries

(5) Verse 38 promises two great rewards to those who follow divine guidance - they will have no fear, and they will not grieve. Fear is the anxiety one feels in apprehending some trouble or pain in the future. Grief is the sorrow arising from the loss of something valuable or from one's failure in attaining a desired object. One can see that these two rewards comprehend all the possible forms of comfort and peace. Then, the text of the Holy Qur'ān makes a subtle distinction between the two. In saying that those who follow divine guidance will have no fear, it speaks in general terms and uses a noun - the Arabic phrase: لَا خَوْفٌ عَلَيْهِمْ is to be translated literally as 'no fear upon them'. But in the next phrase وَلَا هُمْ يَحْزَنُونَ, the Holy Qur'ān employs a verb, placing before it a pronoun as the subject. The literal translation of the phrase is: 'they shall not grieve'. The implication here is that being totally free from all sense of loss is possible only to Men of Allah or the saints¹⁸ who follow divine guidance in all its details; as for the others, no man whether an emperor or a billionaire, can help being grieved at the loss of a valued object or the frustration of a desire, all of which is but a necessary part of the scheme of things. The 'friends of Allah' do not have to grieve, because they annihilated their own desires and their very will in submitting themselves totally to the will of Allah. The Holy Qur'ān also tells us that those who go to Paradise will thank Allah for having removed from them all regret and sorrow: أَلْحَسَنُ لِلَّهِ الَّذِي أَذْهَبَ عَنَّا الْحَزْنَ : "All praise belongs to Allah who has put away all sorrow from us" (35:34). It means that some degree of sorrow is inevitable for every human being except those who have perfected and made fast their relationship with Allah.

Let us make it clear that the verse does negate all grief and sorrow in the case of the 'friends of Allah', but the negation applies only to the loss of worldly things and the frustration of worldly desires. As for the anxiety about the other world and the fear of Allah and the deep sense of awe before His Glory, the 'friends of Allah' are far ahead of other men in these. It has been reported that the Holy Prophet ﷺ often appeared to be worried and in deep thought - this was not for fear of any trouble or loss in the worldly sense, but on account of his anxiety for his Ummah, and of his awe before Divine Glory.

Nor does this verse imply that prophets and saints should not feel the instinctive and all too human fear when confronted by things which are generally known to inspire dread. The Holy Qur'ān itself relates how the prophet Mūsā (Moses) عليه السلام was struck with fear when his stick turned into a dragon: أَوَجَسَ فِي نَفْسِهِ خِيفَةً مُّوسَى : "Musa felt a fear in himself." (20:67)

18. The word "Saints" is very weak and only an approximate translation of the Arabic phrase "Awliyā-Allah", 'the friends of Allah' - a concept which has only a faint resemblance with the Christian idea of a 'saint'. Consequently, the term 'men of Allah' has been used most frequently throughout this commentary.

But it was only an instinctive and physical fear, and the incident anyhow belongs to the early days of his prophethood, for when Allah said: لَا تَخَفْ : 'Do not be afraid', the fear disappeared altogether. We may explain the incident in another way also. His fear did not arise as it does in the case of ordinary men, from the apprehension of some harm or hurt from the dragon, but from the likelihood that the extraordinary event might lead the Israelites into misguidance. So, this fear was not worldly, but other-worldly.

Verses 40-42

يٰۤاَيُّهَا اِسْرَآئِيْلُ اذْكُرُوْا نِعْمَتِيَ الَّتِيْ اَنْعَمْتُ عَلَيْكُمْ وَاَوْفُوْا
بِعَهْدِيْٓ اَوْفِ بِعَهْدِكُمْ وَاِيَّاىَ فَاَرْهَبُوْنِ ۝ وَاٰمِنُوْا بِمَا اَنْزَلْتُ
مُّصَدِّقًا لِّمَا مَعَكُمْ وَلَا تَكُوْنُوْا اَوَّلَ كٰفِرٍۭ بِهِۦ وَلَا تَشْتَرُوْا
بِآيٰتِيْ ثَمَنًا قَلِيْلًا وَاِيَّاىَ فَاتَّقُوْنِ ۝ وَلَا تَلْبِسُوْا الْحَقَّ بِالْبَاطِلِ
وَتَكْتُمُوْا الْحَقَّ وَاَنْتُمْ تَعْلَمُوْنَ ۝

O Children of Isra'îl (the Israelites), remember My blessing that I conferred upon you, and fulfil the covenant with Me, so I fulfil your covenant, and have awe of Me alone. And have faith in what I have revealed, confirming what is already with you, and do not be the first to deny it, nor take a paltry price for My signs. And fear Me alone. And do not confound truth with falsehood, and do not hide the truth when you know. (Verses 40 - 42)

The Sūrah Al-Baqarah begins by speaking of the Holy Qur'ān itself, and tells us that although it provides guidance to all men, yet only true Muslims will derive a full benefit from it. The Sūrah proceeds to warn the disbelievers against the grievous punishment which awaits them in the other world, and also to delineate the misdeeds of the two kinds of disbelievers - those who deny openly, and the hypocrites. Then, addressing all the three groups, it urges upon them to worship Allah alone, and, presenting the Holy Qur'ān as a miracle which cannot be imitated by man, invites them to have faith in it. Next, the Surah recounts how Ādam عليه السلام was created to be the viceregent of Allah, and thus shows the omnipotence and wisdom of Allah so that men may realize why they must obey and worship Him and never be disobedient to Him.

Now, in the days of the Holy Prophet ﷺ there were two kinds of people among the disbelievers and the hypocrites. On the one hand were mushrikin, idolaters and associators who did not possess any religious knowledge, were even otherwise mostly illiterate, and followed the customs of their forefathers - for example, the inhabitants of Makkah in general whom the Holy Qur'an calls the Ummiyyūn (the illiterate). On the other hand were those who believed in the earlier prophets, had a knowledge of the earlier Divine Books like the Torah and the Evangile, and were known as being well-educated. Some of them were the followers of Sayyidnā Mūsā عليه السلام (Moses), but did not accept Sayyidnā 'Īsā عليه السلام (Jesus) as a prophet - these were the Yahūd or the Jews. Others were the followers of Sayyidnā 'Īsā عليه السلام, but did not believe that Sayyidnā Mūsā عليه السلام was, being a prophet, divinely protected against all sin - these were the Nasārā or the Christians. On account of their belief either in the Torah or the Evangile or in both, the Holy Qur'an calls these two groups Ahl al-Kitāb (the people of the Book). Being well-educated, they were respected and trusted by the people around them, and their opinion had a great deal of weight. If they came to the straight path, others too could be expected to follow their example.

The Jews predominated in Madīnah and its environs. The Sūrah Al-Baqarah is also Madinite. So, after dealing with the idolaters and associators, it addresses the people of the Book in a special manner, from verse 40 to verse 123. Adopting a persuasive and friendly tone, the Surah refers to the noble family to which they belong and the honour which they receive from the people on account of such an affiliation; then, recounting the blessings which Allah has been showering on them, it asks them to be aware of their many misdeeds and their sins, and invites them to come to the Straight Path. All this has been said, to begin with, in a very brief manner - four verses inviting them to Islam, and three to good deeds. Then comes a long and detailed address to them, at the beginning of which, as also just before the end, occur the words, yā Banī Isra'īl (O children of Israel) - the repetition is, of course, the usual rhetorical device for making the speech persuasive.

Isra'il is a Hebrew word, signifying 'the servant of Allah'; it is also the second name of Sayyidnā Ya'qūb (Jacob) عليه السلام. Certain scholars have remarked that among the prophets it is the Holy Prophet ﷺ alone who has several names, except for Sayyidnā Ya'qūb عليه السلام who has two names, Ya'qūb and Isra'īl. The Holy Qur'ān addresses the Jews here, not as the "Children of Ya'qūb", but as the "Children of Isra'īl", so that the title may remind them that they are the children of the 'the servant of Allah', and hence they should follow the example of their father in worshipping Allah alone and in obeying Him.

In verse 40, Allah asks the Israelites to fulfil His covenant - that is to say, the one they had made with Allah. According to Qatadah and Mujāhid, the following verse of the Holy Qur'ān refers to this covenant which had been mentioned in Torah as well (For the Covenant, see Exodus, ch. XXXIV) (165):

وَلَقَدْ أَخَذَ اللَّهُ مِيثَاقَ بَنِي إِسْرَآئِيلَ وَبَعَثْنَا مِنْهُمُ اثْنَيْ عَشَرَ نَقِيبًا وَقَالَ اللَّهُ إِنِّي مَعَكُمْ ۚ لَئِنْ أَقَمْتُمُ الصَّلَاةَ وَآتَيْتُمُ الزَّكَاةَ وَآمَنْتُمْ بِرُسُلِي وَعَزَّرْتُمُوهُمْ وَأَقْرَضْتُمُ اللَّهَ قَرْضًا حَسَنًا لَأُكَفِّرَنَّ عَنْكُمْ سَيِّئَاتِكُمْ وَلَأُدْخِلَنَّكُمْ جَنَّاتٍ تَجْرِي مِنْ تَحْتِهَا الْأَنْهَارُ

Allah made a covenant with the children of Isra'il, and We raised up from among them twelve chieftains. And Allah said, 'I am with you. Surely, if you perform the prayer, and pay the alms, and believe in My messengers and help them, and lend to Allah a good loan, I will forgive your evil deeds, and I will admit you to gardens underneath which rivers flow' (5:12).

The covenant mentions acts like prayers and alms, but the most important clause is having faith in all the messengers of Allah including the Holy Prophet ﷺ. Hence, according to the blessed Companion Ibn 'Abbās, the covenant here signifies having faith in and obeying the Holy Prophet ﷺ (See Ibn Jarīr).

As for Allah fulfilling their covenant, the verse we have just quoted (5:12) makes the meaning clear - Allah will forgive the sins of those who fulfil the terms of the covenant, and will admit them to Paradise. Verse 41 makes it quite explicit that according to the covenant it is obligatory for the Israelites to have faith in the Holy Qur'ān, for, after all, it has been sent down to confirm the essential teachings of the Torah. Now, the Israelite scholars were afraid that if they told the truth in this matter, they would be going against the public sentiment, and thus lose their adherents and income both. So, these three verses exhort them to speak the truth without fear, for Allah alone is worthy of being feared.¹⁹

Injunctions and related considerations

(1) Al-Qurṭubī remarks in his Commentary that Allah, in asking the Israelites to worship and obey Him, reminds them of the bounties and blessings He has showered on them, but in the case of the followers of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم He asks them to do so without mentioning His bounties: كَأَذْكُرُنِي أَذْكُرْكُمْ : "Remember Me, I will remember you." (2:152)

This is a subtle suggestion which brings out the superiority of this Ummah over the others - the Islamic Ummah has a direct relationship with Allah, for it begins by recognizing the Benefactor, and through this knowledge recognizes His bounties; other peoples, on the contrary, begin by recognizing the bounties, and proceed through this medium to a knowledge of the Benefactor.

(2) Verse 40 shows that it is obligatory to fulfil the agreement one has entered into, and it is forbidden to break one's promise. The injunction has been stated explicitly in another verse: أَوْفُوا بِالْعُقُودِ : "Fulfil your agreements." (5:1)

According to a ḥadīth reported by Muslim, those who break their promises would, before being finally punished in the other world, be humiliated before the whole human race when it assembles together on the Day of Judgment, for a flag would be placed as a stigma beside everyone who has committed this sin, and the bigger the crime, the higher would the flag be.

19. Let us add that what the Holy Qur'ān confirms with regard to the Torah and the Evangile is the fact that they are the Books of Allah. As for the distortions which have from time to time been introduced into them, they are no part of the original texts, and hence the question of confirming such interpolated passages does not arise.

(3) Verse 41 asks the Israelites not to be the first to deny the Holy Qur'ān, although being a disbeliever is in itself the ultimate sin, whether one be the first or the last. The verse, in fact, suggests that the man who is the first to deny and disbelieve will not only incur the sin of his own denial but also bear the additional burden of the sin of misleading all those who follow his example; and will thus have to undergo a multiple punishment.

It follows from here that the man who is in any way responsible for others falling into any kind of sin will have to bear the burden of this sin along with the sinners; similarly, the man who in some way helps others to do a good deed will receive a reward for it along with them. Several verses of the Holy Qur'ān and the aḥadīth of the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم repeatedly stress this point.

(4) Verse 41 warns the Israelites against taking a paltry price for His signs or verses (the Arabic word, Āyāt has both the meanings). The context makes it clear that it is forbidden to take money from people by misinterpreting or concealing the verses of the Book of Allah in order to please them or to serve their worldly interests. There is an absolute consensus of the Ummah on this point.

(5) As for the question of taking a wage for teaching the verses of the Holy Qur'ān or for reporting them correctly, verse 41 is not concerned with the matter. But it is an important question in itself whether it is permissible to accept wages for teaching the Holy Qur'ān. There is a divergence of views among the Fuqahā' (jurists) in this matter. Imām Mālik, Imām al-Shāfi'ī and Imām Aḥmad ibn Ḥanbal, consider such wages to be permissible, while the great Imām Abū Ḥanīfah and some other jurists hold them to be impermissible, for the Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم has forbidden the use of the Holy Qur'ān as a means of livelihood. But there has been a radical change in the circumstances since then. Formerly, those who taught the Holy Qur'ān used to receive a subsistence allowance from the Baytul-Māl, or the public exchequer of the Islamic state. But since Islamic society fell into a disorder,²⁰ they lost their financial support. The teaching of the Holy Qur'ān to children being a full-time job, the teachers could not turn to difficult professions without interrupting this essential chain of transmitting the Word of Allah from generation to generation.

20. Through the onslaught of Western imperialism and other factors.

In view of this situation, the jurists of the Hanafī school declared it permissible to accept wages for teaching the Holy Qur'ān. According to Hidayah, the famous book of Hanafī code, this should be the rule (fatwā) these days. Later jurists have extended the permission to similar duties like leading Salāh (Imāmah), calling for prayers (Adhān), teaching the Ḥadīth and the Fiqh, etc., for they are related to the teaching of the Holy Qur'ān, and the survival of Islām equally depends on them. (See al-Durr al-Mukhtār, al-Shāmī)

(6) The famous Ḥanafī scholar Shāmī has, in his commentary on "al-Durr al-Mukhtār" and in his own book "Shifal-'Alīl", explained in great detail and with convincing arguments that the later jurists have allowed the acceptance of wages for the teaching of the Holy Qur'ān etc. only in view of an essential religious need which must be fulfilled, or the whole Islamic order would be disturbed; hence the permission should be limited only to such essential needs. It logically follows from this principle that paying or receiving wages for the recitation of the Holy Qur'ān for transmitting the reward to the dead or in the interest of some worldly purpose is forbidden, for it fulfils no essential religious need. Thus, the man who recites the Holy Qur'ān for wages in this manner and the man who pays him for it both commit a sin. When there is no merit earned in such a recitation, how can it be transferred to the dead? Al-Shāmī refers to many authoritative works like "Tāj al-Sharī'ah", 'Aynī's commentary on Hidāyah, the marginal notes by Khayr al-Dīn Al-Ramālī on "al-Bahr al-Rā'iq", etc., and specially cites Al-Ramālī to the effect that practices like paying for the recitation of the Holy Qur'ān beside the grave of a dead man or elsewhere in order to transmit the reward to him, have never been reported from the blessed Companions or their immediate successors or from other great scholars of the early centuries of Islām, and are hence an innovation (Bid'ah) in religion.

(7) Verse 42 explicitly shows that it is not permissible to mix truth and falsehood together in such a way that the addressee falls into a confusion as to what the truth is, and that it is forbidden to conceal the truth because of fear or greed.

Imām al-Qurtubī has, in his commentary, related a very illuminating story in this context - a story which has come down to us through a chain of reliable reporters, and has been taken from the "Musnad" of Darimi.

During one of his visits to the Holy town of Madīnah, the Umayyid Caliph Sulaymān ibn 'Abd al-Mālik wanted to meet someone who had lived with a Companion of the Holy Prophet ﷺ, if such a man was still alive. On being informed that Abū Ḥāzim was the only man of this kind left in the town, he sent for him.

The Caliph said to him, "Abū Ḥāzim, why have you shown such discourtesy and disloyalty?"

"How have I been discourteous or disloyal to you?"

"Everybody who is anybody in Madīnah has come to see me, but you haven't", complained the Caliph.

"O chief of the Muslims, may Allah protect you against saying something which is not true to the fact", replied Abū Ḥāzim "You have not been familiar with my name before today, nor have I ever seen you. Things being what they are, how could I come to meet you? Is it disloyalty or discourtesy?"

The Caliph looked around questioningly. Imām Zuhri spoke up: "Abū Ḥāzim is right, and you are wrong."

Changing the subject, the Caliph asked: "Abū Ḥāzim, how is it that I don't like to die?"

"The reason is simple," Abū Ḥāzim said "You have made your world flourish, and turned your habitation in the other world into a desert. Naturally, you don't like to leave a flourishing city for a desert."

The Caliph admitted that it was true, and came out with another question: "What would it be like when we have to appear before Allah tomorrow?"

Said Abū Ḥāzim, "The man who has been doing good deeds will present himself before Allah like the man who returns from a travel to his loved ones, while the man who has been doing evil deeds will appear like the slave who had run away and has now been brought back to his master."

The Caliph burst into tears, and said with a sigh, "I wish we could know how Allah would deal with us."

Abū Hāzim replied, "Assess your deeds in the light of the Book of Allah, and you will know."

"Which verse of the Holy Qur'an can help us to do so?"

"Here is the verse: إِنَّ الْأَبْرَارَ لَفِي نَعِيمٍ وَإِنَّ الْفُجَّارَ لَفِي جَحِيمٍ : "Surely the righteous shall be in bliss, and the transgressors shall be in a fiery furnace." (82:13-14)

The Caliph remarked: "Allah's mercy is great; it can cover even the wrong-doers."

Abū Hāzim recited another verse: إِنَّ رَحْمَتَ اللَّهِ قَرِيبٌ مِّنَ الْمُحْسِنِينَ : "Surely the Mercy of Allah is close to those who do good deeds." (7:56)

The Caliph advanced another question: "Tell me, Abu Hazim, who is the most honorable among the servants of Allah?"

"Those who are mindful of their fellow-human beings, and possess the right kind of understanding to know the truth."

"Which is best among good deeds?"

"Fulfilling the obligations laid down by Allah, and keeping away from what He has forbidden."

"Which is the prayer that is likely to be accepted by Allah?"

"The prayer of a man for him who has done him some good."

"Which is the best form of charity?"

"Giving as much as one can, in spite of one's own need, to a man in misery without trying to make him feel grateful and without causing him pain by trying to put him off."

"Which is the best form of speech?"

"Speaking the truth plainly and unreservedly before the man who can harm you in some way or from whom you expect a favour."

"What kind of man is the wisest among the Muslims?"

"He whose actions are governed by obedience to Allah, and who invites others as well to it."

"What kind of man is the most stupid?"

"He who helps another man in committing some injustice, which comes to mean that he has been selling off his faith for serving the worldly interests of that man."

The Caliph agreed with all this, and then asked him pointedly, "What do you think of me?" Abū Hāzim wanted to be excused from replying to such a question, but the Caliph insisted that he should say a word of advice. Abū Hāzim said:

"O chief of the Muslims, your forefathers established their rule over the people with the help of the sword and against their will, after killing hundreds of men. Having done all this, they departed from the world. I wish you could know what they themselves are saying after their death and what people are saying about them."

Fearing that the Caliph would be displeased by such plain talk, one of his courtiers rebuked Abū Hāzim for having spoken so rudely. He replied: "No, you are wrong. I have not said anything rude but only what Allah has commanded us to say. For Allah has enjoined upon the 'ulamā' to speak the truth before the people and not to conceal it." And he recited this verse of the Holy Qur'an: لَقَدْ جِئْتُمُ النَّاسَ وَلَا تَكْفُرُونَ: "You shall make it clear to the people and not conceal it." (3:187)

The Caliph asked, "Alright how can we reform ourselves now?"

Abū Hāzim said, "Give up your pride, acquire a spirit of fellow-feeling for the people, and give them justly what is due to them."

"Abū Hāzim, is it possible that you come to live with us?"

"May Allah protect me from it!"

"Why?"

"Because I am afraid that if I live with you, I might begin to like your wealth and your grandeur, and have to suffer a grievous punishment for it in the other world."

"Well, is there anything you need? What can we do for you?"

"Yes, I have a need. Please help me to save myself from Hell and to enter Paradise."

"This is not in my power."

"Then, there is nothing you can do for me."

The Caliph asked him to pray for him. Abū Hāzim made this prayer: "O Allah, if you approve of Sulayman, make the well-being of this world and the next easily accessible to him; but if he is your enemy, drag him by the hair towards the deeds you approve of."

The Caliph then asked him for some special advice. Abū Hāzim said: "I shall make it short. You should have the fear of your Lord and reverence for Him to the degree that He never finds you present at the place He has forbidden, and never finds you absent from the place where He has commanded you to be."

Later on, the Caliph sent one hundred gold dinars to him as a present. Abū Hāzim sent the money back with a letter, saying: "If these dinars are the wages for my words, then blood and pork are, in my eyes, cleaner than this money. If you believe that this money is my due from the public exchequer, then there are hundreds of 'Ulamā' and servants of Islam. If you have sent the same amount to each one of them, I can accept the money, otherwise I do not need it."

Abū Hāzim's refusal to accept the wages for giving advice clearly shows that taking wages for an act of worship or obedience to Allah is not permissible.

Verses 43-46

And be steadfast in Salāh, and pay Zakāh, and bow down with those who bow. Do you bid others to righteousness while you ignore your own selves, although you keep reciting the Book? Have you then no sense? And seek help through patience and prayer. And it is indeed exacting, but not for the humble in heart who bear in mind that they are to meet their Lord, and that to Him they are to return. (Verses 43 - 46)

In the last three verses and these four, Allah reminds the Israelites of the blessings He has bestowed upon them, and invites them to Islam and to good deeds. The earlier three verses were concerned with the true faith and doctrines; the present verses speak of good deeds, mentioning only the most important of them. It was usually the love of money and power that made it difficult for the Jews, specially for their scholars, to accept Islam. The verses prescribe the remedy for the twin diseases - they should fortify themselves with Ṣabr (patience) and Salāh (prayer).

"Patience" is a very weak translation of the Arabic word Ṣabr, which has three connotations: (a) bearing pain and misfortune patiently (b) restraining oneself from sin (c) being steadfast in obeying Allah.

Now, patience, in this wide sense, is the perfect remedy for the love of money. For, money cannot be an end in itself, but is sought only as a means of satisfying one's appetites; when a man has made a firm resolve not to follow his appetites like a slave, he will no longer need much money, nor will the love of money blind him to the distinction between his gain and loss. Similarly, Salāh is the remedy for ambition and the love of power. For, outwardly and inwardly both, Salāh involves the exercise of humility; naturally, the more one tries to perform it in the proper manner, the more it purifies him of the love of money and power, and of ambition and pride. These being the real substance of all spiritual disorder in man, once they are brought under control, it becomes easy for one to accept Islam and to be steadfast in one's faith.

Let us add that while patience (Ṣabr) requires only the restraining or giving up of excessive appetites and unnecessary desires, Salāh, in addition to all this, further requires the performance of certain actions, and also a temporary renunciation of perfectly lawful desires and of many human needs which the Shari'ah allows one to fulfil, e.g., eating, drinking, speaking, walking etc. - and, at that, making such a renunciation five times during the day and the night regularly at fixed hours. Thus, Salāh means performing certain prescribed actions and restraining oneself from all lawful or unlawful activities at fixed hours.

Once a man has decided to give up unnecessary desires, the instinctive urge itself loses its intensity in a few days. So, the exercise of patience is not, after all, so difficult. But offering Salāh entails submitting oneself to the conditions laid down by the Shari'ah, observing the fixed hours, and giving up the basic human activities and desires, all of which is quite exacting for the instinctive disposition of man. So, one may very well raise an objection here: for the purpose of making it easy for a man to accept Islam and to be steadfast in his faith, the Holy Qur'an prescribes Ṣabr and Salāh, but to use this remedy is in itself a difficult thing, specially the Salāh and its restriction - now, how can this difficulty be overcome? The Holy Qur'an admits that performing Salāh regularly and steadfastly is, no doubt, exacting, and proceeds to show the way out of this impasse - Salāh is not a burden to the humble in heart.

To know the effectiveness of the remedy, we must know the disease, and find out why Salāh should be so burdensome. The human heart loves to roam about freely in the vast spaces of thought and fancy; all the organs of the human body being subservient to the heart, it requires them to be equally free. On the other hand, Salāh demands the renunciation of such freedom, - and prohibits eating, drinking, walking, talking etc. - a restriction which annoys the heart and is also painful for the human organs governed by it.

In short, Salāh is burdensome because the heart enjoys to keep the faculties of thought and imagination in a continuous motion. Motion being the disease, it can only be remedied by its opposite - restfulness. Hence, the Holy Qur'an prescribes Khushū' (خُشوع) a word which we have rendered into English by the phrase "humbleness in heart", but which actually signifies "the restfulness of the heart."

Now, the question arises as to how one can acquire this

"restfulness of the heart." Everyone knows through his own experience that, if one deliberately tries to empty one's heart of all kinds of thoughts and fancies, the effort rarely succeeds. The only way to achieve it is that since the human mind cannot move in two directions simultaneously, one should make it absorb itself in one thought alone so that all other thoughts may disappear by themselves without any effort on one's part. So, having prescribed "the restfulness of the heart", the Holy Qur'ān also prescribes a particular thought which will, if one absorbs oneself in it, drive away all other thoughts: once the movement of thought and fancy has been reduced to the restfulness of the heart, the performance of Salāh becomes easy; regularity in offering the ordained prayers gradually cures the disease of pride and ambition, and thus the way to the perfecting of one's faith grows smooth. Such is the well-ordered and beautifully integrated art of spiritual medicine that the Holy Qur'ān has given us! ²¹

Now, the thought in which one should immerse oneself in order to acquire "the restfulness of the heart" has been explained by the Holy Qur'ān in describing "the humble in heart" - they are the people who bear in mind that they are to meet their Lord, when they shall receive the reward for their obedience, and also bear in mind that they are to return to Him, when they shall be required to present an account of their deeds. These twin thoughts produce hope and fear in the heart, and hope and fear are the best agents for inducing a man to devote himself to good deeds.

The prayer which the Holy Qur'ān prescribes is not a mere contemplation or meditation. Al-Salāh: الصلاة, in the terminology of Shari'ah, is a definite form of 'Ibadah or worship, the mode of which is divinely ordained. As often as the Holy Qur'ān insists on the performance of the Salāh, it employs the word Iqamah, except in one or two instances. Lexically, the word means "making a thing straight, or keeping it firmly in its place." A tree or a wall or anything which is vertical and straight, usually lasts long in its place; so, the word also signifies "establishing a thing or making it perpetual." Thus, the conjunction of the two words, Salāh and Iqāmah, in the Holy Qur'an and the Ḥadīth signifies, not merely offering the prayer, but performing the five ordained prayers steadfastly in the prescribed form at the prescribed hours and fulfilling all the necessary conditions. The Holy Qur'an and the Ḥadīth speak of the great rewards and blessings one can hope to receive for offering Salāh, and of other benefits which flow from it, but all of them are tied up with Iqāmah in the sense which we have just explained. For example, the Holy Qur'an says: إِنَّ الصَّلَاةَ تَنْهَىٰ عَنِ الْفَحْشَاءِ وَالْمُنْكَرِ : "The Salāh restrains one from indecency and evil." (29:45) The prescribed prayer will bear these fruits only when one has been performing it in the full sense of Iqāmah. It follows from it that if one finds people who are quite regular in offering their prayers indulging in immodest or even evil activities, one should not have misgivings about the veracity of this verse, for these people have, no doubt, been praying, but not been observing the conditions of Iqāmah.

21. As against this stand the fanciful systems of thought - concentration, wearing a pseudo-mystical look and some-times an Eastern make-up but all spawned in the Angst-ridden West - things like Yoga and Transcendental Meditation, which serve only to derange an already disordered psyche.

Verse 43 also speaks of paying Zakāh, the prescribed alms. Now, lexically speaking, the Arabic word زَكَاة : Zakāh has two significations: (a) to purify (b) grow. Zakāh is not a tax levied by the State or society, but, in the terminology of the Shari'ah, means that portion of one's belongings which is set apart and spent in total accord with the injunctions of the Shari'ah.

This verse is addressed to the Israelites, and does not by itself show that offering prayers and paying alms was obligatory for them before the days of Islam. But the following verse:

وَلَقَدْ أَخَذَ اللَّهُ مِيثَاقَ بَنِي إِسْرَآئِيلَ وَبَعَثْنَا مِنْهُمُ اثْنَيْ عَشَرَ نَقِيبًا وَقَالَ اللَّهُ إِنِّي مَعَكُمْ لَئِنْ أَفْتَمْتُمُ الصَّلَاةَ وَآتَيْتُمُ الزَّكَاةَ

Allah made a covenant with the Israelites and raised among them twelve chieftains. And Allah said, 'I am with you. Surely, if you perform Salāh and pay Zakāh'. (5:12) does show that the two things were obligatory for them, even if the external modes might have been different.

The verse proceeds to say: "Bow down with those who bow (in worship)." Lexically, the Arabic word Rukū' means "to bow down", and may hence be applied even to prostrating oneself (Sajdah), which is the ultimate form of bowing down. But in the terminology of the Shari'ah it pertains to the particular form of bowing down which has been prescribed for Salāh.

One may well ask why this particular gesture has been chosen for a special mention from among the different gestures involved in the Salāh. We would reply that it is a metonymy for Salāh, and a part has been made to stand for the whole - just as in verse 17:78 : قُرْآنَ الْفَجْرِ : "the recitation of the Qur'ān in the morning" refers to the morning prayers, and on several occasions in some Hadith narrations the use of the word Sajdah covers one set of movements (Rak'ah) in Salāh or even to the whole of it. Thus, the verse actually means: "Offer Salāh along with those who offer Salāh."

Salāh* with Jamā'ah : (congregation)

Then, there is a more comprehensive explanation for the specific reference to "bowing down" (Rukū'). The form of the ritual prayers ordained for the Israelites and others included prostrating oneself (Sajdah), but not bowing down. This particular way of bowing down called Rukū' is peculiar to the Islamic Salāh alone. Hence, Rak'īn or those who bow down (in worship) are, obviously enough, the members of the Islamic Ummah, and the verse, in effect, asks the Israelites to accept Islam, and to offer their prayers along with the Muslims.

The command, أَقِيمُوا الصَّلَاةَ : "Be steadfast in Salāh", shows that Salāh is obligatory. The other command, وَارْكَعُوا مَعَ الرَّاكِعِينَ : "Bow down with those who bow (in worship)", establishes that Salāh is to be offered in the company of other Muslims (Jamā'ah).

A very important question arises here - what is the degree of the obligation intended in this injunction? There is a difference of views among the Fuqahā' (jurists) on this point. According to a large body of blessed Companions, their successors and of the jurists of the ummah, it is necessary (wājib) to offer Salāh in a congregation, and it is a sin to give up the Jamā'ah. Some of the blessed Companions have gone to the length of holding that it is not permissible to offer Salāh all by oneself without a proper excuse allowed by the Shari'ah. Verse 43, in its literal connotation, provides an argument in favour of this view. Moreover, certain ḥadīth narrations too seem to suggest that the Jamā'ah is necessary (Wājib). For example, a ḥadīth reported by Abu Dawud says that for a man living near a mosque Salah is permissible only in the mosque.

According to another ḥadīth reported from the blessed Companion Abū Hurayrah رضى الله عنه by Imām Muslim, a Companion who was blind asked the Holy Prophet ﷺ for the permission to offer Salāh in his house, for there was no one to take him to the mosque and to bring him back. The Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم allowed him to do so, but, as he was leaving, asked him if he could hear the call for the prayers in his house. He said that he could. The Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم remarked: "In that case, you must come to the mosque." Another narration of the same ḥadīth as reported by Abū Dāwūd adds that the Holy Prophet ﷺ said: "Then, I see no room for making a concession in your case." Similarly, al-Qurtubī cites a ḥadīth from the blessed Companion Ibn 'Abbās رضى الله عنه who reports that the Holy Prophet ﷺ once said: "The man who hears the call for the prayers but does not go to the mosque for the Jamā'ah, has not offered his prayers at all, except that he should have some valid excuse." On the basis of such aḥadīth, Companions like 'Abdullāh ibn Mās'ūd and Abū Musa al-Ash'arī رضى الله عنهم have ruled that if a man lives close enough to a mosque to hear the call for prayers and yet does not attend the Jamā'ah without a valid excuse, his offering of the Salāh at home is not acceptable. (Let us explain that hearing the call refers to the call made by a man possessing an average voice, and not to that made by a man with an extraordinarily loud voice or broadcast by a loudspeaker). Presented this far were arguments advanced by our revered elders who consider that Salāh with Jamā'ah is wājib or necessary.

On the other hand, the majority of the blessed Companions, their successors and later jurists hold that the Jamā'ah is a Sunnah which has been particularly emphasized (Mu'akkadah), and that among the Sunnah of this kind it is, like the Sunnah offered in Fajr Salāh, the most emphasized so as to come very close to being necessary. On the basis of certain other verses and Ḥadīth narrations, they interpret the imperative in "bow down with those who bow" as intended for emphasis only. As for the aḥādīth which appear to be saying that it is just not permissible for those who live near a mosque to offer their Ṣalāh at home, they say that these only mean that this is not the perfect way to offer the prayers.

The most comprehensive explanation of the matter has been provided by the blessed Companion 'Abdullāh ibn Mās'ūd, as reported by Imām Muslim: "The man who wishes to meet Allah tomorrow (i.e. the Day of Judgment) as a true Muslim, should offer these (five) prayers regularly and steadfastly in a place where the call for the prayers is habitually made (i.e. a mosque), for Allah has laid down for your Prophet certain ways of good guidance (Sunnan al-Hudā), and offering the five prescribed prayers with the Jamā'ah is one of them. If you offer these prayers at home," he added pointing towards a man, "as he does, keeping away from the Jamā'ah, you will have forsaken the Sunnah of your Prophet, and if you forsake the Sunnah of your Prophet, you will go astray. The man who (performs the wudū' or ablution and cleanses himself in the proper manner, and then) goes to a mosque, for every step that he takes, Allah forgives one of his sins, adds one good deed to his account and promotes him one rank higher. Our company was such that there was not a single man, except for people known for their hypocrisy who would offer their prayers at home away from the Jamā'ah, so much so that even when a man was ill or unable to walk, he was brought to the mosque with his hands resting on the shoulders of two men, and made to stand in the row of those who were praying."

This statement fully brings out the great importance of the Jamā'ah, but at the same time defines its exact position by including it among the "ways of good guidance" (Sunan al-Hudā) which are, in the terminology of the Fuqahā' (jurists), called Al-Sunan al-Mu'akkadah (the Sunnah on which the greatest emphasis has been placed). Thus, if a man does not go to the mosque for Jamā'ah and offers Ṣalāh at home without having proper excuse like illness, his prayers will be valid, but he will have earned the displeasure of Allah for having given up a Sunnah which comes under the category of Mu'akkadah. If neglecting the Jamā'ah becomes habitual for him, he will be committing a grave sin. If all the people living in the vicinity of a mosque leave it deserted and offer their prayers at home, they become, in the eyes of the Shari'ah, liable to punishment. Qādi 'Iyad says that if persuasion fails to mend such people, they must be challenged by a show of force. (Qurtūbī)

An admonition to preachers without practice

Verse 44 addresses the religious scholars of the Jews, and reprimands them for a strange contradiction in their behaviour - they used to advise their friends and relatives to follow the Holy Prophet ﷺ and to be steadfast in their Islamic faith, which shows that they regarded Islam as the true faith, but, being enslaved to their desires, were not prepared to accept this faith themselves, although they were regular readers of the Torah and knew how emphatically it denounces the scholar who does not act upon his knowledge. Though externally addressed to the Jewish scholars, the verse, in a larger sense, condemns all those who preach good deeds to others but do not act upon this principle, who ask others to have fear of Allah but show no such fear in their own behaviour. The Ḥadīth speaks in detail of the dreadful punishments these men will have to bear in the other world. The blessed Companion Anas reports that on the Night of the Ascension (مِعْرَاج), the Holy Prophet ﷺ passed by some people whose lips and tongues were being cut with scissors made of fire; on being questioned as to who they were, the Archangel Jibrā'il عليه السلام (Gabriel) explained that they were certain avaricious preachers of the Holy Prophet's عليهم السلام Ummah who bade others to good deeds but ignored themselves. (Ibn Kathīr). According to a ḥadīth reported by Ibn 'Asākir, certain people living in Paradise will find some of their acquaintances in the fire of hell, and ask them, "How is it that you find yourselves in hell, while we have attained Paradise just on account of the good deeds we had learnt from you"; those in hell will reply: "We used to say all that with our tongues, but never acted upon what we said." (Ibn Kathīr)

All this should not be taken to mean that it is not permissible for a man who has himself been slack in good deeds, or is in some way a transgressor, to give good counsel or preach to others, nor that a man who has been indulging in a certain sin may not try to dissuade others from committing that sin. For, doing a good deed is one form of virtue, and persuading others to do this good deed is another form of virtue in its own right. Obviously, if one has given up one form of virtue it does not necessarily follow that he should give up the other form as well. For example, if a man does not offer his prescribed Salāh, it is not necessary for him to give up fasting too. Similarly, if a man does not offer his prayers, it does not argue that he should not be allowed to ask others to offer their prayers. In the same way, doing something prohibited by the Shari'ah is one kind of sin, and not to dissuade those whom he can influence from this misdeed is another kind, and committing one kind of sin does not necessarily entail committing the other sin as well. (Rūḥ al-Ma'ānī)

Imam Malik has cited Sa'īd ibn Jubayr as saying that if everyone decides to refrain from persuading others to good deeds and dissuading them from evil deeds on the assumption that he himself is a sinner and can have no right to preach to others until and unless he has purged himself of all sins, there would be no one left to give good counsel to people, for who can be totally free of sins? According to Ḥasan of Basra, this is exactly what Satan wants that, obsessed by this false notion of purity, people should neglect their obligation to provide religious instruction and good counsel to others. (Qurtūbī)

Maulana Ashraf 'Alī Thānavī used to say that when he became aware of a certain bad habit in himself, he would expressly denounce this particular tendency in his sermons so that the barakah of the sermon should help him to get rid of it.

In short, verse 44 does not imply that the man who has been indifferent to good deeds in his own life is not allowed to preach or to give good counsel, but that the man who preaches should not neglect good deeds in his own life. Now, a new question arises here - it is not permissible for a preacher and non-preacher alike to neglect good deeds, then why should the preacher alone be specifically discussed in this context? We would reply that such negligence is, no doubt, impermissible for both, but the crime of the preacher is more serious and reprehensible than that of the non-preacher, for the former commits a crime knowing that it is crime, and cannot plead ignorance as an excuse. On the contrary, the non-preacher, specially if he is illiterate, may be committing the sin of not trying to acquire knowledge, but, as far as the transgression of the Shari'ah is concerned, he can, to a certain degree plead ignorance of the law as his excuse. Moreover, if a scholar or a preacher commits a sin, he is actually mocking at the Shari'ah. The blessed Companion Anas رضى الله عنه reports from the Holy Prophet ﷺ that on the Day of Judgment, Allah will forgive illiterate and ignorant people much more readily than He will the scholars.

Khushū' : The Humbleness of Heart

Verse 45 speaks of the humble in heart. The "humbleness of heart" (Khushū'), which the Holy Qur'an and the Hadith speak of, connotes a restfulness of heart and humility arising out of the awareness of Allah's majesty and of one's own insignificance in comparison to it. This quality, once acquired, shows its spiritual fruitfulness in making the obedience to Allah and submission to Him easy and pleasant for one; sometimes it reflects itself even in the bodily posture and appearance of the man who has acquired it, for such a man always behaves in a disciplined and polite manner, is modest and humble, and seems to be "broken-hearted", that is to say, one who has lost all vanity and self-love. If a man does not bear genuine humility and fear of Allah in his heart, he does not, with all his external modesty and downcast looks, really possess the quality of Khushū' (humbleness of heart). In fact, it is not proper even to show the signs of Khushū' in one's behavior deliberately. On seeing a young man sitting with his head bowed down, the rightly-guided Khalifah Sayyidnā 'Umar رضى الله عنه said: "Raise your head! Humbleness of heart is in the heart." Ibrāhīm Nakha'ī has said: "Humbleness of heart does not mean wearing rough clothes, eating coarse food and keeping the head bowed down. Humbleness of heart is to treat the high and the low alike in matters of truth, and to keep the heart free to devote itself entirely to Allah and to the performance of what Allah has made obligatory for you." Similarly, Ḥasan of Basra has said : "The Caliph 'Umar would speak loudly enough to be heard, whenever he spoke, would walk swiftly, whenever he walked, and would strike forcefully, whenever he struck a man. All the same, he undoubtedly was a man with a real humbleness of heart." In short, wearing deliberately and by one's own choice, the looks of a man who possesses the humbleness of heart is a kind of self-delusion and a ruse of Satan, and hence reprehensible. But if a man happens to manifest such signs without knowing it, he can be excused. (Qurtubi)

Let us add that there is another word - Khudū' - which is often used along with Khushū', and which appears several times in the Holy Qur'ān as well. The two words are almost synonymous. But the word Khushū', according to its lexical root, refers to the lowering of the voice and of the glance when it is not artificial but arises out of a real modesty and fear of Allah - for example, the Holy Qur'ān says: "Voices have been hushed" (20:108). On the other hand, the word "Khudū'" refers to the bodily posture which shows modesty and humility - for example, the Holy Qur'ān says: "So their necks will stay humbled to it." (26:4) We must also define as to what, in the eyes of the Shari'ah, the exact position and value of Khushū' is with regard to Salāh. The Holy Qur'ān and the Ḥadīth repeatedly stress its importance as in: "And perform the prayer for the sake of My remembrance." (20:14)

Obviously, forgetfulness is the opposite of remembrance, and hence the man who becomes unmindful of Allah while offering Salah, is not fulfilling the obligation of remembering Allah. Another verse says: "Do not be among the unmindful." (7:205)

Similarly, the Holy Prophet ﷺ has said: "The Salāh simply means self-abasement and humility." Says another ḥadīth: "If his prayers do not restrain a man from immodesty and evil, he goes farther and farther away from Allah." Salāh offered unmindfully does not obviously restrain man from evil deeds, and consequently such a man goes farther and farther away from Allah.

Having quoted these verses and ahadith in support of other arguments in his Ihyā' al-'Ulūm, Imām al-Ghazālī suggests that Khushū' must then be a necessary condition for Salāh, and that its acceptability must depend on it. He adds that, according to the blessed Companion, Mu'adh ibn Jabal and jurists as great as Sufyān al-Thawri and Ḥasan al-Basrī, Salāh offered without Khushū' is not valid.

On the other hand, the four great Imāms of Islamic jurisprudence and most of the jurists do not hold Khushū' to be a necessary condition for Salāh. In spite of considering it to be the very essence of Salāh, they say that the only condition necessary in this respect is that while saying Allahu Akbar at the beginning of the prayers one should turn with all one's heart to Allah, and have the intention (niyyah) of offering the prayers only for the sake of Allah; if one does not attain Khushū' in the rest of the prayers, one will not get any reward for that part of the prayers, but, from the point of view of Fiqh (jurisprudence), one will not be charged with having forsaken Salāh, nor will one be liable to the punishment which is meted out to those who give up prescribed prayers without a valid excuse.

Imām al-Ghazālī has provided an explanation for this divergence of view. The Fuqahā' (jurists), he points out, are not concerned with inner qualities and states of the heart (Aḥwāl), but only enunciate the exoteric regulations of the Sharī'ah on the basis of the external actions of men's physical organs - it does not lie within the jurisdiction of Fiqh to decide whether one will get a reward for a certain deed in the other world or not. Khushū' being an inner state, they have not prescribed it as a necessary condition for the total duration of Salāh, but have made the validity of the prayers depend on the lowest degree of Khushū' - turning, as one begins the prayers, with one's heart to Allah and having the intention of only worshipping Him.

There is another explanation for not making Khushū' a necessary condition for the total duration of the prayers. In certain other verses, the Holy Qur'ān has clearly enunciated the principle which governs legislation in religious matters: nothing is made obligatory for men that should be beyond their endurance and power. Now, except for a few gifted individuals, men in general are incapable of maintaining Khushū' for the total duration of the prayers; so, in order to avoid compelling men to a task they cannot accomplish, the Fuqahā' have made Khushū' a necessary condition only for the beginning of the prayers, and not for the whole duration.

In concluding the discussion, Imām al-Ghazālī remarks that in spite of the great importance of Khushū' one can depend on the infinite mercy of Allah, and hope that the man who offers his prayers unmindful will not be counted among those who give up the prayers altogether, for he has tried to fulfil the obligation, has turned his heart away from everything to concentrate his attention on Allah even for a few moments, and has been mindful of Allah alone at least while forming his intention for the prayers. Offering one's prayers in this half-hearted manner has, to say the least, the merit of keeping one's name excluded from the list of those who habitually disobey Allah and forsake the prescribed prayers altogether.

In short, this is a matter in which hope and fear both are involved - there is the fear of having incurred punishment as well as the hope of being ultimately forgiven. So, one should try one's best to get rid of one's laziness and indifference. But it is the mercy of Allah alone which can help one to succeed in this effort.

Verses 47-48

يٰۤاَيُّهَا اِسْرَآءِیْل اذْكُرُوْا نِعْمَتِیَ الَّتِیْۤ اَنْعَمْتُ عَلَیْكُمْ وَاَنْتِیْ
فَضَّلْتُكُمْ عَلٰی الْعٰلَمِیْنَ ۝ وَاَتَّقُوا یَوْمًا لَا تَجْزِیْ نَفْسٌ عَنْ
نَفْسٍ شَیْئًا وَلَا یُقْبَلُ مِنْهَا شَفَاعَةٌ وَلَا یُؤْخَذُ مِنْهَا عَدْلٌ
وَلَا هُمْ یُنصَرُوْنَ ۝

O Children of Isrā'īl (the Israelites), remember My blessing that I conferred upon you, and that I gave you excellence over the worlds. And guard yourselves against a day when no one shall stand for anyone for anything, nor shall intercession be accepted on one's behalf, nor shall ransom be taken from one and neither shall they be given support. (Verses 47-48)

Verse 47 asks the Israelites to call to their minds the blessing of Allah, so that the recognition of the benefits they have received may induce them to be thankful to Allah and thus to obey Him. The verse is addressed to the Jews contemporaneous with the Holy Prophet ﷺ, while the blessing had been received by their forefathers. The point is that when a man receives a special favour, his children and grand children too usually partake of the benefits flowing from it; in this sense, the Jews who are being addressed may be said to have received the blessing themselves.

As for Allah giving preference to the Israelites "over the worlds", the phrase means that they were given preference only in certain matters, or only over a large part of men - for example, over the contemporaries of the earlier Israelites.

The day referred to in verse 48 is the Day of Judgment. As for no one being able to suffice another on that day, the phrase should be understood in the sense of one man paying the dues on behalf of another man. Let us, for example, suppose that a man is found wanting in the performance of obligatory acts of worship like Salāh and Sawm (fasting), and another man should suggest that his own prayers and fasts may be transferred to the account of the former in order to make up the deficiency. Such a transaction shall not be possible on that day. Ransom, of course, means the money paid for securing the release of a criminal - this too shall be out of the question.

As for intercession (shafā'ah) not being accepted, the phrase does not totally deny the possibility of intercession on the Day of Judgment; it only means that if a man does not have 'Imān (faith), no intercession in his favour shall be accepted. For the Holy Qur'ān makes it clear in certain other verses that Allah will allow intercession to be made on behalf of some people (53:26, 34:23, 2:55 etc.), and will disallow it in the case of those who do not possess 'Imān (21:28, 20:109). Since there would be no intercession on behalf of the latter, the question of its being accepted does not simply arise. 'Receiving support', in usual terms, means getting oneself released from a difficult situation with the help of a strong and powerful friend or patron. In short, none of the ways of receiving help possible in this world will be effective in the other world unless one possesses 'Imān.

A doctrinal point

On the basis of verse 48, the Mu'tazilah and some other groups of a more recent origin have denied the possibility of all intercession in favour of Muslims. But, as we have shown above, the negation of intercession applies only to disbelievers and infidels. (Bayān al-Qur'ān)

Verse 49

وَإِذْ نَجَّيْنَكُمْ مِّنَ آلِ فِرْعَوْنَ يَسُومُونَكُمْ سُوءَ الْعَذَابِ يُذَبِّحُونَ

أَبْنَاءَكُمْ وَيَسْتَحْيُونَ نِسَاءَكُمْ ۖ وَفِي ذَلِكُمْ بَلَاءٌ مِّن رَّبِّكُمْ
عَظِيمٌ ۝

And when We delivered you from the people of the Pharaoh! They had been inflicting on you grievous torment, slaughtering your sons and leaving your women alive. And in all that there was a great trial from your Lord. (Verse 49)

Verse 47 had spoken of the special favours shown to the Israelites by Allah. Now, with Verse 49 begins the account of these favours.

Someone had made a prediction to the Pharaoh (فرعون) that a child was going to be born among the Israelites who would destroy his kingship. So, he began slaughtering all the male infants as soon as they were born. But he would spare the females, as there was nothing to fear from them, and, moreover, they could, on growing up, serve as maid-servants. So, even this leniency was motivated by self-interest. What the verse refers to as "a great trial" is either the slaughter of the sons - which was a calamity, and it is the quality of patience that is tested in a calamity - or the deliverance from the people of the Pharaoh - which was a blessing, and it is the quality of thankfulness which is tested when one receives a blessing.

The next verse gives us the details about this deliverance.

Verses 50 - 51

وَإِذْ فَرَقْنَا بِكُمْ الْبَحْرَ فَأَنْجَيْنَاكُمْ وَأَغْرَقْنَا آلَ فِرْعَوْنَ وَأَنْتُمْ
تَنْظُرُونَ ۝ وَإِذْ وَعَدْنَا مُوسَىٰ أَرْبَعِينَ لَيْلَةً ثُمَّ اتَّخَذْتُمُ
الْعِجْلَ مِن بَعْدِهِ وَأَنْتُمْ ظَالِمُونَ ۝

And when We parted the sea for you; then We rescued you, and drowned the Pharaoh's people as you were looking on! And when We appointed forty nights for Mūsā, then you took to yourselves the calf thereafter, and you were unjust! (Verses 50-51)

Verse 50 refers to certain things which had happened in the days of Sayyidnā Mūsā عليه السلام (Moses). He, in his capacity as a messenger of Allah, continued efforts for a long time to make the Pharaoh and his people see Truth, but when they persisted in their denial, Allah commanded him to take the Israelites along with him and leave Egypt surreptitiously. On their way, they came across a sea while the Pharaoh was behind him with his army in hot pursuit. Allah commanded the sea to split, and make way for Sayyidnā Mūsā and his people. So, they went over smoothly. But when the Pharaoh and his army followed them into the sea, it gathered the water back so that the Pharaoh and his men were drowned then and there.

Verse 51 refers to other incidents in the same story. When the Pharaoh had been drowned, the Israelites, according to one report, went back to Egypt, or, according to another, began to live somewhere else. Having at last found a peaceful existence, they now wished they could receive a Shari'ah, or a religious code of laws, from Allah which they should follow. Allah answered the prayer of Sayyidnā Mūsā عليه السلام, and promised that if he came to the Mount Tūr (Sinai) and devoted himself to worship for a month, he would receive a Divine Book. He gladly obeyed the Commandment, and was granted the Torah. But he was ordered to continue to worship for ten days more, because he had broken his fast after a month and thus lost the special odour which rises from the mouth of a fasting person and which is very pleasant to Allah; so Allah commanded him to fast for ten additional days and regain that odour. Thus, Sayyidnā Mūsā عليه السلام completed forty days of total fasting and devotion. While he was on Mt. Sinai, something very odious happened to the Israelites. Among them there was a man called Samiriyy. He fashioned the figure of a calf out of gold or silver, and put into it some of the dust which he had picked up from under the hooves of the horse of Jibrā'il (the Archangel Gabriel عليه السلام), at the time when the Pharaoh and his army had been drowned by the Archangel. The golden calf immediately acquired life. The ignorant among the Israelites were so impressed that they started worshipping it.

Verse 51 calls them "unjust" for having committed this sin, for 'injustice' lies in putting things in the improper places, and idolatry is essentially just that.

A doctrinal point

Verse 50 speaks of the splitting of the sea, and clearly proves that miracles do occur at the hands of prophets, which some Westernized Muslims have been trying to deny. (Bayān al-Qur'ān)

Verse 52

ثُمَّ عَفَوْنَا عَنْكُمْ مِّنْ بَعْدِ ذَلِكَ لَعَلَّكُمْ تَشْكُرُونَ ۝

Then We pardoned you, even after that, so that you be grateful. (Verse 52)

The Israelites were forgiven only when they had offered Taubah (repentance), as recounted in Verse 54. In saying that they were pardoned so that they might learn gratefulness, the present verse employs the Arabic word لعل: La'lla which indicates expectation. In the present context it does not mean that Allah had or could have any doubt or misgiving about this or any other matter; what the word implies here is just that when a man receives a pardon, the onlookers may expect him to feel grateful.

Verse 53

وَإِذْ آتَيْنَا مُوسَى الْكِتَابَ وَالْفُرْقَانَ لَعَلَّكُمْ تَهْتَدُونَ ۝

Then We gave Musa the Book and the Criterion (of right and wrong) so that you find the right path. (Verse 53)

Torah is the book which was given to Sayyidna Musa عليه السلام .

In the language of the Holy Qur'ān, al-Furqān is a term signifying something which separates truth from falsehood or distinguishes the one from the other. In the present verse, it refers either to (a) the injunctions of the Shari'ah which are to be found in the Torah, for the Shari'ah resolves all the differences that may arise with regard to the doctrines or the practice of good deeds; or to (b) miracles which decide between a true or a false claim in a palpable manner; or even to (c) the Torah itself which has the twin qualities of being a Book of Allah and of being an instrument for separating truth from falsehood.

Verse 54

وَإِذْ قَالَ مُوسَى لِقَوْمِهِ يَقَوْمِ إِنَّكُمْ ظَلَمْتُمْ أَنْفُسَكُمْ بِاتِّخَاذِكُمُ الْعِجْلَ فَتُوبُوا إِلَى بَارِئِكُمْ فَاقْتُلُوا أَنْفُسَكُمْ ذَٰلِكُمْ خَيْرٌ لَّكُمْ

عِنْدَ بَارِئِكُمْ فَتَابَ عَلَيْكُمْ إِنَّهُ هُوَ التَّوَّابُ الرَّحِيمُ ٥

And when Musa said to his people: "My people, you have wronged yourselves by your taking the calf (as God). So, turn in repentance to your Creator and slay yourselves. That will be better for you in the sight of your Creator" Then, He accepted your repentance Indeed He is the Most-Relenting, the Very-Merciful. (Verse 54)

This verse describes the special mode of offering their Taubah (repentance) which was prescribed for the Israelites in this situation, -- that is to say, those who had not indulged in the worship of the golden calf should execute those who had. Similarly, in the Islamic Shari'ah too, certain major sins necessarily entail capital punishment even when the sinner has offered this Taubah -- for example, life in return for a life in the case of intentional homicide, or death by stoning in the case of adultery established through proper evidence.

Then the Israelites acted upon this divine commandments, they became worthy of receiving the mercy and favour of Allah in the other world.

Verse 55

وَإِذْ قُلْتُمْ يَمُوسَىٰ لَنْ تُوْمِنَ لَكَ حَتَّىٰ تَرَىٰ اللَّهَ جَهْرَةً ۖ
فَآخَذَتْكُمْ الصَّعِقَةُ وَأَنْتُمْ تَنْظُرُونَ ٥

And when you said, "Musa, we will never believe you till we see Allah openly!" So, the thunderbolt took you while you were looking on. (Verse 55)

Then Sayyidnā Mūsā (Moses عليه السلام) brought the Torah from Mount Tūr (Sinai) and presented it to the Israelites as the book of Allah, some of them were insolent enough to say that they could not believe it until and unless Allah Himself told them in so many words. With the permission of Allah, Sayyidnā Mūsā عليه السلام replied that even this condition would be fulfilled, if they went with him to Mount Tūr. The Israelites chose seventy men for this purpose. Arriving there, they heard the words of Allah with their own ears. Now, in their perversity, they invented a new ruse. It was not enough, they said, to hear the speech, for they could not be sure whether it was Allah Himself who had spoken to them or someone else. But they promised that they would be finally convinced if they could see Allah with their own eyes. Since it is beyond the power of a living being to be able to see Allah in the physical world, they had to pay for their impertinence, and were killed by a thunderbolt -- the next verse reports their death.

Verse 56

ثُمَّ بَعَثْنَاكُم مِّن بَعْدِ مَوْتِكُمْ لَعَلَّكُمْ تَشْكُرُونَ ۝

Then, We raised you up after your death, so that you be grateful. (Verse 56)

This verse refers to death, which suggests that the thunderbolt had killed them. Since the Israelites had always been mistrusting Sayyidnā Mūsā عليه السلام, he feared that they would suspect him of having taken the men to a solitary place and got them slaughtered. So, he prayed to Allah to save him from such a vile accusation. Allah granted his prayer, and gave those a new life.

Verse 57

وَوَضَعْنَا عَلَىٰ كُمُ الْغَمَامَ وَانزَلْنَا عَلَيْكُمُ الْمَنَّاءَ وَالسَّلْوَىٰ كُلُوا
مِن طَيِّبَاتِ مَا رَزَقْنَاكُمْ يَوْمَ ظَلَمْتُمْ أَنفُسَكُمْ وَلَكِنْ كَانُوا أَنفُسَهُمْ
يَظْلِمُونَ ۝

And We made the cloud give you shade, and sent down to you Mann and Salwā: 'Eat of the good things We have provided you'. And they (by their ingratitude) did Us no harm, but were harming only themselves. (Verse 57)

These two incidents took place in the wilderness of Tīh. The Israelites belonged to Syria, but had gone to Egypt in the time of Sayyidnā Yūsuf (Joseph عليه السلام), and settled there, while Syria itself had come under the domination of a people called the 'Amāliqah (Amaleks). When the Pharaoh had been drowned and the Israelites could live in peace, Allah commanded them to go to war against the 'Amāliqah, and to free their homeland. The Israelites started on the expedition, but, on approaching Syria, when they came to learn about the military strength of the foe, their courage failed them, and they refused to engage themselves in the Jihād. Allah punished them for their disobedience, so that for full forty years they kept wandering about in a wilderness, and could not even go back to Egypt. The wilderness was not very vast, but only a stretch of some ten miles, lying between Egypt and Syria. They would make a day-long march in the direction of Egypt, and stop somewhere for the night. But, on getting up the next morning, they would always find themselves just where they had started from. Thus, they spent forty years wandering about in the wilderness in futile rage and exasperation. That is why the wilderness is called Tīh, which signifies 'having lost one's way'.

The wilderness was just a barren space without a tree or a building which could offer protection against heat or cold. There was no food to eat, and no clothes to wear. But in answer to the prayer of Sayyidnā Mūsā عليه السلام, Allah made a miraculous provision for all their needs. When they could not bear the scorching sun, Allah sent them the shade of a thin, white cloud. When they began to starve, Allah blessed them with Mann (manna) and Salwā. That is to say, Allah produced honeydew in abundance which they could easily gather. Hence it has been designated as mann which signifies "a gift or favour". Then, quails would not flee but come around them, so that they could catch the birds with little effort. The two things being unusual, the Holy Qur'an says that Allah made them "descend" for the benefit of the Israelites. Similarly, when they were thirsty, Allah commanded Sayyidnā Mūsā عليه السلام to strike a rock with his staff, which made twelve streams gush forth, as the Holy Qur'an narrates in another place. When they complained of the thick darkness of the night, Allah produced for them a constant pillar of light. When their clothes began to wear out, Allah showed another miracle - their clothes would neither go dirty nor wear out, while the clothes of the children grew with their growth. (Qurtubī)

Allah had commanded the Israelites to take as much of the miraculous food as they really needed, and not to store it for future use. But when they disobeyed this commandment, the meat began to rot. This is how they harmed, not Allah, but themselves.

Verse 58

وَإِذْ قُلْنَا ادْخُلُوا هَذِهِ الْقَرْيَةَ فَكُلُوا مِنْهَا حَيْثُ شِئْتُمْ رَغَدًا
وَادْخُلُوا الْبَابَ سُجَّدًا وَقُولُوا حِطَّةٌ نَّغْفِرْ لَكُمْ خَطِيئَتَكُمْ وَسَنَزِيدُ
الْمُحْسِنِينَ ٥٨

And when We said, "Enter this town, and eat there to your heart's content wherever you will. And enter the gate prostrating and say: Ḥiṭṭah (we seek forgiveness) - so that We forgive your errors. And We shall give much more to those who are good in deeds." (Verse 58)

There are two views as to when this incident took place. According to Shāh 'Abd al-Qādir, when the Israelites grew weary of eating the same Mann and Salwā everyday and prayed for being granted the kind of food they were used to (2:61), they were commanded to go to a certain city where they could get what they wished for. So, the commandment in the present verse pertains to the mode of entering this city, and lays down the spiritual etiquette for action and speech on this occasion. On the other hand is the view that the commandment pertains to the city against which the Israelites had been ordered to engage themselves in a Jihād. They obeyed it only after their long wanderings in the wilderness, and conquered the city. The commandment reported in Verse 58 was sent to them through Sayyidnā Yūsha' (Joshua عليه السلام) who was the prophet among them at the time.

The discrepancy between the two views, which raises a question about the chronological sequence of the events, should not confuse us as to the nature of the stories narrated in the Holy Qur'ān. The Holy Qur'ān does not tell the stories for the sake of telling stories, the usual purpose of which is to provide entertainment. The real intention here is to draw certain conclusions from the stories, and to illustrate or point out certain spiritual principles. Now, the various episodes of a story help to bring out various principles. So, in view of a particular effect sought in a particular context, the chronological sequence of the episodes may be invented and the incidents re-arranged to serve the interest of the pattern of meaning that is intended. This is just what the Holy Qur'ān does; in fact, this is a quite usual literary method, and the disturbance of the chronological order in the stories narrated by the Holy Qur'ān should not raise irrelevant questions in the mind of the reader - after all, in any and every piece of writing, or even speech, it is the intention which governs the ordering of the material.

The Verse holds out the promise that if the Israelites obeyed the commandment, their errors would be forgiven. On the basis of the first of the two views we have referred to, one must include among the errors their rejection of the Mann and the Salwā and their request for the normal kind of food. The demand was really insolent, but Allah promised that if they showed their obedience by following the new commandment, He would forgive this error too. Anyhow, the promise of pardon was general, and extended to everyone who was ready to obey the new commandment, while a special reward was promised to those who devoted themselves to good deeds sincerely and wholeheartedly.

The meaning of Ihsan

"We may add that 'sincerity' and 'wholeheartedness' are a very weak rendering in English of the essential quality of the text's Muhsinūn (rendered here as "those who are good in deeds"). This word comes from Ihsan which signifies "doing a thing beautifully - that is, in the manner that is proper to it." Beside this lexical meaning, Ihsan has a technical meaning which has been defined in a famous Hadīth: أن تعبد الله كأنك تراه، فإن لم تكن تراه فإنه يراك : "Offer your prayers as if you can see Him, and if you do not see Him, He is seeing you (in any case)." (Bayān al-Qur'ān)

Verse 59

فَبَدَّلَ الَّذِينَ ظَلَمُوا قَوْلًا غَيْرَ الَّذِي قِيلَ لَهُمْ فَأَنْزَلْنَا عَلَى
الَّذِينَ ظَلَمُوا رِجْزًا مِّنَ السَّمَاءِ بِمَا كَانُوا يَفْسُقُونَ ٥

But those who were unjust substituted another word for the one that was set for them. So, We sent down upon those who were unjust a scourge from heaven, because they have been acting sinfully. (Verse 59)

This verse is a continuation of the preceding verse. Allah had commanded the Israelites to keep, while entering the city, repeating the word Hittatun (which indicates repentance for one's sin and the request for pardon). But they replaced this word with another phrase by way of mockery, and started saying, Habbatun fī sha'irah (grain in the midst of barley), or Hintatun (wheat).

The punishment which descended on them was plague that wiped out seventy thousand men (Qurtubī). In passing, we may recall a hadith which says that plague is a punishment for the disobedient, and a blessing for the obedient.

Injunctions and related considerations

The Israelites were punished for having changed a word ordained by Allah, and substituted a phrase of their own invention, thus distorting the meaning itself. According to the consensus of the Fuqahā' (Muslim jurists), a change in the words of the Holy Qur'ān, or of a Ḥadīth, or of a divine commandment which invents or distorts the actual meaning is impermissible.

This should be obvious enough. But there is another question -- is it permissible to change the words in such a way that the meaning does not suffer but remains intact? In his commentary, Imam al-Qurtubī says that in certain texts and in certain kinds of speech the words are as much a part of the intention as the meanings and equally necessary for conveying an idea, and that in such a case it is not permissible to change the words. For example, in the Adhān (the call for prayers) it is not permissible to employ words other than those which have been laid down for the purpose by the ḥadīth. Similar is the case of the Salāh: the different things to be recited in them (like Subḥanaka Allāhumma, At-Taḥiyyāt, Qunūt) or the glorification of Allah during the Rukū' (bowing down) and the Sajdah (prostration) -- all these must be said exactly in the words which have been reported in the ḥadīth; substituting other words is not allowed, even if the meaning does not undergo a change.

This rule applies to each and every word of the Holy Qur'ān. All the Injunctions with regard to the recitation of the Holy Qur'ān strictly pertain to those words alone which Allah has revealed to the Holy Prophet ﷺ. According to the ḥadīth, the merit of reciting the Holy Qur'ān is so great that for every letter that one reads or recites one gets the reward which one would get for performing ten good deeds. But if one reads a very accurate translation of the Holy Qur'ān or even an Arabic version in which the original words have been replaced by certain other words without injuring the sense, the Shari'ah shall not accept it as a recitation of the Holy Qur'ān, and one will not get any reward of recitation for it. For, it is not the meanings alone which constitute the Holy Qur'ān; "Qur'ān" is the name of meanings inherent in the words revealed by Allah to the Holy Prophet ﷺ so that the two are inseparable from each other.

It appears from the present verse that Allah had commanded the Israelites to say this particular word, Hittatun, while offering their Taubah (repentance), and hence changing the ordained word was in itself a sin. They went so far as to distort even the meaning, and drew upon themselves the divine punishment.

Now, as for other kinds of speech in which it is the meanings that are really intended and not the words, the masters of the science of Hadīth and the jurists in general believe that in such places words can be changed provided that the meaning does not suffer but remains intact. Al-Qurṭubī has cited Imām Abū Hanīfah, Imām Mālik and Imām Shaf'ī; as holding the view that it is quite permissible to report a ḥadīth with regard to its meaning alone provided that the man who reports it should have a perfect knowledge of the Arabic language and also be familiar with the situation to which this particular ḥadīth pertains, so that he should not misinterpret the text or distort the sense.

On the other hand, certain masters of the science of Hadīth do not allow the slightest change in the words of a ḥadīth, and insist that it should be reported exactly in the words in which one has received it. This, for example, is the view of Muḥammad ibn Sīrīn, Qāsim ibn Muḥammad etc. Some of them even insist that if in reporting a ḥadīth a reporter has made a lexical mistake, the man who has heard the ḥadīth from him must, in his own turn, report it in exactly the same words including the mistake, only indicating what the correct word is likely to be. Such scholars cite a ḥadīth in support of their view. It has been reported that the Holy Prophet ﷺ advised a man to say this prayer before going to sleep at night: أَمِنْتُ بِكِتَابِكَ الَّذِي أَنْزَلْتَ وَرَسُولِكَ الَّذِي أَرْسَلْتَ : "I have faith in Your Book which You have made to descend, and in Your Prophet whom You have sent." The prescribed prayer had the word Nabiyy (Prophet), but the man changed it for Rasūl (Messenger). The Holy Prophet ﷺ instructed him not to make a change, but to say the prescribed word Nabiyy. This shows that it is not permissible to change a single word in reporting a ḥadīth. Similarly, another ḥadīth says: نَضَّرَ اللَّهُ إِمْرَأً سَمِعَ مَقَالَتِي فَبَلَّغَهَا كَمَا سَمِعَهَا : "May Allah make the man flourish who heard my speech, and then conveyed it exactly as he had heard." This also indicates that it is necessary to report the exact words of a ḥadīth as one has received them.

Most of the jurists and the masters of the science of Ḥadīth, however, believe that although it is better to report a ḥadīth as far as possible in exactly the same words as one has heard without making any change intentionally, yet if one cannot recall the exact words, it is also permissible to report the meaning in one's own words, and that the words of the ḥadīth quoted above - "... conveyed it exactly as he had heard" - might also mean that one should report the meaning of a ḥadīth exactly and without any alteration. Obviously, changing the words does not necessarily go against this provision. Imām al-Qurṭubī has, in support of his view, pointed out that this very ḥadīth goes to prove that changing words, when necessary, is permissible, for this ḥadīth itself has come down to us in different words in different versions. As for the other ḥadīth in which the Holy Prophet ﷺ has insisted that the word Nabiyy should be recited and not the word Rasūl, one might explain it in this way. The word Nabiyy (prophet) carries the sense of sublimity much more than does the word Rasūl, for the latter is employed for any messenger whatsoever, while the former is reserved only for those who are specially chosen by Allah for being directly addressed through revelation (Waḥy), and who thus occupy a rank higher than all other men. There is another explanation too. As far as prayers are concerned, the words appointed for the purpose by Allah or by the Holy Prophet ﷺ have a much greater efficacy than any other words can have. (Qurṭubī) That is why those who prepare ta'wīdh (translated as 'charms' in absence of an exact counterpart) or 'awdhah, or suggest words to pray are very careful in keeping to the authentically reported words without the slightest change. So, one may say that the prayers which are considered to be very efficacious, should be included in the first category of speech in which not only the meanings but the words also must be carefully safeguarded, for both are equally intended.

Verse 60

وَإِذِ اسْتَسْقَىٰ مُوسَىٰ لِقَوْمِهِ فَقُلْنَا اضْرِبْ بِعَصَاكَ الْحَجَرَ
فَانْفَجَرَتْ مِنْهُ اثْنَتَا عَشْرَةَ عَيْنًا قَدْ عَلِمَ كُلُّ أُنَاسٍ مَّشْرِبَهُمْ
كُلُوا وَاشْرَبُوا مِنْ رِّزْقِ اللَّهِ وَلَا تَعَثُّوا فِي الْأَرْضِ مُفْسِدِينَ ۝

And when Musa sought water for his people! We said, "Strike the rock with your staff." So, gushed forth twelve springs from it. Each group of people came to know their drinking place. "Eat and drink of what Allah has provided, and do not go about the earth spreading disorder." (Verse 60)

This incident too belongs to the story of the wanderings of the Israelites in the wilderness. Parched with thirst, they requested Sayyidnā Musā عليه السلام to pray to Allah for water. Allah commanded him to strike a certain rock with his staff. As he did so, twelve streams gushed forth out of the rock, one for each of the twelve tribes. Sayyidnā Ya'qūb (Jacob) عليه السلام had twelve sons, and each had a large family of his own. So, the families were considered as tribes, each with its own administrative organisation and its own head. Hence, the number twelve. What they have been asked to eat is the Mann and the Salwā (manna and quails), and the water is, of course, the one which had come out of the rock.

The Israelites have, in this verse, been asked not to spread disorder which in this context signifies disobedience to Allah and transgression of His Commandments.

The great Commentator al-Qaḍī al-Baydāwī points out that it is a great error²² to deny miracles. When Allah has given a certain stone the unusual property of drawing iron to itself, it cannot be, logically 22. Even a great error in logic.

and rationally speaking, impossible that He should also give another stone the property of absorbing water from the earth and of releasing it again. Even this explanation is meant for those who take a superficial view of things. Otherwise, it is in no way impossible that Allah should produce water within a stone itself. Those who call it impossible do not actually understand the technical meaning of the term "impossible."

An answer to a doubt about the Israelites

It has been asked whether it is necessary, in times of drought, to offer formal prayers in order to beseech Allah for rains. The present verse tells us that Sayyidnā Mūsā عليه السلام just prayed for water, and Allah made a miraculous provision. It shows that the essential thing in beseeching Allah for rains is just a prayer. In the Shari'ah of Sayyidnā Mūsā عليه السلام, a mere prayer was considered to be sufficient for the purpose. According to Imām Abū Hanīfah, this principle holds good for the Islamic Shari'ah too. The Holy Prophet ﷺ has, in this respect, acted differently on different occasions. An authentic ḥadīth reports that once he went outside the city to the open space where the congregational prayers were held on the day of the 'Īd, offered formal prayers, delivered a Khutbah (address), and then prayed to Allah for rains. According to another ḥadīth reported by Al-Bukhārī and Muslim from the blessed Companion Anas, once the Holy Prophet ﷺ prayed for rains while delivering the Khutbah on Friday, and Allah sent down rains.

No matter what form the prayer takes, all the scholars agree that it cannot be effective unless it is accompanied by a repentance for one's sins, a confession of one's powerlessness, a sincere expression of humility and an affirmation of servitude to Allah. So long as one persists in sin and transgression, one has no right to hope that the prayer would be answered. But if Allah may, in His mercy and benevolence, grant the prayer without this condition being fulfilled, it is His will, and He is All-Powerful.

Verse 61

وَإِذْ قُلْتُمْ يَمُوسَى لَنْ نَّصْبِرَ عَلَىٰ طَعَامٍ وَاحِدٍ فَادْعُ لَنَا رَبَّكَ

يُخْرِجْ لَنَا مِمَّا تُنْبِتُ الْأَرْضُ مِنْ بَقْلِهَا وَقِثَّائِهَا وَفُومِهَا
وَعَدْسِهَا وَبَصَلِهَا قَالَ أَتَسْتَبْدِلُونَ الَّذِي هُوَ أَدْنَى بِالَّذِي
هُوَ خَيْرٌ اهْبِطُوا مِصْرًا فَإِنَّ لَكُمْ مَّا سَأَلْتُمْ وَضُرِبَتْ عَلَيْهِمُ
الذِّلَّةُ وَالْمَسْكَنَةُ وَبَاءَ وَ يَغْضَبُ مِنَ اللَّهِ ذَلِكَ يَا نَهْمٌ كَانُوا
يَكْفُرُونَ يَا أَيُّهَا اللَّهُ وَيَقْتُلُونَ التَّبِينَ بِغَيْرِ الْحَقِّ ذَلِكَ بِمَا عَصَوْا
وَكَانُوا يَعْتَدُونَ ٥

And when you said, "Mūsā we will no longer stay on a single food: So, pray for us to your Lord that He may bring forth for us of what the earth produces -- its wheat, its lentils and its onions." He said, "Do you want to take the inferior in exchange of what is better? Go down to a town, and you will have what you have asked for." And disgrace and misery were stamped over them and they returned with wrath from Allah. That was because they used to deny the signs of Allah, and would slay the prophets unjustly. That was because they disobeyed and would go beyond the limits. (Verse 61)

This episode has been indirectly referred to in verse 58, and it also occurred in the wilderness of Tīh. The Israelites grew weary of eating the Mann and the Salwā (manna and quails) everyday, and wished to have ordinary vegetables and grain. Allah commanded them through Sayyidnā Mūsā عليه السلام to go to a certain town which lay somewhere in the wilderness, to till the land there, to grow to eat whatever they liked.

The Israelites were thus being ungrateful and impertinent. Even otherwise, it was so usual with them not only to transgress divine commandments but also to deny them outright. They had also been slaying a number of prophets at different times - they knew they were committing a misdeed, but their hostility to the truth and their stubbornness in disobedience made them blind to the nature of their conduct and its consequences. Through such persistent and wilful misdemeanour they drew upon themselves the wrath of Allah. Disgrace and degradation settled upon them for ever. That is to say, they no longer had any respect in the eyes of others, nor magnanimity in themselves.

One form of this disgrace is that temporal power has been taken away from them for ever. For only forty days, however, - and that too when the Day of Judgment will have come close - the Dajjāl (Anti-Christ) belonging to the Jewish race, will have an irregular dominion like that of a robber. This cannot be described as having temporal power, in the proper sense of the term. Allah had made it quite clear to the Jews through Sayyidnā Mūsā (Moses عليه السلام) that if they continued to be disobedient, they would always have to live under the domination of other nations. Says the Holy Qur'an: وَإِذْ نَادَىٰ رَبُّكَ لِيُعَذِّبَهُمْ إِلَيْهِ : "And when your Lord proclaimed He would send forth against them, unto the Day of Resurrection, those who should visit them with evil chastisement." (7:167)

As to how the Companions, their successors and the great commentators have interpreted the disgrace and degradation which has settled on the Jews, let us present a summary in the words of Ibn Kathir: لا يزالون مستذلين من وجددهم استذلهم وضرب عليهم الصغار : "No matter how wealthy they grow, they will always be despised by other people; whoever gets hold of them will humiliate them, and attach to them the emblems of servitude." The commentator Dahhāk Ibn Muzāhim reports from the blessed Companion 'Abdullāh Ibn 'Abbās that the Jews will always remain under the domination of others, will be paying taxes and tributes to them - that is to say, they will themselves never have power and authority in the real sense of the term.

Another verse of the Holy Qur'an also speaks of the disgrace of the Jews, but with some addition:

صُرِّتْ عَلَيْهِمُ الدَّلَّةُ أَبْنَمَا يُقْفُوا إِلَّا بِحَبْلِ مِّنَ اللَّهِ وَحَبْلِ مِّنَ النَّاسِ

And disgrace has been stamped over them wherever they are found, unless (saved) through a rope from Allah and through a rope from men." (3:112)

Now, the 'rope' or means from Allah refers to the case of those whom Allah Himself has, through His own commandment, saved from this disgrace - for example, children, women, or those who are totally devoted to prayer and worship and never go to war against Muslims.

The 'rope' or means from men refers to a treaty of peace with the Muslims, or a permission to live in a Muslim country on payment of the Jizyah (the tax levied on non-Muslims living in a Muslim country, which exonerates them from military service etc.) Since the Holy Qur'an uses the expression "from men" and not "from Muslims", a third situation is also possible - the Jews may make political arrangements with other non-Muslims, live under their backing and protection, and thus be in 'peace'.

There is another aspect to the question - we must look into the nature of the exception that has been made in the verse which we have just cited. Now, when an exception is added to a statement, the exception may fall into either of these two categories: (1) What has been excepted formed, or still forms, a part of what it has been excepted from. For example, take this statement: "The tribe came except Zayd." Zayd was and still is a member of the tribe, but he has been excepted from it in so far as the act of coming is concerned. (2) What has been excepted did not form, or no longer forms, a part of what it has been excepted from. For example: "The tribe came except the donkey." The donkey, of course, never formed a part of the tribe, and he has been excepted from the act of coming in so far as the act pertains to the tribe. If the exception made in the present verse is of the first kind, then the statement would mean that all the Jews always and everywhere live in disgrace with the exception of two situations - protection provided to women and children etc. by the commandment of Allah Himself, or by a treaty of peace with the Muslims or with some non-Muslim nations. On the other hand, if the exception is of the second kind, the verse would mean that the Jews as a group would essentially and always remain in disgrace with the exception of some who may find protection under the commandment of Allah, or of some others who may receive support from other nations and thus disguise their own disgrace.

Thus, Verse 3:112 helps to elucidate Verse 2:61, and also dispels the doubt which sometimes arises in the minds of the Muslims at the sight of the so-called "Israeli state" imposed on Palestine. For, they find it difficult to reconcile the two things - the Holy Qur'an seems to indicate that the Jews will never have a sovereign state, while they have actually usurped Palestine and set up a state of their own. But if we go beyond the appearances, we can easily see that "Israel" is not an independent sovereign state, but only a stronghold of the Western powers which they have established in the midst of Muslim countries in order to protect their own interests; without the backing of these super-powers the Jewish "state" cannot survive for a month, and the Western powers themselves look upon the Israelis as their henchmen. The "Israeli state" has been living, as the Holy Qur'ān says, "through a rope from men," and, even at that, living as a parasite on the Western powers. So, there is no real occasion to have a misgiving about what the Holy Qur'ān has said on the subject.

Moreover, the half of Palestine which the Jews have usurped and the parasite state they have set up there is no more than a spot on the map of the world. As against this, we have vast expanses of the globe covered by Christian states, by Muslim states, and even by the states of people who do not believe in Allah at all. Can this tiny blot on the map and that too under the American-British umbrella, negate the disgrace which Allah has made to settle upon the Jews?

Verse 62

إِنَّ الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا وَالَّذِينَ هَادُوا وَالنَّصَارَى وَالصَّبِئِينَ مَنْ آمَنَ
بِاللَّهِ وَالْيَوْمِ الْآخِرِ وَعَمِلَ صَالِحًا فَلَهُمْ أَجْرُهُمْ عِنْدَ رَبِّهِمْ وَلَا
خَوْفٌ عَلَيْهِمْ وَلَا هُمْ يَحْزَنُونَ ۝

Surely, those who believed in Allah, and those who became Jewish, and Christians, and the Sabeans -- whosoever believes in Allah and in the Last Day, and does good deeds -- for them, with their Lord, is their reward, and there is no fear for them, nor shall they grieve. (Verse 62)

The previous verse spoke of how the Israelites drew upon themselves the wrath of Allah through their habitual insolence and disobedience. Now, this account may lead the listeners, or the Jews themselves, to suppose that, in view of such transgression, their Taubah (repentance), if they agree to offer it, would not be acceptable to Allah. In order to dispel such a misgiving, the present verse lays down a general principle: no matter how a man has been behaving earlier, so long as he submits himself fully to the commandments of Allah in his beliefs and in his deeds both, he is acceptable to Allah, and will get his reward. It is obvious enough that after the revelation of the Holy Qur'ān, which is the last message of Allah, perfect obedience to Allah can only mean accepting Islam and following the Last Prophet Muḥammad ﷺ.²³ The verse, in effect, assures everyone that once a man has accepted Islām, all his former transgressions, whether in the matter of beliefs or in that of deeds, will be forgiven, and he will become worthy of receiving the rewards of the other world.

Let us note, in passing, that nothing is definitely known as to the beliefs and the practices of the Sabeans, and different opinions have been expressed on the subject. (Most probably they used to worship the stars).

One might also ask why the verse mentions the Muslims, for if it is an invitation to Islam, there is no need to extend the invitation to those who have already accepted Islam. But if we keep in mind the richly concentrated style of the Holy Qur'ān, and try to look beyond the literal sense of the words into the implications and suggestions contained in the verse, we would find that the inclusion of the Muslim factor has added a new dimension to the meaning. It is as if a king should, in a similar situation, say that his laws are impartially applicable to all his subjects, and that whosoever obeys them shall receive his reward for obedience irrespective of whether he has earlier been a friend or a foe. Obviously, the friend has always been loyal and obedient, and the warning and the promise have really been addressed to the foe. But the suggestion contained in such a formulation is that the favours of the king do not proceed from any personal attachment to the friends, but depend on the quality of obedience and loyalty, and hence the foes too will become worthy of his favours if they acquire the necessary quality. This is the raison d'être of mentioning the Muslims along with the non-Muslims in this verse, which should never be taken to imply that salvation can be attained without accepting Islām.

23. Contrary to the flaccid fancies of some "modernizers" who are very happy with themselves over their "liberalism" and "tolerance", the present verse does not open the way to salvation for each and every "man of good will" irrespective of the creed he follows. If one reads the verse in its proper context and along with other relevant verses of the Holy Qur'ān, one will easily see that the verse, in fact, promises salvation in the other world only to those who accept Islām. It is an invitation to Islām extended to the Jews, the Christians, the Sabeans and, as a matter of fact, to the followers of all possible religions, and even to non-believers -- specific names only serve as examples.

We had better dispel another misunderstanding which is likely to arise from the wordings of the present verse -- and, which is actually being promoted by certain 'modernizers'. The verse mentions only two articles of faith of the Islamic creed -- faith in Allah and faith in the Day of Judgment. This should not be taken to mean that in order to attain salvation it is enough to have faith only in Allah and in the Day of Judgment. For, the Holy Qur'ān repeatedly declares that he who does not believe in the prophets, in angels and in the Books of Allah is not a Muslim. Faith in Allah is the first article in the Islamic creed, while faith in the Day of Judgment is the last. By mentioning only these two, the verse intends to say in a succinct manner that it is necessary to have faith in all the articles of the creed, from the first to the last. Moreover, it is through the prophets and the Books of Allah alone that man can acquire any knowledge of the essence and the attributes of Allah and of what is to happen on the Day of Judgment, while the Books of Allah are revealed to the prophets through an angel. So, it is not possible to have faith in Allah and the Day of Judgment until and unless one has faith in the angels, in the Books of Allah and in the prophets.

Verse 63

وَإِذْ أَخَذْنَا مِيثَاقَكُمْ وَرَفَعْنَا فَوْقَكُمُ الطُّورَ خُذُوا مَا آتَيْنَاكُمْ بِقُوَّةٍ
وَادْكُرُوا مَا فِيهِ لَعَلَّكُمْ تَتَّقُونَ ٥

And when We took pledge from you, and raised high above you the (Mount of) Tūr: "Hold fast to what We have given to you, and remember what is there in it, so that you may become God-fearing." (Verse 63)

Having received the Torah from Allah, Sayyidnā Mūsā (Moses عليه السلام) returned from Mount Tūr (Sinai) and recited it to the Israelites. The injunctions contained in the Book were rather rigorous, but their conduct and habits of mind really called for such strict discipline. To begin with, they replied that they would not obey the injunctions until and unless Allah Himself told them that it was His book. Seventy men, as we have related above, were selected to go to Mount Tūr and to hear Allah attest the authenticity of the Torah. On their return, they bore witness to the Torah being a Book of Allah, but added something on their own to what Allah had actually said. For, they told the Israelites that Allah had allowed them to act upon the injunctions only as much as they could, and had promised to forgive them for what they could not accomplish. They had always and instinctively been prone to rebellion against Allah, then, the injunctions were, no doubt, stern, and now they got a new pretext for being negligent. So, the Israelites flatly refused to obey the injunctions, insisting that it was beyond their endurance to act upon such harsh regulations. In reply to this insolence, Allah commanded the angels to raise Mount Tūr and let it hang in the air above their heads as a threat that if they did not fulfil their covenant with Allah, it would fall on them and crush them. The Israelites, then, had no choice but to submit.

A doubt is quite likely to arise here. The Holy Qur'ān says in another place that force should not be used to make a man change his religion, while in the present instance it appears that force is being used. But, in fact, force is not being used to make the Israelites change their religion, for they had already accepted Sayyidnā Mūsā عليه السلام as a prophet of Allah, and willingly made a covenant with Allah that they would act upon the Book of Allah, if one was given to them. So, they now stand as rebels, and are being threatened with dire punishment for persisting in their rebellion. This is exactly how even a secular state deals with rebels, and how it adopts towards them an attitude quite different from that towards aliens or enemies, for it leaves only two ways open to the rebel -- either to submit himself, or to lose his life. That is why it is only an apostate (Murtadd) who is, according to the Islamic Shari'ah, condemned to capital punishment, and not an outright disbeliever. Moreover, the Israelites were being threatened with death as criminals and offenders against the law which they acknowledged to be the divine law, but which they refused to obey.

Verse 64

ثُمَّ تَوَلَّيْتُمْ مِّنْ بَعْدِ ذَلِكَ فَلَوْلَا فَضْلُ اللَّهِ عَلَيْكُمْ وَرَحْمَتُهُ
لَكُنْتُمْ مِنَ الْخَاسِرِينَ ۝

Then even after that, you did turn away. So, had it not been for the grace of Allah upon you, and His mercy, you surely would have been among the losers.

(Verse 64)

The Israelites went against the Covenant they had made with Allah. The sin was so grave that one could have expected utter destruction and ruin to descend on them as a punishment. But Allah, in His mercy, spared them in so far as physical life is concerned, although they will have to pay for their treason in the other world. Allah's mercy is of two kinds. One is general and extends to believers and disbelievers alike -- its action is to be seen in the shape of worldly well-being and prosperity. The other is special, and pertains to believers alone -- it will manifest itself particularly in the other world in the shape of salvation and closeness to Allah.

It appears that the last phrase of the present verse has been addressed to the Jews who were the contemporaries of the Holy Prophet ﷺ. Since having faith in him is also a part of the Covenant, these Jews too have been included among those who had been guilty of infringement. In this verse, Allah asks them to realize that it is in His mercy alone that he has not, in spite of their treason, sent down on them the kind of catastrophic punishment in this world as used to descend on the other infidels and traitors who have gone before.

Since a number of authentic aḥādīth declare that it is the barakah of the Holy Prophet ﷺ that catastrophic punishments no longer descend on any people, some commentators have identified this particular mercy and grace of Allah with the sending down of Muḥammad ﷺ as a Prophet and Messenger of Allah.

In order to emphasize what the present verse has said, the next verse tells the story of another group of earlier transgressors and of the dreadful punishment which overtook them all of a sudden.

Verses 65 - 66

وَلَقَدْ عَلِمْتُمُ الَّذِينَ اعْتَدَوْا مِنْكُمْ فِي السَّبْتِ فَقُلْنَا لَهُمْ
 كُونُوا قِرَدَةً خَاسِئِينَ ۖ فَجَعَلْنَاهَا نَكَالًا لِّمَا بَيْنَ يَدَيْهَا وَمَا
 خَلْفَهَا وَمَوْعِظَةً لِّلْمُتَّقِينَ ۝

And certainly you have known those among you who transgressed in (the matter of) the Sabbath. So, We said to them, "Become apes, living in disgrace." Thus, We made it a deterrent for those around and after them -- and a lesson for the God-fearing. (Verses 65 - 66)

This episode belongs to the time of Sayyidnā Dāwūd (David عليه السلام). Allah had appointed Saturday as the Sabbath, or the sacred day, for the Israelites; it was specially set apart for prayers and worship, and hence fishing was prohibited on this day. But these people lived on the sea-shore, and were very fond of fish. Al-Qurtubī says that the Israelites, at first, invented all sorts of clever pretences for catching fish on Saturday, and gradually started doing so openly. There now grew a division amongst them on this point. On the one hand were these transgressors, and, on the other, some scholars and pious men who tried to dissuade them from such disobedience. When the former paid no heed to them, the latter broke away altogether from the sinners, and began to live in a separate part of the town. One day they felt no sound was coming from the other part of the town. Growing curious, they went there and found that all the transgressors had been changed into apes. Qatādah says that the young ones had become apes, and the old ones swine. The apes could recognize their relatives and friends, and would approach them weeping out of remorse, and seeking their sympathy and help. Then all of them died after three days.

As to the question whether the apes and the swine we see today bear any kinship to these Israelites who had been metamorphosed, the correct position is that people who have been metamorphosed into beasts by Allah as a punishment cease to breed, and leave no progeny behind. According to a ḥadīth reported by Imām Muslim from the blessed Companion ‘Abdullāh ibn Mas‘ūd رضى الله عنه, some people asked the Holy Prophet ﷺ whether the apes and the swine were the descendants of the metamorphosed Jews. The Holy Prophet ﷺ reminded them that apes and swine existed in the world even before, and said that when Allah sends down this particular kind of punishment on a people, the race comes to an end with this, and there is no further breeding.²⁴

Let us now go back to the verse under discussion. The people who witnessed the event, or heard of it, were of two kinds - the disobedient and the obedient. For the disobedient, it served as a 'deterrent', an example and a warning, which persuaded them to repent of their disobedience. For the obedient, it was a lesson and a reminder that they should be steadfast in their obedience. It serves these two purposes even now.

Injunctions and related considerations

We have been saying that the Jews who were changed into apes had used certain ruses or pretences to justify their sin in their own eyes. This brings us to a rather delicate question of Fiqh (Islamic jurisprudence). Certain 'modernists' have quite shamelessly been busy maligning the master-jurists of Islam by suggesting that these mas-

24. Some 'modernizing' Muslims have tried to explain away this metamorphosis by suggesting that these disobedient Jews did not actually and physically turn into beasts, but that the change was only psychological in so far as they acquired the evil characteristics of apes and swine. To say such a thing is to deny an explicit statement of the Holy Qur'ān, which no Muslim can do, if he wishes to remain a Muslim. Moreover, in denying the possibility of physical change, the 'modernizers' are also denying the power of Allah, and putting limitations on it. Even as a piece of literary exegesis, the 'modernist' interpretation is flimsy. For, even before the punishment fell on them, these Jews had been displaying the moral and psychological traits of beasts: the greed of swine and the craftiness of apes. Where was, then, the change which the Holy Qur'ān declares to be a punishment for the offenders and a warning for others? Our 'modernists' are, in fact, all too ready to swallow without batting an eye-lid the most preposterous and unfounded notions, only if they come from the West. So, they have complete certitude with regard to Darwin's speculation, that the apes evolved into man, although no verifiable data has yet been gathered to support the contention; but when it comes to the statement in the Holy Qur'ān that men were changed into apes, they look askance at it, although this kind of change is rationally and logically as possible as the other.

ters have invented very intricate "stratagems" (Hiyal, plural of Hilāh) for helping the rich and powerful to infringe the laws of the Shari'ah and get away with it. This is a petty calumny, and should not have been worthy of consideration except for the fact that such 'modernists' have had some success with the gullible and the ignorant by playing upon the Arabic word Hilāh. As everyone knows, the lexical meaning of a word is one thing, and its technical signification, when it is used as a term in some science, is another. In its literal sense, the word Hilāh no doubt means "a trick, a stratagem", but as a technical term in Fiqh it signifies a device for and a means of giving legitimacy to an action in a contingency by making certain necessary modifications in it in consonance with the Shari'ah. Thus, it is not a way of by-passing the Shari'ah, but of helping people to conform to it even in a situation where necessity or human weakness would compel them to go against it.

The present verse has a particular relevance to the question, and would help to clarify it a great deal. The transgression on the part of the Jews which the verse speaks of, and which drew upon them such dreadful punishment, was not a clear and explicit infringement of divine law, but the use of certain "tricks" which necessarily involved the negation of the divine commandment. For example, on Saturday they would tie one end of a cord to the tail of a fish and the other end to something on the shore, and leave the fish in the water; on Sunday, they would take it out and eat it. Such a ruse not only negates an injunction of the Shari'ah, but is actually a mockery. That is why those who practised such "stratagems" were considered to be disobedient and rebellious, and subjected to dire punishment.

But this particular instance does in no way go to prove that the Hiyal are impermissible. We have explained the nature and purpose of such "devices" alone. Not only do they form an integral part of Fiqh, but some of them have actually been suggested by the Holy Prophet ﷺ himself. For example, bartering a kilo of good dates for two kilos of bad dates is, according to the Shari'ah, a kind of usury. The Holy Prophet ﷺ has suggested a "device" (Hilāh) for avoiding the infringement of this regulation in a situation where such a transaction becomes necessary - that is, instead of bartering one commodity for another, one may employ the exchange value of money: first sell two kilos of bad dates for two rupees, and then with the two rupees thus obtained buy a kilo of good dates. The intention in using this "device" is to conform to the Shari'ah, and not to by-pass it. The negation of the Shari'ah is neither intended here, nor does it actually take place. This principle holds good in the case of all the Hiyal which the Fuqahā' (jurists) have proposed in order to save people from practicing what the Shari'ah has prohibited. It is a travesty of the truth to compare them to or represent them as the "tricks" employed by the Jews to negate and mock the Shari'ah.

Verse 67

وَإِذْ قَالَ مُوسَىٰ لِقَوْمِهِ إِنَّ اللَّهَ يَأْمُرُكُمْ أَنْ تَذْبَحُوا بَقَرَةً قَالُوا
أَتَتَّخِذُنَا هُزُوًا قَالَ أَعُوذُ بِاللَّهِ أَنْ أَكُونَ مِنَ الْجَاهِلِينَ ٥

And when Musa said to his people, "Allah commands you to slaughter a cow." They said, "Are you making us a laughing stock?" He said, "I seek refuge with Allah that I be one of the ignorant." (Verse 67)

According to Mirqat, a commentary on Mishkat, a man among the Israelites wanted to marry a girl, but her father refused. The suitor was so incensed that he killed the father, and disappeared. It is mentioned in Ma'alim al-tanzil which says on the authority of Kalbi that Allah had not yet sent down any injunction with regard to man-slaughter. If it was so, this shows that the incident happened before the Torah was revealed. Anyhow, the Israelites requested Sayyidnā Mūsā عليه السلام to tell them how to trace the culprit. Under the commandment of Allah, he asked them to sacrifice a cow. As was their regular habit, they started raising all kinds of doubts and objections, of which the next verses give us the details.

Verses 68 - 71

قَالُوا ادْعُ لَنَا رَبَّكَ يُبَيِّنْ لَنَا مَا هِيَ قَالَ إِنَّهُ يَقُولُ إِنَّهَا بَقَرَةٌ لَا
فَارِصٌ وَلَا يَكْرُمُ عَوَانُ بَيْنَ ذَلِكَ فافعلوا مَا تُمَرُونَ ٥ قَالُوا
ادْعُ لَنَا رَبَّكَ يُبَيِّنْ لَنَا مَا لَوْنُهَا قَالَ إِنَّهُ يَقُولُ إِنَّهَا بَقَرَةٌ

صَفْرَاءُ ۖ فَاقْعُ لُونَهَا تَسْرُ النَّظِيرِينَ ۝ قَالُوا اُدْعُ لَنَا رَبَّكَ يُبَيِّنْ
لَنَا مَا هِيَ اِنَّ الْبَقَرَ تَشْبَهُ عَلَيْنَا وَاِنَّا اِنْ شَاءَ اللّٰهُ لَمُهْتَدُونَ ۝
قَالَ اِنَّهُ يَقُولُ اِنَّهَا بَقْرَةٌ لَّا ذَلُولٌ تُثِيرُ الْاَرْضَ وَلَا تَسْقَى
الْحَرْثَ مُسَلَّمَةٌ لَّا شِيَةَ فِيهَا قَالُوا الْاِنَّ جِئْتَ بِالْحَقِّ فَذَبْحُوهَا
وَمَا كَادُوا يَفْعَلُونَ ۝

They said, "Pray for us to your Lord that He makes it clear to us what sort she be." He said, "He says she be - a cow neither too old, nor too young - of some middle age in between. Now, do what you are being asked to do." They said, "Pray for us to your Lord that He make it clear to us what colour she be." He said: "He says that she be a yellow cow, rich yellow in her colour, pleasing for all to look at." They said, "Pray for us to your Lord that He makes it clear to us of what sort she be, for we are confused about this cow, and if Allah wills, We shall certainly take the right course." He said, "He says that it be a cow which is not tractable for tilling the soil or in watering the fields, sound and without blemish." They said, "Now, you have come up with the truth." Then, they slaughtered her, although it did not appear they would do it. (Verses 68-71)

These Verses show how the Israelites were disposed to disobedience, and how this inclination expressed itself in different forms. The Hadith says that if these people had obeyed Allah's commandment without raising so many doubts and asking unnecessary questions, such strict condition would not have been imposed on them, and the sacrifice of any cow whatsoever would have been accepted.

Verses 72 - 73

وَإِذْ قَتَلْتُمْ نَفْسًا فَادَرَأْتُمْ فِيهَا وَاللَّهُ مُخْرِجٌ مَّا كُنْتُمْ تَكْتُمُونَ ۝
فَقُلْنَا اضْرِبُوهُ بَعْضَهَا كَذَلِكَ يُحْيِي اللّٰهُ الْمَوْتَى وَيُرِيكُمْ آيَاتِهِ
لَعَلَّكُمْ تَعْقِلُونَ ۝

And when you killed a man, and began to push and pull each other for it; while Allah was to bring forth what you were holding back. So, We said, "Strike him with a part of it." Similar to that, Allah revives the dead. And He shows you His signs, so that you may understand. (Verses 72-73)

The murderer had his supporters who wanted to hide his crime, and hence began accusing different people. But Allah willed that the criminal should be brought to book, and appointed a miraculous way of identifying him -- that is, the dead body of the murdered man should be touched with a part of the flesh of the sacrificial cow. When this was done, the dead man came back to life, announced the name of his murderer, and died again.

This miraculous event is a manifestation of the omnipotence of Allah, and Holy Qur'an presents it as an argument against those who deny the Resurrection of the dead for the Last Judgment. Verse 73 says that this precedent should induce people to make use of their reason, and see that what has happened in a past instance can as easily happen in a future instance.

With regard to this event one may ask as to why Allah made the resurrection of the dead man depend upon his being touched with a part of flesh when he had the power to bring the man back to life without the intervention of any such device; or, one may ask as to why the dead man should have been brought back to life when the name of the murderer could have been revealed even otherwise. In answer to this, we shall say that Allah is omnipotent, and does not act under any kind of compulsion, but that all His actions proceed from His all-embracing wisdom. Moreover, it is He alone who knows, and can know, the raison d'être of what He does. The Shari'ah does not oblige us to discover the raison d'être of each and every divine act, nor is it necessary or possible that we should be able to comprehend the raison d'être in each case. The best way in such a case is to accept what Allah or the Holy Prophet ﷺ has said, and to keep quiet.

Let us say a word about the arrangement and sequence of the events. Verse 72 relates how a man was murdered, and how people started accusing each other. This is the beginning of the story which has been related earlier in Verses 67-71. This chronological order has not been preserved in the narration, but inverted, and this re-arrangement has a subtle significance. This long section of the Sūrah (Chapter) has been dealing with the transgressions of the Israelites, and this is just what the Holy Qur'ān intends to bring out in narrating different stories, the narrating of stories not being an object in itself here. The present story is meant to show two misdeeds - firstly, committing a murder and then trying to hide it; secondly, raising uncalled-for objections to divine commandments. If the chronological order had been kept up, the readers would have supposed that it was only the first of these that was really intended, while the second was added only by way of completing the story. The present arrangement clearly shows that both the misdeeds have been equally emphasized.

Injunctions and related consideration

In this incident the statement of the murdered man was considered evidence for condemning the murderer, because Allah had informed Sayyidnā Mūsā عليه السلام through revelation that the man would, on coming back to life, speak the truth. Otherwise, one cannot be declared as being guilty of murder without proper evidence, the rules of which have been laid down by the Shari'ah.

Verse 74

ثُمَّ قَسَتْ قُلُوبُكُمْ مِّنْ بَعْدِ ذَلِكَ فَهِيَ كَالْحِجَارَةِ أَوْ أَشَدُّ قَسْوَةً
وَإِنَّ مِنَ الْحِجَارَةِ لَمَا يَتَفَجَّرُ مِنْهُ الْأَنْهَارُ وَإِنَّ مِنْهَا لَمَا يَشَّقُّ
فَيَخْرُجُ مِنْهُ الْمَاءُ وَإِنَّ مِنْهَا لَمَا يَهْبِطُ مِنْ خَشْيَةِ اللَّهِ وَمَا
اللَّهُ بِغَافِلٍ عَمَّا تَعْمَلُونَ ٥

When, even after that your hearts were hardened, as if they were like the rocks, or still worse in hardness. For surely among the rocks there are some from which rivers gush forth, and there are others which burst out and water flows from them, and there are still others which fall down in fear of Allah. And Allah is not unaware of what you do. (Verse 74)

The Sūrah has been relating a number of incidents which show that the Israelites were always prone to disobedience and rebellion and had to undergo punishment again and again. Such an experience should have taught them humility and obedience. On the contrary, their hearts became all the more hardened against divine guidance. This insensibility led them into further misdeeds and transgressions. The present verse describes their degeneracy, and warns them that Allah knows everything they have been doing, and will punish them for their evil deeds.

In contrasting the hearts of the Israelites with stones, the verse refers to three states of the latter: (1) Some stones give forth a great amount of water. (2) Others give forth only a small quantity. (3) Still others do not give forth water, but fall down from their place for fear of Allah.

The first two of these states are a matter of everyday observation, but the third may be subject to doubt, for the ability to feel fear requires reason and sensibility, and the stones, as one supposes, do not possess these faculties. But reason is not always a necessary requisite for the ability to feel fear - after all, animals do feel fear, even though they do not possess reason. Sensibility is, of course, necessary. But there is no rational argument which should deny sensibility to minerals. For sensibility depends on life, and the minerals may possibly possess a kind of subtle life which man may not be aware of. In fact, scientists have recently discovered the signs of life and sensibility in minerals too. Anyhow, an explicit statement in the Holy Qur'an carries a validity and an authority which no physical science or rational argument can dispute.

Then, we do not claim that fear of Allah is always the only cause which makes a stone fall down. For, the Holy Qur'an itself says that this cause operates only in the case of some stones. So, there may be different causes which make stones fall down; some of these causes may be purely physical, while one of them may be the fear of Allah.

The order in which the three kinds of stones have been mentioned is very subtle, and, in view of the meaning and purpose intended, extremely expressive and significant. The verse places in the highest degree those stones whose affectivity is so strong that rivers gush forth from them, and provide sustenance to beasts and men. In contrast to them, it has been suggested, the hearts of the Jews are so hard that they are incapable of feeling any sympathy for their fellow-men even in suffering and pain, and hence incapable of wishing to do them good. In the second degree come the stones which do serve the creatures of Allah, but to a lesser extent. But the hearts of Jews are harder than even these. To the lowest degree of affectivity belong those stones which do not benefit anyone, but can at least 'feel' the fear of Allah. But the Jews are devoid of even this minimum degree of sensitivity.

Verse 75

أَفَتَطْمَعُونَ أَنْ يُؤْمِنُوا لَكُمْ وَقَدْ كَانَ فَرِيقٌ مِنْهُمْ يَسْمَعُونَ
كَلَامَ اللَّهِ ثُمَّ يُحَرِّفُونَهُ مِنْ بَعْدِ مَا عَقَلُوهُ وَهُمْ يَعْلَمُونَ ۝

Do you still fancy that they will believe you, although a group of them used to hear the word of Allah, and then, after having understood it, used to distort it knowingly? (Verse 75)

The Muslims used to take great pains in trying to make the Jews accept Islam. Having recounted so many stories of the perversity of the Jews, the Holy Qur'ān points out to the Muslims that they cannot expect such a people to be sensible, and asks them not to worry much about them. For, some of the Jews have been committing an even more heinous sin - they used to change and distort the Word of Allah in spite of knowing the ignominy of such a deed. So, the Holy Qur'ān wants the Muslims to realize that men who are so enslaved to their desires and so shameless in their pursuit of evil, cannot be expected to listen to anyone.

The "Word of Allah" mentioned in the verse refers to the Torah which the Jews had "heard" from the prophets, and the distortion pertains to the changes made in the words themselves or in the sense or in both; or it refers to the words of Allah which the seventy men had heard directly on the Mount Tūr (Sinai) where they had gone to seek divine confirmation of what Sayyidnā Mūsā (Moses عليه السلام) had been telling and the distortion pertains to their declaration before their people that Allah had promised to forgive them if they could not act upon certain commandments.

The Jews who were the contemporaries of the Holy Prophet ﷺ may not have themselves been involved in some of these transgressions, but since they did not abhor the misdeeds of their forefathers, they are to be considered as their counterparts.

Verse 76

وَإِذَا لَقُوا الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا قَالُوا آمَنَّا وَإِذَا خَلَا بِعَضُّهُمْ إِلَى
بَعْضٍ قَالُوا أَتُحَدِّثُونَهُمْ بِمَا فَتَحَ اللَّهُ عَلَيْكُمْ لِيُحَاجُّوكُمْ بِهِ
عِنْدَ رَبِّكُمْ أَفَلَا تَعْقِلُونَ ٥

And when they meet those who believe, they say, "We believe." But when some of them meet others in private, they say, "Do you tell them what Allah has disclosed to you so that they may thereby argue against you before your Lord? Have you, then, no sense?" (Verse 76)

Some of the Jews, seeing the growing power of the Muslims in Madinah and around it, pretended to have accepted Islam. In order to assure the Muslims of their sincerity and to win their favour, these hypocrites would now and then disclose to them that the Torah itself had given out the good tidings of the coming of the Holy Prophet ﷺ and mentioned the Holy Qur'ān. But when they met other Jews who openly declared their adherence to Judaism, they would admit that they were only trying to deceive the Muslims, and were otherwise quite loyal to their own faith. On such occasions, those of the other group used to reprimand them for revealing to the Muslims what they themselves were trying to keep concealed, for a knowledge of the relevant verses of the Torah could be very useful for the Muslims in order to defeat the Jews in their argument.

Verses 77 - 79

أَوَلَا يَعْلَمُونَ أَنَّ اللَّهَ يَعْلَمُ مَا يُسِرُّونَ وَمَا يُعْلِنُونَ ٥ وَمِنْهُمْ
أُمِّيُّونَ لَا يَعْلَمُونَ الْكِتَابَ إِلَّا أَمَانِي وَإِنَّهُمْ إِلَّا يَظُنُّونَ ٥
فَوَيْلٌ لِلَّذِينَ يَكْتُمُونَ الْكِتَابَ بِأَيْدِيهِمْ ثُمَّ يَقُولُونَ هَذَا مِنْ
عِنْدِ اللَّهِ لِيَشْتَرُوا بِهِ ثَمَنًا قَلِيلًا فَوَيْلٌ لَهُمْ مِمَّا كَتَبَتْ أَيْدِيهِمْ
وَوَيْلٌ لَهُمْ مِمَّا يَكْسِبُونَ ٥

Are they not aware that Allah knows what they conceal and what they manifest? And some among them are illiterate who have no knowledge of the Book but have some fancies, and they do nothing but make conjectures. So, woe to those who write the Book with their hands and then say, "This is from Allah", so that they may gain a small price out of it. Then, woe to them for what their hands have written, and woe to them for what they earn. (Verses 77-79)

Allah reminds the Jews that He is omniscient, and knows what they try to keep concealed as well as what they say or do openly. So, it would make no difference at all, if the hypocrites tried to conceal their infidelity from the Muslims, or the other group, not to disclose the verses of the Torah which speak of the Holy Prophet ﷺ. For, Allah Himself has, on different occasions, informed the Muslims in the Holy Qur'ān as to the hypocrisy of certain Jews and as to the testimony of the Torah also.

Verse 77 deals with the educated ones among the Jews, while Verse 78 speaks of those who were unlettered. These men had no knowledge of the Torah, and were even deficient in their understanding. Then, the Jewish scholars did not give them correct or proper information about their religion. No wonder, their minds were stuffed only with baseless superstitions which they found very pleasant and flattering.

Since the dishonesty of their scholars was the real cause of their superstitiousness, the crime of the former was greater than that of the latter. So, Verse 79 turns to the Jewish scholars. They were greedy and self-seeking, and in order to please the people for receiving money and respect from them, they used to misrepresent divine injunctions, going so far as to change the words of the Torah or distort the sense, pretending all the while that this was just what Allah had said or meant. The Verse 79 announces a grievous punishment for these two sins - distorting the Word of Allah and earning money by doing so.

A doctrinal point

Verse 78 says that the illiterate Jews follow their زَنَّ : Zann, that is to say, their fancies or conjectures. Some people do not pay any attention to the context in which the word has been used here, and come to the erroneous conclusion that it is not legitimate to accept or follow any view or injunction based on Zann, which they always translate as "a fanciful supposition." This, no doubt, is one of the lexical meanings of the word, but only one. Let us explain that the Holy Qur'an uses the word Zann in three ways:-

(1) To signify perfect certitude - "Those who are certain that they are going to meet their Lord" (2:46). (2) To signify the greatest likelihood - "And he said to him whom he thought was the more likely of the two to be released from the prison" (12:42). (3) To signify a mere fanciful supposition - as in the present verse. The Zann which the Holy Qur'an prohibits us to follow is that of the third kind. This verse condemns the Jews for having followed this kind of Zann which consists in a fanciful opinion that is not supported by a respectable argument or goes against a valid one. On the contrary, it is necessary to follow the Zann of the first two kinds. When certain aḥādith or certain arguments and conclusions in the Shari'ah are described as resting on Zann, it is done according to the second signification of the word. One cannot avoid this kind of Zann in any sphere of life, and the Shari'ah requires us to accept and follow it. Certain verses of the Holy Qur'an, of course, condemn those who follow their Zann, but to apply this condemnation to all the possible cases, and to use such verses for rejecting all the legitimate arguments and injunctions of the Shari'ah based on Zann is to betray one's ignorance of the Holy Qur'an.

Verse 80

وَقَالُوا لَنْ تَمَسَّنَا النَّارُ إِلَّا أَيَّامًا مَّعْدُودَةً قُلْ أَتَّخَذْتُمْ
عِنْدَ اللَّهِ عَهْدًا فَلَنْ يُخْلِفَ اللَّهُ عَهْدَهُ أَمْ تَقُولُونَ عَلَى اللَّهِ
مَا لَا تَعْلَمُونَ ۝

And they say, "The fire shall not touch us but for a few days." Say, "Have you taken a pledge from Allah and Allah will not go against His promise? Or, do you say about Allah what you do not know?" (Verse 80)

The claim of the Jews that they would not be sent to Hell for their sins, or, if at all, only for a few days, has been interpreted by the Commentators in different ways. One of them is as follows:-

The principle is common to all the Shari'ahs that if a believer commits sins, he will receive a punishment in Hell for some time and in accordance with the degree and nature of his sins, but as he possesses Imān (faith), he will not be assigned to Hell for ever, and will be released after having served his term. Now, the argument on which the assertion of the Jews was based was that since the Shari'ah of Sayyidnā Mūsā (Moses عليه السلام) had not, in their view, been abrogated, they were true believers (Mumins), and had not turned into infidels (Kāfirs) by denying the prophethood of Sayyidnā 'Isā (Jesus عليه السلام) and of Sayyidnā Muḥammad ﷺ; hence - so the argument ran - if they were sent to Hell in punishment of some sin, they would again be taken out after a few days. This false assertion is, thus based on another false assertion. The Torah never declares that the Shari'ah of Sayyidnā Mūsā عليه السلام is meant to last for ever. To claim perpetuity for it is an unfounded and false assertion, and hence the Jews who made such a claim and denied the prophethood of Sayyidnā 'Isā عليه السلام and of Sayyidnā Muḥammad ﷺ, must on account of this denial be held to be infidels and disbelievers (Kāfirs). And no Book of Allah holds out to the infidels the promise that they would be released from Hell after a while. The present verse refers to such a promise as the "pledge" of Allah. Since Allah has never made such a promise, it goes to show that the Jews were making a baseless claim.

Verses 81 - 82

بَلَىٰ مَنْ كَسَبَ سَيِّئَةً وَأَحَاطَتْ بِهِ خَطِيئَتُهُ فَأُولَٰئِكَ أَصْحَابُ
النَّارِ هُمْ فِيهَا خَالِدُونَ ۝ وَالَّذِينَ آمَنُوا وَعَمِلُوا الصَّالِحَاتِ
أُولَٰئِكَ أَصْحَابُ الْجَنَّةِ هُمْ فِيهَا خَالِدُونَ ۝

Why not? Those who commit evil and are besieged by their sin, those are people of the Fire - there they shall remain for ever. And those who believe, and do good deeds, such are people of Paradise - there they shall remain for ever. (Verses 81 - 82)

Having refuted the claim of the Jews as baseless, the Holy Qur'an lays down the divine law in this regard. Those who commit evil deeds knowingly and deliberately so that evil takes hold of them completely, leaving no trace of goodness - such men shall go to the Hell, and live there for ever, without any intermission or release. But those who believe in Allah and the Holy Prophet ﷺ - whose Shari'ah has now abrogated all the earlier Shari'ahs and who do good deeds in conformity with the Islamic Shari'ah, - it is these men who shall go to Paradise, and will live there for ever.

Let us explain how evil can take hold of a man so completely that no trace of goodness is left. This kind of thing happens only to infidels (Kāfirs), and not to Muslims, even when they are sinners. For, no good deed on the part of an infidel is acceptable to Allah on account of his infidelity; even the good deeds he has done before his apostasy and infidelity are lost, and rendered null and void. That is why on the Day of Judgment, infidels will have to show nothing but evil, in punishment of which they shall live in Hell for ever. On the contrary, men of faith will, to begin with, have the greatest and highest good deed to their credit - namely, faith (Imān) itself. Then, their secondary good deeds too are recorded in their account. So, they cannot be devoid of all goodness, and evil cannot be said to have taken hold of them completely.

In short, the infidel, according to this divine law, must always live in Hell. Since Sayyidnā Mūsā (Moses عليه السلام) was not the last prophet, but was followed by two other prophets, Sayyidnā 'Īsā (Jesus عليه السلام) and Sayyidnā Muḥammad ﷺ, the Jews turned into infidels by denying these two prophets. So, in accordance with this law, they too will be assigned to Hell for ever like other infidels, and their claim that they would be released from Hell after few days can now be seen to be totally false and baseless.

Verse 83

وَإِذَا أَخَذْنَا مِيثَاقَ بَنِي إِسْرَآئِيلَ لَا تَعْبُدُونَ إِلَّا اللَّهَ وَبِالْوَالِدَيْنِ إِحْسَانًا وَذِي الْقُرْبَىٰ وَالْيَتَامَىٰ وَالْمَسْكِينِ وَقُولُوا لِلنَّاسِ حُسْنًا وَأَقِيمُوا الصَّلَاةَ وَآتُوا الزَّكَاةَ ثُمَّ تَوَلَّيْتُمْ إِلَّا قَلِيلًا مِّنْكُمْ وَأَنْتُمْ مُّعْرِضُونَ ٥

And when We made the children of Israel take a pledge:

"You shall not worship anyone but Allah; and to parents you shall be good, and to near of kin and to orphans and the needy. And say to the people what is good, and be steadfast in Salāh, and pay Zakāh." Then, you went back (on your word), all but a few among you, and you are used to turning away. (Verse 83)

This verse speaks of the pledge which Allah had made the Israelites take, and the few people it refers to as having been true to the pledge were those who acted upon the Shari'ah of Sayyidnā Mūsā (Moses عليه السلام) as long as it was in force, and when it was abrogated, followed the Shari'ah of Sayyidnā Muḥammad صلى الله عليه وسلم

Injunctions and related considerations

(1) This verse brings out the basic elements common to Islam and all the earlier Shari'ahs: Tauhid (the doctrine of Unity or Oneness); service to one's parents, relations, orphans and the needy; being gentle in speaking to all human beings; Salāh and Zakāh.

(2) The verse asks us to adopt a gentle tone and an open-hearted manner in speaking to others, whether they are good or evil, pious or impious, orthodox or aberrant, followers of Sunnah or adherents to partitive innovations in it. In religious matter, however, one should not try to hide the truth for the sake of pleasing people or of winning their approval. The Holy Qur'ān tells us that when Allah sent Sayyidnā Mūsā and Sayyidnā Hārūn (Moses and Aaron عليهم السلام) to the Pharaoh, He instructed them to use gentle and soft words (20:42). None of us who addresses another today can be superior to Sayyidnā Mūsā عليه السلام, nor can the man addressed be viler than the Pharaoh.

Talha ibn 'Umar recounts that once he said to the great master of the Sciences of Exegesis and Ḥadīth, 'Atā', "One can see around you people who are not quite orthodox in their beliefs. As for me, I am rather short-tempered. If such people come to me, I deal with them harshly." 'Atā' replied, "Do not behave like this," and, reciting the present verse, he added, "Allah has commanded us to speak to people politely. When Jews and Christians all are to be treated like this, would this commandment not apply to a Muslim, no matter what kind of a man he is?" (Qurtubī)

Verse 84

وَإِذْ أَخَذْنَا مِيثَاقَكُمْ لَا تَسْفِكُونَ دِمَاءَكُمْ وَلَا تَخْرِجُونَ
أَنْفُسَكُمْ مِنْ دِيَارِكُمْ ثُمَّ أَقْرَرْتُمْ وَأَنْتُمْ تَشْهَدُونَ ۝

And when We made you take a pledge: "You shall not shed one another's blood, and you shall not drive out one another from your homes." Then you agreed being yourselves the witness. (Verse 84)

This verse is a supplement to the previous verse, and speaks of the other articles of the pledge taken by the Israelites. They had agreed not to kill one another by engaging themselves in an internecine war, and also not to send their men into exile - that is to say, not to harass a man so as to force him to migrate.

They had willingly taken this pledge. Now, it may sometimes happen that one does not express one's willingness in so many words, but the manner of his speech suggests it. The agreement of the Israelites was not of this order, but as clear and explicit as the statement of a witness usually is.

Verse 85

ثُمَّ أَنْتُمْ هَؤُلَاءِ تَقْتُلُونَ أَنْفُسَكُمْ وَتُخْرِجُونَ فَرِيقًا مِنْكُمْ مِنْ
دِيَارِهِمْ لِتُظْهَرُوا عَلَيْهِم بِالْإِثْمِ وَالْعُدْوَانِ وَإِنْ يَأْتِوكُمْ أُسْرَى
تُفْدُوهُمْ وَهُوَ مُحَرَّمٌ عَلَيْكُمْ إِخْرَاجُهُمْ أَفَتُؤْمِنُونَ بِبَعْضِ
الْكِتَابِ وَتَكْفُرُونَ بِبَعْضٍ فَمَا جَزَاءُ مَنْ يَفْعَلُ ذَلِكَ مِنْكُمْ
إِلَّا خِزْيٌ فِي الْحَيَاةِ الدُّنْيَا وَيَوْمَ الْقِيَمَةِ يُرَدُّونَ إِلَى أَشَدِّ
الْعَذَابِ وَمَا اللَّهُ بِغَافِلٍ عَمَّا تَعْمَلُونَ ۝

Yet, here you are, killing one another, and driving a group of your own out of their homes, supporting each other against them in sin and aggression -- and if they came to you as prisoners, you would ransom them, though their very expulsion was unlawful for you! Do you, then, believe in some part of the Book, and disbelieve in some other? So, what can be the recompense of those among you who do that, except disgrace in present life? And, on Doomsday, they shall be turned to the most severe punishment. And Allah is not unaware of what you do. (Verse 85)

This verse recounts how the Israelites broke the pledge they had willingly made. Allah had laid down three special injunctions for the Israelites: (1) They should not kill one another in an internecine war. (2) They should not force their own people into exile. (3) If they found a man from amongst them a prisoner of war, they should pay a ransom, and get him released. The Israelites disregarded the first two injunctions, and acted upon the third alone which they supposed easier to be carried out.

It happened like this. There lived in Madīnah two tribes, the Aws and the Khazraj, who were hostile to each other, and would often go to war. In the environs of Madīnah, there also lived two tribes of the Jews, the Banī Qurayzah and the Banī Nadīr. The former had friendly relations with the Aws, and the latter with the Khazraj. When the Aws and the Khazraj went to war against each other, the two tribes of the Jews also took part in the battle, each on the side of its own friends. In these battles, many Jews lost their lives or were rendered homeless as much as the non-Jews. In other words, the Jews of the Banī Qurayzah tribe had a share in the slaughter and exile of the Jews of the Banī Nadīr tribe, and vice versa. However, when some of the Jews became prisoners of war, each of the two Jewish groups would persuade their respective friends among the non-Jews to accept a ransom and to release the prisoners. When they were asked why they showed such a solicitude for the prisoners, they would say that it was obligatory for them to get prisoners released. But when someone objected to their helping the non-Jews in slaughtering the Jews, they used to reply that it would be a real disgrace if they did not go to the aid of their friends, even if they were not Jews.

So, the present verse exposes their duplicity and their perversity. The Holy Qur'ān indicts their behaviour as "sin and aggression," and this suggests that the Israelites were infringing on two kinds of rights -- the right of Allah, by disobeying Him; and the right of His creatures, by inflicting pain and loss on them.

The verse proceeds to reprimand them for accepting certain injunctions laid down in the Torah, while rejecting others, and following their own whims in both the cases. At the end, this long verse announces the grave punishment for such misdeeds the Israelites will have to bear in this world as well as in the other.

Let it be clearly understood that the Jews referred to in this verse had already become infidels (Kāfirs) by refusing to accept and affirm the prophethood of Sayyidnā Muḥammad ﷺ. But instead of referring to this aspect of their infidelity, the verse points out another aspect. It reprimands them for having faith (Īmān) only in some part of the Book (Torah) and not having faith in some other. If we take the words of the present verse literally, it means that the Jews had become infidels by not having faith in some parts (that is to say, some injunctions) of the Torah. For, a Divine Book has to be accepted as a whole; to reject a part is to reject the whole, and clearly amounts to disbelief and infidelity (Kufr). But if we interpret the present verse in a different way, and take it to be reprimanding the Jews for not acting upon certain injunctions, then a question would arise here: How is it that the verse delineates their infringement of certain commandments as Kufr or infidelity, although a believer cannot be considered an infidel so long as he accepts, at least in principle, the distinctions between the Halāl (lawful) and the Ḥarām (unlawful) exactly as laid down by the Shari'ah? The answer to the question is that when a sin is very grave, the idiom of the Shari'ah sometimes delineates it as Kufr (infidelity) in order to emphasize its gravity and its moral nature. This is also what the ḥadīth intends to do when it says: مَنْ تَرَكَ الصَّلَاةَ مُتَعَمِّدًا فَقَدْ كَفَرَ : "He who gave up the Salāh wilfully became an infidel."

This second interpretation does not, however, attenuate or modify the Kufr (infidelity) of the Jews of which they had already been guilty by denying the prophethood of Sayyidnā Muḥammad ﷺ.

The verse announces that the Jews will have to bear a punishment not only in the other world, but in this world too - in the shape of humiliation and disgrace. It took place as it had been foretold. In the time of the Holy Prophet ﷺ himself, the Jews of the Bani Qurayzah tribe had to lose their lives or to undergo imprisonment, and those of the Bani Nadīr tribe were expelled for having broken the pact they had earlier made with the Muslims.

A doctrinal point

Verse 85 announces the "punishment" for Jews. One may very well ask here why the direst punishment should be reserved for the Jews, and not for atheists, for the Jews at least believe in Allah. The famous Commentator 'Ālūsī says in his "Rūh al-Ma'ānī" that every punishment meted out to the infidels will be "the direst" in the sense that it will have no end or limit. So, what the verse implies is not that the punishment given to the Jews will be more severe than the one given to all the other infidels, but that they will be given the kind of punishment which is "the direst" in the sense of having no end or limit. In other words, the verse suggests that the punishment given to the infidels will be more severe than the one given to Muslim sinners. But if there are going to be different degrees in the punishment meted out to different kinds of infidels, it does not in any way go against the implications of this verse. (Bayān al-Qur'ān)

Verse 86

أُولَئِكَ الَّذِينَ اشْتَرُوا الْحَيَاةَ الدُّنْيَا بِالْآخِرَةِ فَلَا يَخَفُ عَنْهُمْ
الْعَذَابُ وَلَا هُمْ يُنصَرُونَ ٥

Those are the ones who bought the worldly life at the cost of the Hereafter. So, punishment shall not be lightened for them, nor shall they be helped. (Verse 86)

This verse explains why the Jews will have to undergo such a severe punishment. They have been disobeying Allah in order to satisfy their desires and to enjoy worldly pleasures; they have also sacrificed for these things their salvation in the other world. Their sin being so great, Allah will not reduce or mollify their punishment, nor will He allow anyone to intercede on their behalf.

Verse 87

وَلَقَدْ آتَيْنَا مُوسَى الْكِتَابَ وَقَفَّيْنَا مِنْ مِّنْ بَعْدِهِ بِالرُّسُلِ وَآتَيْنَا
عِيسَى ابْنَ مَرْيَمَ الْبَيِّنَاتِ وَأَيَّدْنَاهُ بِرُوحِ الْقُدُسِ أَفَكُلَّمَا جَاءَكُمْ
رَسُولٌ بِمَا لَا تَهْوَى أَنْفُسُكُمْ اسْتَكْبَرْتُمْ فَفَرِقْنَا كَذَّبْتُمْ وَفَرِقًا
تَقْتُلُونَ ٥

And, indeed, We gave Mūsā the Book, and after him We sent messengers, one following the other; and We gave clear signs to ʿĪsā, the son of Mariam (Jesus, the son of Mary), and supported him with the Holy Spirit. Then, how is it that every time a prophet came to you with what does not meet your desire, you grew arrogant? So, you falsified a group (of the messengers) and killed others. (Verse 87)

The Qurʾān again reminds the Israelites how Allah in His mercy forgave them their transgressions again and again, and provided them with all the means of guidance. First of all, He gave them a Divine Book, the Torah, through Sayyidnā Mūsā (Moses عليه السلام); then, sent them a number of prophets; and, at the end of this line, sent down Sayyidnā ʿĪsā (Jesus عليه السلام) along with clear and irrefutable evidences of his prophethood, like the Evangel and miracles, and appointed the Archangel Jibrāʾīl (Gabriel عليه السلام) to give him support.

The Archangel Jibrāʾīl has often been called "Rūḥ al-Qudus" (the Holy Spirit) in the Noble Qurʾān and the Ḥadīth. For example, in Verse 16:102 - قُلْ نَزَّلَهُ رُوحُ الْقُدُسِ - "Say: the Holy Spirit has brought it (the Noble Qurʾān) down;" or in a couplet of the poet and blessed Companion Ḥassān ibn Thābit, reported in the Ḥadīth:

وجبريل رسول الله فينا
وروح القدس ليس له كفاء

Jibrāʾīl, the messenger of Allah, comes to us;
he is the Holy Spirit, the incomparable."

Allah helped and supported Sayyidnā ʿĪsā عليه السلام through Jibrāʾīl in several ways. (1) He was conceived through the breath of the Archangel. (2) Jibrāʾīl عليه السلام protected him against being touched by Satan at the time of this birth. (3) The Archangel always accompanied him in order to defend him against the hostility of the Jews. (4) It was through him that Sayyidnā ʿĪsā عليه السلام was raised to the heavens.

In spite of all these divine favours, the Jews persisted in their rebellion. They were so stubborn in the worship of their desires, that whenever the prophets brought to them certain divine injunctions which did not please them, the Jews would deny the prophets -- they denied even Sayyidnā 'Īsā --, or would kill them outright -- for example, they dealt in this vile manner with Sayyidnā Zakariyyā (Zachariah) and Sayyidnā Yāhya (John the Baptist) عليهم السلام .

Verse 88

وَقَالُوا قُلُوبُنَا غُلْفٌ بَلْ لَعَنَهُمُ اللَّهُ بِكُفْرِهِمْ فَقَلِيلًا مَّا يُؤْمِنُونَ ۝

And they said, "Our hearts are veiled." Rather, Allah has cast damnation upon them for their disbelief. So, they believe just a little. (Verse 88)

The Jews used to say sarcastically that their hearts were "veiled", by which they meant that their hearts were so well protected against Islam that it could never touch them. This was their way of congratulating themselves on being staunch in their belief. The Holy Qur'ān points out that this is not the firmness of faith, but a damnation, for they deny Islam which now is the true religion, and stick to a religion which has been abrogated. They, consequently, possess only "a little" faith (Īmān). Since a little faith is not acceptable, they turn out to be infidels.

The little faith" which they possessed pertained to the doctrines which are common to Islām and Judaism - for example, belief in Allah, or belief in the Day of Judgment. But they did not accept Sayyidnā Muḥammad ﷺ as a prophet, and the Holy Qur'ān as the Word of Allah. So, their faith was not complete.

If the Verse describes 'the little faith' as 'Īmān', it does so only in the lexical sense, for 'Īmān' signifies total certitude, even if it pertains to certain things, and not to others. But from the point of view of the Shari'ah, such a partial faith cannot be described as 'Īmān'. The Shari'ah would accept as valid only that 'Īmān' which affirms with certitude each and everything that the Shari'ah requires one to affirm.

Verse 89

وَلَمَّا جَاءَهُمْ كِتَابٌ مِّنْ عِندِ اللَّهِ مُصَدِّقٌ لِّمَا مَعَهُمْ وَكَانُوا
مِنْ قَبْلُ يَسْتَفْتِحُونَ عَلَى الَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا فَلَمَّا جَاءَهُمْ

مَا عَرَفُوا كَفَرُوا بِهِ فَلَعْنَةُ اللَّهِ عَلَى الْكَافِرِينَ ٥

And when there came to them a Book from Allah, which confirms what was with them, while earlier, they used to seek help against those who disbelieved, yet when there came to them that they did identify, they denied it. So the curse of Allah is upon the disbelievers. (Verse 89)

The Torah had in several places foretold the coming of the Holy Prophet ﷺ. In fact, the Jews themselves used to tell the Arabs that a new prophet and a new Divine Book was soon to come. But when the Holy Qur'an came down from Allah, and even when they had recognized its authenticity, the Jews denied it out of sheer spite.

The verse says that the Holy Qur'an confirms the Torah - it means that the Holy Qur'an is a concrete evidence of the truth of the prophecies made in the Torah with regard to the coming of the Holy Prophet ﷺ and of the Holy Qur'an. One who believes in the Torah cannot justifiably deny the Holy Qur'an and the Holy Prophet ﷺ, for such a denial would involve a denial of the Torah itself.

Knowledge is not enough for 'Imān

One may want to know why the Holy Qur'an calls the Jews Kāfirīn (infidels), when they did recognize the truth as truth, which should qualify them to be called "believers." Let us explain that 'Imān (faith) does not merely mean "knowing the truth", but really signifies "accepting the truth and affirming it deed-wise." Otherwise, Satan too will have to be called a believer, for he knows fully well what the truth is. In fact, this knowledge of the truth on the part of Satan intensifies the gravity of his Kufr (infidelity) all the more.

However, the next verse attributes the infidelity of the Jews to their malice.

Verse 90

بِئْسَمَا اشْتَرَوْا بِهِ أَنْفُسَهُمْ أَنْ يَكْفُرُوا بِمَا أَنْزَلَ اللَّهُ بَغْيًا أَنْ يَنْزِلَ اللَّهُ مِنْ فَضْلِهِ عَلَى مَنْ يَشَاءُ مِنْ عِبَادِهِمْ فَبَاءُ وَ
بَعْضٌ عَلَى غَضَبٍ وَلِلْكَافِرِينَ عَذَابٌ مُهِينٌ ٥

Vile is that for which they have sold out their selves: that they should deny what Allah has revealed, grudging that Allah should send down some of His bounty to whomsoever He wills from among His servants. So, they came out with wrath upon wrath. And for unbelievers there is humiliating punishment. (Verse 90)

Prophethood cannot be earned through one's own efforts or one's own merit; it is a special grace which Allah bestows on whomsoever He likes. But the Jews were so envious and malicious that they denied the Holy Prophet ﷺ and the Holy Qur'ān out of sheer spite. In doing so, they were questioning the will of Allah Himself. Thus, they earned divine wrath in two ways - firstly, for denying a true prophet; and secondly, for their envy and malice.

The Holy Qur'ān says that the Jews will have to undergo a punishment which would involve not only pain, but also disgrace and abasement. The latter condition has been added to suggest that this kind of punishment is peculiar to the infidels, and is not meant for a true Muslim at all, for a Muslim, no matter how great his sins are, will be punished for the purpose of being purified, not for being disgraced.

The next verse reports what the Jews used to say with regard to the Holy Qur'ān, which clearly shows their envy and malice as well as their infidelity (Kufr).

Verse 91

وَإِذَا قِيلَ لَهُمْ آمِنُوا بِمَا أَنْزَلَ اللَّهُ قَالُوا نُوْمِنُ بِمَا أَنْزَلَ عَلَيْنَا وَيَكْفُرُونَ بِمَا وَرَاءَهُ وَهُوَ الْحَقُّ مُصَدِّقًا لِمَا مَعَهُمْ قُلْ فَلِمَ تَقْتُلُونَ أَنْبِيَاءَ اللَّهِ مِنْ قَبْلُ إِنْ كُنْتُمْ مُؤْمِنِينَ ٥

And when it is said to them, "Believe in what Allah has revealed," they say, "We believe in what has been revealed to us" -- and they deny what is beyond, whereas that is the truth, confirming what is with them. Say, "Why then have you been slaying the prophets of Allah earlier, if you were believers?" (Verse 91)

The Jews flatly refused to believe in any Book of Allah -- like the Evangel or the Holy Qur'ān - except in the Torah. This denial is a clear evidence of their infidelity (Kufr). Moreover, they also used to add that they believe in the Torah, for it had been sent down to them. This comes to mean that they denied the other Books just because they had not been sent down to them. Such an argument betrays their envy and malice.

The Holy Qur'ān refutes their argument in three ways:-

(1) When the truth and authenticity of the other Books has been established on the basis of irrefutable arguments, what does, then, this denial mean? If they had any doubts as to the arguments on the basis of which authenticity was being claimed for these Books, they could very well have voiced this doubt, and satisfied themselves on this point. But why this flat refusal to believe?

(2) The other Books, like the Holy Qur'ān, confirm the Torah. If one denies them, one at the same time denies the Torah itself.

(3) To slay a prophet is tantamount to infidelity (Kufr), according to all the Divine Books. Moreover, the prophets whom the Jews had killed were themselves Israelites, and their teachings, were based on the injunctions of the Torah. But the Jews not only killed these prophets, but also accepted the killers as their chiefs. This is a direct denial of the Torah, and falsifies their claim that they believe in the Torah.

In short, nothing that the Jews say or do is acceptable and valid from any possible point of view.

The next verses proceed to refute the Jews on several other counts.

Verse 92

وَلَقَدْ جَاءَكُمْ مُوسَىٰ بِالْبَيِّنَاتِ ثُمَّ اتَّخَذْتُمُ الْعِجْلَ مِن بَعْدِهِ
وَأَنْتُمْ ظَالِمُونَ ۝

And certainly Moses came to you with clear signs, then you took to yourselves the calf thereafter -- and you were transgressors. (Verse 92)

The "clear signs" mentioned in the verse refers to the miracles which had manifested themselves even before the Torah was given to Sayyidnā Mūsā (Moses عليه السلام) -- for example, his staff that turned into a snake, the palm of his hand which shone brightly, the splitting of the sea to make a path for the Israelites, etc. These miracles were meant to affirm the Oneness of Allah and His omnipotence, and to provide an evidence for the prophethood of Sayyidnā Mūsā عليه السلام.

In refutation of the Jews, the verse points out that although they lay a claim to ʾImān (faith), yet have been falling into the sin of Shirk (association), which involves a denial not only of Sayyidnā Mūsā عليه السلام but even of Allah Himself.

Although the Jews who were the contemporaries of the Holy Prophet ﷺ, did not themselves take part in the worship of the golden calf, yet they respected such of their forefathers as had done so, and took their side. So, for all practical purposes, they too were guilty of the same sin.

The verse also suggests that no wonder if these people, whose forefathers denied Sayyidnā Mūsā عليه السلام, should now be denying the Holy Prophet ﷺ.

Verse 93

وَإِذْ أَخَذْنَا مِيثَاقَكُمْ وَرَفَعْنَا فَوْقَكُمْ الطُّورَ خُذُوا مَا آتَيْنَاكُمْ
بِقُوَّةٍ وَاسْمَعُوا قَالُوا سَمِعْنَا وَعَصَيْنَا وَأَشْرَبُوا فِي قُلُوبِهِم
الْعِجْلَ بِكُفْرِهِمْ قُلْ بِئْسَمَا يَأْمُرُكُمْ بِهِ إِيمَانُكُمْ إِنْ كُنْتُمْ
مُؤْمِنِينَ ٥

And when We took pledge from you, and raised high the (Mount of) Tūr above you: "Hold fast to what We have given you, and listen" -- they said, "We have heard and disobeyed." And, on account of their denial, they were soaked with the love of the calf in their hearts. Say: "Evil is that which your faith enjoins upon you, if you are believers." (Verse 93)

In refuting the claim of the Jews to be authentic and true believers, the Holy Qurʾān again recounts an incident which it has already referred to in Verse 63. When the Israelites succeeded, with the help of Allah, in escaping from Egypt and crossing the sea, they came upon a people who used to worship idols. They found this cult so attractive that they requested Sayyidnā Mūsā (Moses عليه السلام) to fabricate a visible and concrete god for them too. When he reprimanded them, they realized their error, and offered repentance. But repentance has many degrees. Since their repentance was not of a very high order, the darkness of their error did not altogether leave their hearts, but continued to grow, and finally manifested itself in the worship of the golden calf. As an act of penance, some of them had to be slain, and others, as some commentators report, were forgiven and not slain. Possibly the repentance of these latter was again of a low order. As for those who had not indulged in the worship of the calf, they did not hate the action of the worshippers of the calf as much as they should have. So, their hearts too carried a trace of the sin of association (shirk). So, either through the feebleness of their repentance or through a want of proper hatred for infidelity, their hearts became indolent in religious matters, so much so that when Allah asked them to take a pledge to follow the injunctions of the Torah steadfastly, Mount Tūr (Sinai) was suspended over their heads to threaten them.

This verse reports the Jews as having replied that they had heard the Command of Allah, but they would not obey, or would not be able to obey. It means that out of sheer fright they said (only with their tongues) that they had heard (that is to say, accepted) the Command of Allah. But there was no real consent in their hearts, and their posture and attitude was such as if they were saying that they would not or could not obey.

Having referred to such example of their perversity and rebellion, the Holy Qur'ān asks the Jews to have a look at themselves and also at their claim to genuine faith. Could a true faith ever inspire men to such deeds? If it is their brand of "faith" which leads them into such grave sins, then it cannot be a true faith. Hence their claim to be true believers is evidently false.

Verses 94 - 95

قُلْ إِنْ كَانَتْ لَكُمْ الدَّارُ الْآخِرَةُ عِنْدَ اللَّهِ خَالِصَةً مِّنْ دُونِ
النَّاسِ فَتَمَتُّوا الْمَوْتَ إِنْ كُنْتُمْ صَادِقِينَ ۝ وَلَنْ يَتَمَنَّوهُ أَبَدًا
بِمَا قَدَّمْتُمْ عَلَيْهِمُ وَاللَّهُ عَلِيمٌ بِالظَّالِمِينَ ۝

Say: "If the Last Abode near Allah is for you purely, short of all people, then make a wish for death, if you are true." But they will never wish for it because of what their hands have sent ahead. And Allah is all-aware of the unjust. (Verses 94 - 95)

The Jews used to claim that the blessings of the other world were specially reserved for them, and were not, meant for any other people. Certain other verses of the Holy Qur'an too refer to such a claim on the part of the Jews, and also of the Christians: قَالُوا لَنْ نَمَسَّ النَّارَ إِلَّا أَيَّامًا مَّعْدُودَةً : "They say: The fire will not touch us but for a few days" (2:80), وَقَالُوا لَنْ يَدْخُلَ الْجَنَّةَ إِلَّا مَن كَانَ هُودًا أَوْ نَصْرَى : "And they say: No one will enter Paradise except he who is a Jew or Christian" (2:111), وَقَالَتِ الْيَهُودُ وَالنَّصْرَى نَحْنُ أَبْنَاءُ اللَّهِ وَأَحِبَّاؤُهُ : "And the Jews and the Christians said: We are the sons of Allah and His close friends" (5:18). What they meant in making such a claim was that since their own faith was the true one, they must certainly attain salvation in the other world -- the repentant and the forgiven being admitted to Paradise from the very beginning, the sinners finding release from the fires of Hell after undergoing a punishment for a few days, and the obedient receiving a welcome like sons and beloved friends.

The use of certain improper expressions like "sons of Allah" notwithstanding, these claims are in themselves quite correct, provided that they pertain to people who follow a true and valid faith. But the Jews (and the Christians as well) were still following a faith which had been abrogated, and was thus no longer valid -- a fact which nullified their claim. So, the Holy Qur'an has refuted the claim again and again in different ways, and the present verse has adopted a special mode. The habitual method of settling a dispute is to have a discussion and let both the parties present their own arguments. Since the Jews knew they could not win, they fought shy of this normal way. So, the Holy Qur'an suggests an abnormal method, which would not call for much knowledge or understanding, but only put a little strain on the tongue. The proposed trial consists in this -- if the Jews are so sure of the blessings of the other world being reserved for themselves, they should declare that they wish to die, and this declaration would establish them as being genuine in their faith; but if they refuse to accept the challenge, it would show that they were liars. The Holy Qur'an also predicts that they would never have the courage to go through the trial.

In view of their hostility to the Holy Prophet ﷺ, one could expect them to take up such a simple challenge very zealously. But they knew very well in their heart of hearts that the Holy Prophet ﷺ and the Muslims stood for the truth, while they themselves were the champions of falsehood, and were, in actual fact, infidels. So, they refused to go through the trial, for they were struck with awe, and feared that as soon as they had expressed the wish to die, death would come over them, and they would be sent to Hell. This recalcitrance is, thus, in itself an evidence of the truth of Islam.

Here we must note that the trial was proposed not for all the Jews of all the ages, but specially for those who were the contemporaries of the Holy Prophet ﷺ, and who used to deny him out of sheer envy and malice, in spite of having recognized that he was a genuine prophet.

Nor should one raise the doubt here that they had perhaps accepted the challenge, and "wished" for death in their hearts, as the Holy Qur'an seems to ask. For one, the Holy Qur'an itself reports the prediction that they would never "wish for it." Secondly, if they could wish for death in their hearts, they must have declared it orally too, for their victory lay in just such a declaration, and this was a very easy way of refuting the Holy Prophet ﷺ. But they did not avail themselves of this opportunity.

Nor can one suppose that they did make an oral declaration, for the fact has not been reported, and thus has not come down to us. Such a supposition would be wrong, because the opponents of Islam have always outnumbered its adherents, and if such a thing had happened, they must have been trumpeting it aloud to show to the world that the Jews had successfully passed the test proposed by the Holy Qur'an itself.

Verse 96

وَلَتَجِدَنَّهُمْ أَحْرَصَ النَّاسِ عَلَى حَيَوةٍ وَمِنَ الَّذِينَ أَشْرَكُوا
يَوَدُّ أَحَدُهُمْ أَنْ يُعَمَّرَ أَلْفَ سَنَةٍ وَمَا هُوَ بِمُخْرَجِهِ مِنَ الْعَذَابِ أَنَّ
يُعَمَّرَ ۚ وَاللَّهُ بَصِيرٌ بِمَا يَعْمَلُونَ ۝

And you shall surely find them, of men, the most avid for life -- even more than the polytheists. Of them, one would love to be aged a thousand years. But it will not remove him from punishment to be so aged. And Allah is watchful of what they do. (Verse 96)

This verse shows the basic weakness of the Jews which did not allow them to accept the challenge proposed in Verse 94, and thus exposes the hollowness of their claim to the blessings of the other world being reserved for them. The Holy Qur'an puts a special emphasis on the fact that the Jews loved physical life much more than did the Arab polytheists. Such an inclination should not have been surprising on the part of the latter, for, after all, they did not believe in the other world, and physical life was the be-all and end-all for them. But the Jews acknowledged the existence of the other world, and even had the illusion that they alone deserved its joys, and yet it was they who, above all others, wished to live in this world as long as possible. This very desire shows how baseless their pretention was, and how they themselves knew that they would have to face the fires of Hell in the other world, and that physical life was, as long as it lasted, a kind of protection against their final fate.

Verse 97 - 98

قُلْ مَنْ كَانَ عَدُوًّا لِجِبْرِيلَ فَإِنَّهُ نَزَّلَهُ عَلَى قَلْبِكَ بِإِذْنِ اللَّهِ
مُصَدِّقًا لِمَا بَيْنَ يَدَيْهِ وَهُدًى وَبُشْرَى لِلْمُؤْمِنِينَ ۝ مَنْ كَانَ
عَدُوًّا لِلَّهِ وَمَلَائِكَتِهِ وَرُسُلِهِ وَجِبْرِيلَ وَمِيكَالَ فَإِنَّ اللَّهَ عَدُوٌّ
لِلْكَافِرِينَ ۝

Say, whoever be an enemy to Jibrā'il (Gabriel) -- it is he who has brought it down upon your heart by the permission of Allah, confirming what has been before it, and a guidance and good tidings to the believers. Whoever be an enemy to Allah, His angels, and His messengers, and to Jibrā'il and Mikā'il, surely Allah is enemy to the disbelievers. (Verses 97 - 98)

The perversity of the Jews was very fertile, and gave them ever-new excuses for denying the Holy Prophet ﷺ. When they learnt that it was Archangel Jibrā'il (Gabriel عليه السلام) who brought the Glorious Qur'an to the Holy Prophet ﷺ, they said that the Archangel was their enemy, as it was through him that rigorous commandments or catastrophic punishments had always descended on them, and that for this reason they would not accept a Book which had been revealed through his agency. They also added that they could have accepted the Holy Qur'an, if the Archangel Mikā'il (Michael عليه السلام) had brought it down, for he is connected with rain and with divine mercy.

In refuting this argument, the Holy Qur'an points out that Jibrā'il عليه السلام is only a messenger, and has, acting only as a messenger, brought down the Holy Qur'an under a divine command to the Holy Prophet ﷺ. So, why should the Jews be so particular about the messenger, and not look at the Book itself? As for the Book, it confirms the earlier Books of Allah, provides guidance to men, and gives good tidings to the believers. This being what the Divine Books are meant for, the Holy Qur'an is evidently enough a Divine Book, and must, as such be obeyed. To deny it on account of one's hostility to Jibrā'il عليه السلام is sheer stupidity or outright perversity. Now, as for the attitude of the Jews towards Jibrā'il عليه السلام, the Holy Qur'an declares that to be hostile to the angels (including Jibrā'il and Mikā'il عليهم السلام) or to the prophets is tantamount to being hostile to Allah Himself. Verse 98 puts down the enemies of angels and prophets as infidels (Kāfirin) in saying that Allah is the enemy of the infidels. In other words, those who deny or oppose the angels and the prophets will have their due punishment in the other world.

Maulana Ashraf 'Alī Thānavī has, in his "Bayān al-Qur'an", warned against the possibility of very grave error that may arise with regard to the statement in Verse 97 that the Archangel Jibrā'il (Gabriel عليه السلام) has "brought down the Book on the heart" of the Holy Prophet ﷺ. The error would lie in drawing from this phrase the conclusion that Allah has not revealed the words of the Holy Qur'an but only the meanings. Such a supposition is quite baseless, because many verses of the Holy Qur'an itself mention the Arabic language as the vehicle of revelation in the case of this particular Book of Allah. That should leave no room for any doubt. Moreover, the "heart" perceives words as much as it does meanings; in fact, the perceiving agent is the "heart", while the ears etc. are only its instruments. Specially, in the state of revelation, the external organs of the senses become dormant, and the heart receives even the words directly without the intervention of the ears. Although we cannot understand the nature of revelation properly, yet, choosing a mundane analogy, one can say that while dreaming in our sleep we do hear words and remember them afterwards, in spite of our external sense of hearing having been suspended while we dreamt. This example should make it easy to see that the revelation of meanings to the heart does in no way preclude the revelation of words as well. Anyhow, it is a sin - and an intellectual dishonesty - to rely on one's own conjectures in defiance of a clear and definite statement in the Holy Qur'an.

Verse 99

وَلَقَدْ أَنْزَلْنَا إِلَيْكَ آيَاتٍ بَيِّنَاتٍ وَمَا يَكْفُرُ بِهَا إِلَّا الْفَاسِقُونَ ٥

And certainly We have revealed to you clear signs. And no one denies them except the sinful. (Verse 99)

In denying the Holy Prophet ﷺ, the Jews used to say that no clear evidence or sign of his prophethood had been revealed to him such as they could recognize and accept. In reply to this the Holy Qur'an says that Allah has revealed a number of very clear signs and evidences of his prophethood which even they know and understand very well. So, their denial is not based on a lack of recognition or knowledge, but on their habitual disobedience, for, as a general rule, no one denies such evidence except those who are wilful and stubborn in their disobedience.

Verse 100

أَوْ كَلَّمَا عَلَيْهِمْ عَاهِدًا تَبَيَّنَ مِنْهُمْ بَلْ أَكْثَرُهُمْ لَا يُؤْمِنُونَ ٥

Would it always be that every time they enter into a pact, a group from among them should throw it aside?

In fact, most of them do not believe. (Verse 100)

Allah had, as the Torah itself reports, made the Jews take the pledge that they would have faith in the Holy Prophet ﷺ when he appeared. On being reminded of it, the Jews flatly denied even having taken such a pledge. Commenting on this effrontery, the Holy Qur'an says that this is not the only instance of such a conduct on their part, for the Jews have, in fact, never fulfilled even those pledges which they acknowledge, and one group or another from among them has always been breaking the compacts they have entered into, specially with regard to religious matters. It can even be said that most of those who have been guilty of such gross violations, did not at all believe in the compacts which they made with Allah. Going against a pledge is only a sin and transgression, but having no faith in the pledge which one gives to Allah is outright infidelity.

The Holy Qur'an specifically speaks of one group or another breaking the pledge, and not of all the Jews. For there were some among them who did fulfil the pledges, so much so that many Jews finally accepted Sayyidnā Muḥammad ﷺ as a true prophet, and joined the ranks of the Muslims.

Verse 101

وَلَمَّا جَاءَهُمْ رَسُولٌ مِّنْ عِندِ اللَّهِ مُصَدِّقٌ لِّمَا مَعَهُمْ نَبَذَ فَرِيقٌ مِّنَ الَّذِينَ أُوتُوا الْكِتَابَ كِتَابَ اللَّهِ وَرَاءَ ظُهُورِهِمْ كَانَهُمْ لَا يَعْلَمُونَ ٥

And when came to them a messenger from Allah, confirming what was already with them, some from among the people of the Book threw away the Book of Allah behind their backs, as if they did not know.
(Verse 101)

The previous verse had told us how the breaking of pledges and disobedience had become a regular habit with the Jews. The present verse gives us the latest instance, which is the most relevant to the context.

The Torah had already given the Jews the good tidings of the coming of the Holy Prophet ﷺ. When he actually came with all signs which the Torah had indicated, thus confirming the Sacred Book of the Jews, a large number of them refused to accept him as a prophet. In doing this, they were, in fact, denying the Torah itself, and behaving as if they know nothing of the prophecy, or even the Torah being a Book of Allah. Thus, they were being guilty of infidelity (Kufr) even in terms of the Torah itself.

Verses 102 - 103

And they followed what the devils used to recite in the reign of Sulaymān (Solomon) -- it was not Sulaymān who became an infidel, but the devils did become infidels, teaching people magic, and what had been sent down to the two angels, Hārūt and Mārūt, in Babylon. And these two did not teach anyone without having said, "We are nothing but a trial, so do not go infidel." Then, they used to learn from them that with which they could separate man from his wife. But they were not to bring harm through it to anyone, without the will of Allah. And they used to learn what harmed them and did no good to them. And they certainly knew that he who buys it has no share in the Hereafter. And, indeed, vile is the thing for which they sold themselves away. Only if they knew! And had they accepted the faith, and been God-fearing, the reward from Allah would have always been far better. Only if they knew! (Verses 102 - 103)

In connection with these two verses, some commentators have reported certain Judaic traditions, which have given rise to a number of doubts, especially in the minds of Muslims with a Western orientation. Maulanā Ashraf 'Alī Thānavī has provided very simple and clear solutions to these exegetical problems, and we shall reproduce them here:-

(1) The Jews were impertinent and senseless enough to attribute magic and sorcery to a prophet -- namely, Sayyidnā Sulaymān (Solomon عليه السلام). So, in saying that they used to learn the black arts of the devils (Shayātīn), the Holy Qur'ān takes care to deny, as a parenthesis, such a vile allegation against Sayyidna Sulaymān عليه السلام.

(2) These verses condemn the Jews for indulging in black magic. In connection with the verses, some commentators have reported a long and well-known story about a woman called Zuhrah, which is not based on any authentic Islamic tradition. Those scholars who have found the story to be infringing the regulations of the Shari'ah, have rejected it as mere fiction; but those who believe that it can be interpreted so as to come in line with the Shari'ah, have not dismissed it totally. For the moment we are not concerned with the question whether the story is true or false. But what we would like to insist upon is the fact that a proper understanding does in no way depend on this story.

(3) The Jews knew very well that their indulgence in black magic was not only a sin, but also involved infidelity (Kufr). They could also see that such activities would do them no good even in this world, for their sorcery could not harm anyone except when Allah willed it so. Thus their practice went against their knowledge, and they made no use of their understanding to see this discrepancy. That is why the Holy Qur'ān, to begin with, states that they "knew", and then goes on to negate this 'knowledge' by saying, "Only if they knew!" For, if one does neither act upon what one knows nor tries to understand it properly, one's knowledge is no better than ignorance.

(4) There was a time when black magic had grown very popular in the world, particularly in Babylon. Seeing its astonishing efficacy, ignorant people began to confuse its effects with the miracles of prophets, and to suppose that the two were identical in nature. Some even looked upon magicians as being holy men, and worthy of being obeyed; still others actually started learning and practising black magic as if it were a good deed bearing a divine sanction.²⁵

In short, this extraordinary veneration for magic and magicians had become a potent source of misguidance. In order to eradicate this misunderstanding, Allah sent down to Babylon two angels, Hārūt and Mārūt, for informing the people as to the true nature of magic and as to its different forms, so that they should distinguish it from the miracles of prophets, and keep away from obeying magicians and practising magic themselves. Just as the prophethood of prophets is divinely confirmed through miracles, signs and rational or other arguments, in the same way the angelical nature of Hārūt and Mārūt was confirmed on the basis of different signs and arguments, so that people should listen attentively to them and follow their guidance.

This particular function was not assigned to the prophets for two reasons. Firstly, the need of the hour was to establish a distinction between the prophets and the magicians, and, the prophets being in a way a party to the dispute, it was proper that a third party should be the arbitrator. Secondly, the necessary distinction between the two could not, in a normal course, be defined without citing and reporting the verbal formulas employed in magic. Merely to report heretical speech is not in itself a heresy - this is a logical and rational principle, and the Shari'ah too accepts it. So, the prophets could have been allowed to cite these formulas; but, they being a manifestation of divine guidance, Allah did not ask them to perform such a function, and chose two angels for the purpose. For, Allah's commandments are of two kinds -- those pertaining to Takwīn (creation and the cosmic order), and those pertaining to Tashrī' (legislation) -, and it is quite possible that sometimes the two may not seem to accord with each other. The order of creation is made up of good and evil both, and it is the angels through whom divine commandments are enforced in this sphere. So, the angels are made to do things which, in the perspective of the cosmic order, always lead to general good, but which, in so far as they necessarily involve some kind of partial disorder, are seen to be evil -- for example, the growth and upkeep of a human tyrant, or of a harmful beast, each of which is right in the context of the order of creation, but wrong from the point of view of the order of legislation. On the other hand, the prophets are entrusted only with the functions of the legislative order, which are, in their general as well as particular applications, nothing but good.

25. Just as there has been a sudden outburst of enthusiasm for the occult sciences in the West since the middle of the sixties in this century, particularly in America where even the universities have been inundated by it.

Although, in view of the ultimate purpose, this reporting of the formulas of magic too was related to the legislative order, yet there was probability -- which even materialized -- that a reporting of such formulas could give an incentive to the practice of black magic. So, Allah preferred not to make the prophets even an indirect means of such reprehensible activities. All the same, the prophets too were made to serve the main purpose by announcing the basic regulations of the Shari'ah with regard to magic, though not the details pertaining to the minor rules derived from them, for that could have possibly given rise to temptation. We shall explain it through an analogy. The prophets have, for example, told us that it is forbidden to accept a bribe, and have also explained the nature of bribery, but have not given us the details as to how a bribe is given or taken, for a delineation of such minute details would have served only to teach men the different methods of giving or taking a bribe. Or, take an example from different branches of magic. If one utters a certain formula, one would, on getting up from the bed in the morning, find money under his pillow or in his pocket. The Shari'ah makes it quite clear that such a practice is not, in principle, legitimate, but does not specify what that formula is.

In short, the two angels came down to Babylon, and started the work assigned to them -- that is to say, they used to explain the basic principles of magic, its different forms and the specific formulas, and then used to dissuade the people from getting themselves involved in these activities or with the magicians. Their work was exactly like that of a scholar who, finding that illiterate people sometime fall into uttering heretical words or phrases on account of their ignorance, should collect in his speeches or writings all such phrases that have gained currency, and inform them as to what they must carefully avoid.

Now, all sorts of people started coming to the angels for seeking information about the nature and the specific formulas of a magic lest ignorance should lead them into error, in the matter of doctrines or that of deeds. In order to provide the correct teaching on this subject and to protect the people from error, the angels were scrupulous enough to make it a point to warn them of possible dangers in giving them the information. They insisted on making it quite clear that in allowing them to provide this kind of information to the people in general, Allah intended to put His servants through a trial, for He would see who uses this knowledge for protecting his Īmān (faith) by recognizing evil and avoiding it, and who falls into misguidance by adopting evil that he has come to recognize as evil -- a choice which can easily lead one into Kufr (infidelity) in the matter of deeds or in that of doctrines. The angels repeatedly advised them to seek this dangerous information only with a good intent and to remain steadfast in this good intent, and not to misuse the knowledge so as to earn perpetual damnation.

The angels could not be more honest and forthright. So, they explained the basic principles of magic and even the subsidiary details to all those who were ready to take the pledge to remain steadfast in their faith. Of course, if anyone broke the pledge and fell into transgression or infidelity, it was his own business, and the angels could not be held responsible for it. Some were true to their promise, while many did not fulfil the pledge, and made their knowledge of magic a means of doing harm to people -- this in itself is sin and transgression, while some modes of magic actually involve infidelity (Kufr). Thus, through a misuse of their knowledge of magic, some turned into sinners and others into infidels.

Let us repeat that the angels had taught magic for the purpose of reforming the people and helping them to keep to the straight path, but those who misused this teaching did so out of their own perversity. An example would make the situation still more clear. Let us suppose that a man goes to a master of the Islamic sciences, who is an expert in the traditional branches of learning and in philosophy as well, and who also acts upon his knowledge, and this man requests the master to teach him philosophy, ancient or modern, so that he may protect himself against the doubts raised by the philosophers with regard to Islamic doctrines, and may also be able to give a satisfactory reply to those who raise such doubts. Apprehending that he might turn out to be insincere, and might finally bring the knowledge of philosophy to the aid of false and anti-Islamic ideas, the master warns him against such an eventuality, and the man takes a pledge that he would not misuse his knowledge. Having satisfied himself, the master gives him a thorough training in philosophy. But the man, contrary to his promise, begins to accept the anti-Islamic and false theorizing of philosophers as the truth. Obviously, in such a case, the teacher can in no way be held responsible for the way the pupil behaves. Similarly, there can be no room for doubting the integrity of these two angels.

Although Allah Himself knows how things were, yet one can suppose that once the angels had done the work assigned to them, they must have been recalled to the Heavens. (Bayān al-Qurʾān)

What is Magic ? Definition and effects

Since the study of magic has been enjoying a weird currency in the Western countries since 1968, and has sometimes been accepted as a part of academic research, we had better consider the subject at some length from the Islamic point of view. According to the authoritative Arabic dictionary "Al-Qāmūs", the word Sihr (Magic) signifies an effect the cause of which is not apparent, whether the cause may actually lie in something which possesses a luminous quality (as the effect of certain phrases), or in things with an extra-sensory reality (as the effect produced by jinns and devils), or in the power of imagination (as the effect of hypnotism), or in things which are sensory yet hidden (as a magnet drawing to itself a piece of iron, when the magnet is concealed from the onlookers; or the effect of drugs, when they have been furtively administered; or the influence of stars and planets). The causes at work being numerous, the forms of magic too are numerous.

Magic and Charms

In everyday language, magic signifies those practices which involve the co-operation of jinns and devils, or the exercise of the power of imagination, or the use of certain words or phrases. It is a rationally established proposition, accepted by ancient philosophers and by some of the modern ones as well, and equally confirmed by observation and experiment, that words and phrases in themselves possess a certain efficacy, and that when certain letters, words or phrases are recited or written down for a specified number of times, they produce certain specific results. Similar results are obtained by employing human hair or nails or the clothes worn by the person concerned, etc. - a practice which is usually described as the preparation of "Charms". All such things are commonly known as magic.

Sihr* or Magic: The Islamic view

But in the terminology of the Holy Qur'ān and the Ḥadīth, Sihr (magic) refers to all those usual happenings which have been brought about with the active help of the devils (Shayātīn), won over through certain practices likely to please them. There are several ways of pleasing the devils. Sometimes one sings the praises of the devils, and sometimes recites formulas of a heretical nature which deny Allah or associate others with Him. The worship of stars and planets too gladdens their heart, as do certain evil deeds - for example, preparing a charm with the blood of a person killed unlawfully, or refusing to adopt the prescribed modes of purifying one's body, or living constantly and deliberately in a state of uncleanness and impurity. Just as the aid of the angels can be won only through those modes of speech and action which they like (for example, remembrance of Allah, fear of Him and obedience to His commandments, cleanliness and purity, avoidance of all kinds of dirtiness, physical or otherwise, and good deeds in general), similarly the co-operation of the devils can be obtained through those modes of speech and action which are pleasant to them. That is why only those are successful in the practice of black magic who are habitually unclean and impure, avoid required purification and remembrance of Allah, and are given to all kinds of evil deeds - for example, it is usually during the period of menstruation that women become effective in the practice of black magic. So much for black magic or sorcery in the exact sense of the term. As for sleights of hand, mesmerism, hypnotism, or the tricks of jugglers, they are sometimes described as magic only by an extension of the meaning of the word, or metaphorically. (Rūh al-Ma'ānī)

Kinds of Magic

In his "Mufradāt al-Qur'ān", Imām Rāghib al-Isfahānī says that there are several kinds of magic. Firstly, there are sleights of hand, like those of jugglers, which deceive the eyes of the onlookers, but have no further substance. Then, there are ways of influencing the imagination of others through the concentration of one's own powers of thought so that they begin to see or feel things which do not really exist as happens in mesmerism or hypnotism. Such a result is sometimes obtained with the help of the devils (Shayātīn) too. In speaking of the magicians of the Pharaoh, the Holy Qur'ān says: سَحَرُوا عَيْنَ النَّاسِ: "They cast a spell on the eyes of the people" (7:116). Or, in another place: يُجَيَّلُ: "Through their magic Moses came to think that they (ropes turned into serpents) were running about" (20:66). Obviously, this piece of magic had to do with influencing of the imagination. The second of these verses employs a verb which has the same root as the noun Khayāl (thought), and hence clearly states that the ropes and the wands cast down by the magicians had neither turned serpents nor made any movement, but the imagination of Sayyidnā Mūsā (Moses عليه السلام) had been affected so as to see them running about in the shape of serpents. The Holy Qur'ān also indicates the other way of influencing men's imaginations which involves the help of the devils (Shayātīn):

هَلْ أَنْتُمْ عَلَىٰ مَنْ نَزَّلَ الشَّيْطَانُ تَنَزَّلُ عَلَىٰ كُلِّ أَفَّاكٍ أَثِيمٍ

Shall I tell you on whom the devils descend? They descend on all those who are slanderers and sinners." (26:222)

Still another kind of magic is that which can change the very nature of a thing - for example, turning a man into a beast or into a stone. Scholars like Imām Rāghib al-Isfahānī and Abū Bakr al-Jaṣṣāṣ deny that magic can totally change the nature of a thing, but confine the efficacy of magic only to influencing the imagination and to deceiving the eyes of the onlookers. This is also what the Mu'tazilah thought of the matter. But most of the scholars hold that neither the Shari'ah nor any rational argument forbids the possibility of trans-substantiation or the changing of one thing into another, like a living body turning into a stone. As for the well-known principle of the classical philosophers that the change of the "essences" (Haqā'iq) is not possible, it concerns the "essences" of the three categories - the Impossible, the Possible and the Necessary --, for, rationally speaking, it just cannot be that something impossible should become possible, or that something possible should become impossible. And as to the Holy Qur'an putting down the magic of the Egyptian sorcerers as only an impact on the imagination, it does not necessarily mean that all the forms of magic should be no more than an influencing of the imagination. Moreover, certain scholars have seen an argument in favour of the possibility of trans-substantiation through magic in a saying of Ka'b al-Ahbār, reported by Imām Mālik in his Muwatta' on the authority of Qa'qa' ibn Hakim: "Were it not for these phrases which I recite regularly, the Jews would have changed me into a donkey." "A donkey" is, no doubt, a usual metaphor for "a fool." But it is not proper to turn away, unnecessarily, from the literal meaning to a metaphorical one. So, the sentence means just what it says - that if the recitation of the phrases had not protected him, the Jewish sorcerers would have changed him into a donkey. The saying, thus, establishes two things. Firstly, it is possible to change a man into a donkey; secondly, the phrases he used to recite had the property of making the magic of the sorcerers lose its efficacy. On being asked what these phrases were, the scholar Ka'b al-Ahbār taught his listeners the following words of prayer:

اعوذ بالله العظيم الذى ليس بشئ اعظم منه وبكلمات الله التامات التى
لا يجاوزهن بر ولا فاجر وباسماء الله الحسنى كلها ما علمت منها وما لم
اعلم من شراً خلق وبره وذره . (اخرجه فى الموطأ باب التعوذ عند النوم)

"I seek the protection of Allah the Great, greater than whom there is none; and I seek the protection of the perfect words of Allah which no man, virtuous or wicked, can even transcend; and I seek the protection of all the Beautiful Names of Allah, those of them which I know and those which I do not know, from the evil of everything which Allah has created, to which He has given existence, and which He has spread (over the earth or the universe)."

To sum up, all the three forms of magic are possible, and can manifest themselves in actual fact.

Miracles

Now, let us turn to another important aspect of the question. Through prophets and saints certain events come into manifestation which normally and habitually never happen, and are hence designated as Kharq al-'Ādah (contrary to the habitual). The Islamic term for the miracles of prophets is Mu'jizāt, and for those of saints, Karāmat. The effects produced by such miracles are in appearance sometimes similar to those produced by magic. This external resemblance leads some ignorant people to confuse the one with the other, and they begin to have a reverence for magicians which is totally out of place. So, one must understand the difference between the two clearly.²⁶

26. Editorial Note on معجزه Mu'jizah or Miracle: For all the unusual events and unprecedented happenings the English language has but one word, 'Miracle' which makes it impossible for the reader in that language to mark the subtle difference in various forms of miracles. Briefly, therefore, the different forms of miracles with their distinct objections are explained here. It is hoped that this will help the readers have a clearer conception of Mu'jizah.

These terms are used in Arabic language to define and differentiate the unprecedented happenings and here each of them is explained, so as to clearly differentiate them. Qualitatively, there is, apparently no difference in all of them.

Mu'jizah is the unusual event which occurs at the hands of a prophet. It is purely an act of Allah. A prophet's own volition has no part in the working of it. For those who witness a Mu'jizah it is compulsory to believe in it.

Karāmah (كرامة) -- another mode of unusual happenings -- is also an act of Allah; it appears at the hands of a Man of Allah (رَبِّهِ). The basic difference in Mu'jizah and Karāmah is that one who performs Mu'jizah, addresses himself as a prophet, a Man of Allah has no such claim. In both Mu'jizah and Karāmah the usual cause and effect link is absent. Things happen but without any cause; and there is usually a total transformation of the nature and behaviour of objects in Mu'jizah and Karāmah. What is required is a generalized belief in them. Allah chooses whoever He wills for Mu'jizah and Karāmah. No degree of stringent discipline can give the power to make the unusual happen.

The Difference between Miracle and Magic

The miracles of prophets and saints are different from magic, firstly, in their respective natures, and, secondly, with regard to the signs and indications attendant upon each. As for the difference in their natures, it lies in the fact that the results produced through magic depend on the law of causality as much as do the ordinary and usual events in the physical world, the only distinction being that the causes are in the latter case quite clear or easily observable, while in the former they are different for a common man to detect. Where the causes are evident, the effects are immediately referred back to them, and the events thus produced are not considered to be astonishing, but where the causes are hidden or obscure, the events produced by them arouse wonder and amazement, and those who are ignorant of the causes readily come to believe that the things have happened in contravention of the habitual laws of the physical universe.²⁷ What these people do not realize is that such happenings are as much due to certain causes as the habitual events - the cause in the case of extraordinary happenings often being the activity of a jinn or a devil (Shayṭān). For example, a letter suddenly falls in front of a man, and on reading it he finds that the letter has been written just this day and is coming from a distance of ten thousand miles. Now, the onlookers would call it a "supernatural" event, for they do not know that Allah has given the power of doing such things to jinns and devils. Once one

Irhaş (ارهاص) is also a kind of Karāmah. It heralds the coming of a prophet. It usually occurs at the hands of the one who is closely related to the prophet: the unprecedented happenings in the life of Mariam, mother of prophet 'Isā عليه السلام or the various unusual events that began occurring to and around Aminah -- the blessed mother of our Holy Prophet صلى الله عليه وسلم; for instance, she had no pangs of birth, towards the close of the birth period she used to hear stranger voices greeting her, although she saw no one. It is compulsory to believe in such events of Irhaş as have been mentioned in the Qur'ān and believe in a general manner, that Irhaş is usually associated with the coming of a prophet.

27. In the West, they describe such events as being "supernatural", although the Latin word Natura, which is the equivalent of the Greek word Phusis, does, at least in its original sense, cover all that has been created, whether it lies in the domain studied by empirical science or beyond it.

comes to understand the means through which things of this nature take place, one would no longer see them as "supernatural", or even as being contrary to "habit". In short, all the results obtained through magical practices are, in fact, due to the operation of physical causes, but in the eyes of common people they acquire the illusory appearance of "supernatural" events, simply because the operative causes are hidden from them.

On the other hand, miracles happen directly under divine command without the intervention of physical causes. For example, the Holy Qur'an tells us how the tyrant Namrūd (Nimrod) threw Sayyidnā Ibrāhīm (Abraham عليه السلام) into a blazing fire, and how Allah commanded the fire to grow cold for him, but not so cold as to do him harm -- and the fire obeyed the command, and, instead of scorching him, provided a place of safety. This was a direct divine act, and hence a miracle. Now, we sometimes hear of men who, having applied certain chemicals to their body, can enter a fire without being scorched. This is not a miracle, for the operative cause is of a physical nature - that is, the chemicals. These chemicals are not known to people in general, and they are deluded into believing such a performance to be a "supernatural" event going beyond the realm of "the habitual". The Holy Qur'an itself leaves no doubt as to a miracle being directly an act of Allah Himself. In the Battle of Badr, the Holy Prophet ﷺ took up a handful of pebbles, and threw them at the army of the infidels, which blinded their eyes. Referring to this miracle, the Holy Qur'an says: وَمَا رَبِّكَ إِذْ رَمَيْتَ وَلَكِنَّ اللَّهَ رَمَى: "When you threw (the pebbles), it was not you who threw, but Allah who threw (them)" (8:17). The statement is explicit enough, and means that the miraculous result produced by a handful of pebbles was not the work of the Holy Prophet ﷺ, but the act of Allah Himself.

Miracle and Magic: How to distinguish between them?

Having explained the difference between the nature of a miracle and that of magic, we must now turn to another important question -- the results produced by each of them being in appearance the same, how is the common man to know the difference between the two? In fact, Allah has given to each certain characteristic features which can help the common man to distinguish miracles from magic. Firstly, miracles are manifested through those whom everyone knows to be clean in body, pure in deeds and God-fearing. On the contrary, magic shows its effectiveness through those who are unclean in body, dirty in deeds, shunning the worship of Allah and His remembrance. This is a distinction which everyone can observe with his own eyes. Secondly, Allah has so ordained things that if a man pretends to be a prophet and claims to perform miracles, and yet tries to practise magic, his magic is never effective, but he can be effective in magic so long as he does not lay a claim to prophethood.

Magic and Prophets

As to the question whether magic can have an effect on prophets, we shall say that it can. As we have explained above, magic operates through physical causes, and prophets are not immune to the influence of physical causes. Just as they feel the effects of hunger and thirst, fall ill and get healed through the operation of apparent physical causes, in the same way they can be affected by the hidden operations of magic, which are no less physical. Let us add that being affected by magic does in no way go against the dignity of the station of prophethood -- no more than would thirst or hunger. Authentic aḥādīth report that the Holy Prophet ﷺ was affected by the magic spell cast by the Jews, that he came to know of it through revelation, and that he took certain measures to free himself of its effects. The Holy Qur'ān too tells us how Sayyidnā Mūsā (Moses عليه السلام) experienced the effects of magic when the sorcerers cast a spell on his eyes, and the ropes and the sticks thrown by them began to look like running serpents, so that he was really frightened (20:66,67).

Injunctions of the Shari'ah with regard to Magic

As we have already said, Sihr (magic), in the terminology of the Holy Qur'ān and the Ḥadīth, refers only to those practices in which one seeks the help of jinns and devils (Shayāṭin) by gaining their pleasure through the adoption of certain phrases or actions that involve infidelity (Kufr) and association (Shirk) or sin and transgression, and thus brings about certain extraordinary and unusual events. The magic of Babylon, mentioned in the Holy Qur'ān, was just this, and it is this form of magic which it condemns as infidelity or Kufr (Jaṣṣāṣ). According to Abu Mansur, the most valid and correct view in this respect is that each and every form of magic does not, unconditionally and absolutely, constitute infidelity, but only that form which employs actions or speech contrary to the tenets of faith (ʿĪmān). (Rūh al-Maʿānī)

As everyone knows, the Holy Qurʾān and the Ḥadīth repeatedly enjoin upon the Muslims to consider the Shayāṭīn as one's enemies, to hate them and to curse them. Seeking to please them and to win their friendship, in contravention of such clear commandments, is in itself a sin. Moreover, they are pleased only when one indulges in Kufr (infidelity) or Shirk (association), and thus forfeits one's faith (ʿĪmān) altogether, or at least in disobedience and transgression, displeasing Allah and His angels by wallowing in dirt and impurity -- which becomes an additional sin. And if one makes use of magic for doing some harm to a human being unlawfully, it is still one more sin.
